Mr. GILLETT. There is a Board of Efficiency which has the right to make changes now, but it has never been done. The President has not availed himself of that board.

Mr. WEBB. The President could not; the board has made no report.

Mr. GILLETT. He could make them report.

Mr. WEBB. The president of the board says that they have not the time to make the report; they are tied down by their present occupations and duties since the war began.

Mr. GILLETT. But they do not have to do it all at once.

Mr. WEBB. Here is what the President desires. He has been criticized for not looking far enough beyond, far enough into the future. I will ask my friend from Massachusetts if he indorses the war-cabinet bill?

Mr. GILLETT. I indorse the war-munitions measure.

Mr. WEBB. Does he indorse the war-cabinet bill?

Mr. GILLETT. The war-cabinet measure never came here; that simply came up as this bill did, because of the great outburst of criticism of the deficiencies of the department.

Mr. WEBB. The President was criticized from some sources because he was not looking ahead far enough, and here are 450,000 employees who ought to be coordinated, solidified, and unified, as other Government forces ought to be coordinated, united, and unified, and it is impossible for one man to tell now just what is needed. But the President would like to have the power, so that in the progress of the war, as the days go by, if he does discover where more efficient and better cooperation between particular bureaus can be made, he would like to have the power to do that instantly and not be compelled to come to Congress and go through unnecessary delays in order to get that power.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. I yield for a question.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Has not the President all of these powers now?

Mr. WEBB. And by the way, I want to say that I see my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania, who is now addressing his question to me, voted also to give the President power to fix rates, and I commend him for that vote.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I stood with the President upon that; but that does not answer my question. The gentleman is a good lawyer and he ought to be able to answer it. Has not the President these powers now?

Mr. WEBB. I say this, that one of the most distinguished men in America, and he comes from the gentleman's State, a man who was Secretary of State and who is now a United States Senator, says that the President has the power; but if the President had undertaken to exercise the power that we propose to give him in this bill there would have been universal criticism of him, there would have been men who would have said, as they said of Abraham Lincoln, that he is an autocrat and a dictator. They would have criticized him as they did Abraham Lincoln, if the President had undertaken to do the things that we propose to give him power to do under this bill. He would have been criticized and called an autocrat and a dictator. As I said yesterday, I can not too highly commend the Chief Executive of this Nation in a great crisis like this for coming to Congress and asking us, to set the thing at rest forever, to give him the power to do these things which everyone will admit ought to be done in the progress of the war and in the administration of the Government. [Applause.]

Mr. GILLETT. Does not the gentleman think that in the course of a year of war the administration might have found one or two changes that ought to be made, and have suggested them to Congress? Not one has been suggested.

Mr. WEBB. In the course of a year my friend knows that this country has come from nothing to the greatest armed power in the world during the same length of time, and the President has been busy and all of the departments have been busy, and he has not had time to go into the bureaus and the executive departments and coordinate them.

Mr. GILLETT. Then how is he going to have time to do it "all of a sudden" now?

Mr. WEBB. If you give him this power, I do not know whether he can do it or not. I fear that he can not. I doubt very much that the President can give much of his valuable time to this business, because it is small business compared to the great powers that we have given him heretofore, and I can not understand why gentlemen can afford to swallow camels and strain at gnats like this bill. Gentlemen see bears in every bush. After they have voted for war, and to turn over to the President the country's entire resources and the boys of the country, they profess to fear that he may turn over some of the functions of the Government to a bootblack. You may as well argue that he might order the surrender of the American boys in France to Von Hindenburg, but there is no man who would dare in his heart to intimate that he would do it. We have trusted him in big things, and I can not understand why this furore and fuss is made about trusting him in a purely administrative matter, which affects nothing but a few employees of the Government and some executive functions.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman, of course, contends, and I agree, that this does not carry power to create new agencies. I would like to ask the gentleman if he can inform the House under what authority or power the President did create the agency known as the Committee on Public Information? There is one instance where he has created an agency without specific power from Congress, and set aside money for its use. He has that money, and he can create numerous agencies, all beyond the scope of this bill. Is not that so?

Mr. WEBB. Possibly so, if he uses the $100,000,000 which Congress trusted him with.

Mr. WALSH. One further question. If he does create these new agencies out of the emergency appropriation funds, is there anything in this bill to prevent him from transferring the powers or agencies created by Congress to these newly created agencies, created without the authority of Congress?

Mr. WEBB. Yes; because this bill is confined to these bureaus and executive branches of the Government now established by law and not by the act of one man—the latter he absolutely controls.

Mr. WALSH. Then, the gentleman admits that there are agencies not established by law, such as the Committee on Public Information?

Mr. WEBB. If you regard the Publicity Bureau as such, why, yes. Mr. Speaker, I said a moment ago there is no reason why we should suspect that the President is going to do the unusual thing because we give him power which you say may be used in an unusual way. The President states to the country and to you that he has no notion of trying to take away the functions of the Interstate Commerce Commission placed upon that commission by the railroad-control bill. I am giving away no confidence when I tell you that the President said that one use that he thought now that he could make of the Interstate Commerce Commission was this: They have a thousand employees in that commission. I was looking over the roster the other day and find that they have 87 lawyers. They have 320 of the best trained experts in the country. The President said to me, "Mr. WEBB, why should I not be permitted in the progress of this war to use those 320 trained experts in perfecting our efforts here in the administrative and executive departments of the Government?" With reference to the Federal Reserve Board, the House knows and the country knows that the Federal Reserve System is one of the President's proudest administrative achievements.

If there is any one thing that stands out in the administration of Mr. Wilson more distinctly than any other, of which he can be more justly proud than any other, it is the creation of the Federal Reserve Board. Would any intelligent gentleman who knows that great man, who knows the circumstances under which that bill was passed, and who knows its operation, for a moment dare to suggest to the country that the President would want to destroy or even cripple the powers of the Federal Reserve Board? He said this: That there was no reason why, if the bill passed, he should not request and direct the Federal Reserve Board, which is composed, as we suppose, of the finest financial experts in the world, to cooperate and advise with this new war finance corporation, the biggest money corporation in the world. If that is his idea, this Congress ought to give it to him, because in handling five or ten billions of dollars that corporation ought to have the advice and cooperation and help of the Federal Reserve Board, composed of the finest financial experts in the world. We have no pride of opinion about the language of the bill. I think it might be helped some, but that is a matter of taste. My good friend from Minnesota is going to offer an amendment to consolidate the two sections, not to take any power away, but it is just a matter of language and grammar, but I am anxious to get this bill finally passed. Gentlemen know what powers are given and what are not given, and we are ready to vote on it, and I hope very much that when the bill passes to-night it will be without amendments; that it will go to the President and be signed, and that this troublesome matter—at least, it seemed to have been troublesome in the Senate—will be ended. Gentlemen, I am much obliged to you and I ask for the reading of the bill. [Applause.]

Mr. HOLLINGSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none

Mr. HOLLINGSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time for general debate may be extended for five minutes and I may have leave to address the House for that time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the time for general debate may be extended for five minutes and that he may have that time. Is there objection?

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, let me inquire if I have a few minutes remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has about 10 minutes remaining.

Mr. WEBB. I yield five minutes of that time to the gentleman from Michigan.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is mistaken. The Chair is informed by the timekeeper that the gentleman has no time remaining.

Mr. WEBB. May I ask my friend from Michigan if he will wait until the bill is taken up under the five-minute rule?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I would like to have the five minutes now, if the gentleman will oblige me.

Mr. WEBB. But my friend can get time to speak a little later.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I think I was the first who made a request for time, and I have been waiting for two days.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to speak for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I would like to explain my reason for being in favor of this bill, and will do so by reading the first part of the bill, which provides for the national security and defense, for the successful prosecution of the war, for the support and maintenance of the Army and Navy, for the better utilization of resources and industries, and for the more effective exercise and more efficient administration by the President of his powers of Commander in Chief of the land and naval forces. This is a good bill under our present conditions, because I am in favor of this war, in order to prevent the passing of a Nation that was conceived in liberty and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created free. The business of every individual in this country is and should be to see to the winning of this war. I am not afraid of giving the superintendent of any corporation too much power in the organization of his business. For 12 years I was associated in manufacturing. I was not in charge of the business, but occasionally a man would come to me with a complaint, but I found it necessary to sustain the superintendent. You can not operate a manufacturing business successfully without you lodge power and authority some place, so I stood by the superintendent just as long as I employed him. Now, do we need this power, or ought we to have a superintendency of this great war lodged in one responsible head? There is no way on earth that this Nation could preserve its honor and integrity and avoid this war. Germany said they had 500,000 reservists in the United States, and that we could not organize an army or carry on an efficient war. We know that the very men Germany sent here as ambassadors were intriguing against our Government and acted as spies. I know that all through our land the practical business, the chief business, the best business we could undertake would be to arouse public sentiment here at home to win this war. I desire to read you a little extract from the Detroit Free Press of April 29, 1918, published only a few days ago, stating the condition there in that one city, and if this condition exists all over the United States, then I say we should have this power, and every man who loves his country should become interested and help to stop this nefarious work. The headlines of this paper are as follows:

Detroit foils 13,000 enemy plots in year.

I now read from the Detroit Free Press of May 11, 1918, in reporting the trial in Chicago, which has headlines as follows:

Plot of I. W. W. to defeat United States in war bared.

And going on down, the article says:

The 112 defendants listened intently during presentation of the great mass of documentary evidence, which characterized conscription as a challenge to the workingman, advocated spiking of guns and spoiling of powder, and termed the uniform of the soldier "the livery of the scab herder."

If such a sentiment as that, my colleagues, exists any place in our land we take no chances in giving this power to the President of the United States. He is our chosen Commander in Chief. Let us do everything we can to aid him to win, irrespective of whatever party we belong to. I am for coordinating every man, not only at the front but here at home. There is work for everybody to do in putting down this war. I am for coordinating the man power of the United States here at home to help support the Army upon the battle line. What am I doing and what can I do to support and back up our Army in the field, should be ringing in everyone's ears. If every true American will identify himself with some war activity it will make conspicuous any idle, indifferent, or unwilling individual who does not understand either the magnitude of the war or the importance of winning it. Germany is now fighting to rule the world. Nothing is better known than that. We were caught napping. We as a Nation are the strong force against her. We must continue and fight until we establish a victorious peace. That is the only peace that can be lasting. We must fight to save our Nation. Sure as Germany wins we are hopelessly gone and our Nation is no more. We must unite every man and woman in America to fight to the last ditch and to the last man, if need be. I hope the President will keep on organizing until we have an Army of 5,000,000 enrolled soldiers, and that everybody who is not enrolled as a soldier to fight will be listed to raise food and make munitions and aeroplanes and ships with which to do the fighting. We must be strong in the pinches and tight places. We must be determined. Germany will never quit until she is decisively beaten. Do not look for any easy task, and if 5,000,000 men are not enough, let us enroll 10,000,000. This country is capable of supporting 1,000,000,000 inhabitants. The existence of our Republic is in the scales. Let us stake everything on victory, shoot all spies, hang all traitors, and execute the sabotants. Let us make treason odious in whatever form we find it.

Then, again, let us coordinate every nation on the Western Hemisphere. We are entitled to the aid and support of every nation in North and South America. Let us organize the fighting forces and nations of China, Japan, Australia, with all the nations of our allies to fight for all time until the military power of Germany is crushed. This is a coordination measure. This is a fighting bill. Some one must have the final decision, and the President is the one to administer it. Let us do our best and there will be but one result, and this will be victory and peace for all time. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. All time for general debate has expired. If the Chair may be indulged for a moment, upon yesterday a unanimous-consent agreement was entered into that there should be applied to the consideration of this measure after the conclusion of general debate what is known as the five-minute rule. The Chair construed that agreement thus entered into to mean that the bill shall be considered by sections for amendment, and that any person offering an amendment would be entitled to five minutes' discussion on that amendment and some person in opposition. In other words, the procedure will be the same in the House as the procedure in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union except, of course, that at any time the yeas and nays may be demanded upon any amendment.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, in that connection, of course, if any arrangement is made touching the time to be consumed regarding any amendment, that will operate the same as it would in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That would depend on the terms of the agreement. The Chair is only stating his construction of the agreement that was entered into yesterday. Of course, if any additional agreement shall be entered into, the terms of the agreement will control the situation.

Mr. TOWNER. But it is not properly necessary that there should be an agreement subject to unanimous consent, because if it is operated under the general five-minute rule as carried out in the Committee of the Whole, then an agreement in regard to the time might be made as is made in similar cases.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Undoubtedly. The Clerk will report the bill by sections, with amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the national security and defense, for the successful prosecution of the war, for the support and maintenance of the Army and Navy, for the better utilization of resources and industries, and for the more effective exercise and more efficient administration by the President of his powers as Commander in Chief of the land and naval forces the President is hereby authorized to make such redistribution of functions among executive agencies as he may deem necessary, including any functions, duties, and powers hitherto by law conferred upon any executive department, commission, bureau, agency, office, or officer, in such manner as in his judgment shall seem best fitted to carry out the purposes of this act, and to this end is authorized to make such regulations and to issue such orders as he may deem necessary, which regulations and orders shall be in writing, and shall be filed with the head of the department affected and constitute a public record:

Provided, That this act shall remain in force during the continuance of the present war and for six months after the termination of the war by the proclamation of the treaty of peace, or at such earlier time as the President may designate: Provided further, That the termination of this act shall not affect any act done or any right or obligation accruing or accrued pursuant to this act and during the time that this act is in force: Provided further, That the authority by this act granted shall be exercised only in matters relating to the conduct of the present war.

Mr. VOLSTEAD, Mr. WALSH, and Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD] is recognized.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. VOLSTEAD: Strike out section 1 and insert:

"That to enable the President, as Chief Executive and Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, to more efficiently prosecute the war and utilize the resources and industries of the country for that purpose, he is authorized to redistribute the existing duties, powers, and functions of the various administrative and executive agencies of the United States among such agencies as he may deem necessary; and he may, to carry out that purpose, utilize, coordinate, and consolidate existing commissions, bureaus, agencies, offices, or officers, and transfer any of the existing duties, powers, or functions of any one department, commission, bureau, agency, office, or officer to any other department, and transfer from one to the other any or all of the personnel by detail or assignment, together with the whole or part of the public records or property appertaining thereto.

"The President may make such regulations and issue such orders as he may deem necessary to carry out the purposes of this act. Such regulations and orders shall be filed with the head of the department affected and shall be public records."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. What has been offered, I understand, has been offered in the nature of a substitute for the section. I have an amendment to perfect the section, and I desire to know whether it is proper for me to offer that section now?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. An amendment to perfect the section would have precedence.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WALSH. As I understand, the precedence of a motion to perfect the text of a section only goes to its being voted on; that a person can offer his amendment to strike out and substitute, but when the voting comes the preference shall stand to that one perfecting the text. I think the present occupant of the chair so ruled heretofore.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Of course, an amendment can not be voted on until it is offered. The Chair does not know whether he understands the gentleman perfectly or not. The rule is well settled that a motion to perfect the text takes precedence over a motion to strike out or a motion to strike out and insert. In other words, if the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] has an amendment designed to perfect the text of section 1 as it stands, it would take precedence over the motion proposed by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD].

Mr. WALSH. Not in time of offering and debate?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. How could it be voted on without being offered?

Mr. WALSH. Because he would have the right to offer it and debate it before the vote on the motion to strike out, of course.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE]. The Chair thinks that an amendment that is designed to perfect the text takes preference.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania: Page 2, line 7, after the words "shall be," insert the words "reported to Congress."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, if this legislation is passed—and I expect to vote for the bill—the changes made by the President with regard to bureaus or departments for which Congress makes an appropriation should be reported to Congress. That is the purpose of the amendment. In every emergency war bill thus far passed there has been some provision of this kind, that the President or the department upon which Congress was conferring new power should report to the Congress. In this way Congress has retained its hold upon its own business. The charge is frequently made now—and, I regret to say, it appears sometimes in the public press—that Congress is a mere creature of the Executive, that Congress is innocuous; that Congress is obliged to do what Congress is told. I resent that suggestion, as I believe every other Member of Congress does. Only yesterday on the floor of the House we had an instance of the way Congress feels toward those of its creatures who criticize it. The Democratic leader [Mr. KITCHIN] expressed himself on this subject in no uncertain manner. I applaud him for the statement he made yesterday with respect to the so-called Director of Publicity, who is quoted as having reflected upon Congress.

I am an old-fashioned Member of Congress, believing in the prerogatives of this body. It is one of the three coordinate branches of the Government. It ought to preserve its privileges and its powers. It ought to demand and expect that comity which it accords to the other branches of the Government. What does the Constitution say with regard to Congress? Some people are inclined to forget that there is a Constitution in these war times. Yet I believe if we have time to sit here for six or seven months in a session of Congress, we have time to reflect upon the organic law of the country. The Constitution which binds us together, which gives the President his power, which gives the judiciary its power, and which gives Congress its power, says, with regard to the Congress:

All legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives.

No President can impinge upon that power of Congress and no judiciary can impinge upon that power—the legislative power of Congress. What are the powers of the President? The Constitution says:

The executive power shall be vested in a President of the United States of America. He shall hold his office during the term of four years and, together with a Vice President, chosen for the same term, be elected as follows:

The Constitution makes the President of the United States the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy. But it requires of him in more than one instance that he shall report to Congress. In large measure he is dependent upon Congress, as absolutely dependent upon Congress in the matter of appropriations for the performance of his duty as any one of the departments or as is the judiciary. These things should not be forgotten. The three branches of the Government are to work together, not against each other.

Now, this bill, from its first line to its last, makes no provision for a report to be made by the President to Congress of changes he may make in the executive departments, except as he may see fit to abolish any one of them. In the event he thinks it necessary to abolish a bureau or a department, then, he is to make a recommendation to Congress for the action of Congress thereon, but if he proposes to consolidate two departments of the Government created by Congress for which appropriations are made, he may have the power to do so without reporting to Congress at all. There is no good reason, apparently, why he should not take Congress into his confidence.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Has my time expired, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MADDEN and Mr. WALSH rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts rise to oppose the amendment?

Mr. WALSH. I rise to offer an amendment.

Mr. WEBB. Does the gentleman from Minnesota desire to oppose this amendment? I hope the amendment will not be adopted. Amendments may be offered which really are very good in form, but this bill has been before the country for nearly 9 weeks, almost 10 weeks, and any amendment, unless it is material, will simply delay the passage of the bill and give some people the chance to criticize us for delaying emergency war measures.

Besides that, I do not think on a question of merit the amendment ought to be adopted. Here we say to the President that he can change or coordinate any departments temporarily only. Does the Congress desire to require the President every time he attempts a change of that kind to send a report to Congress to that effect? If he does the work under this bill which we hope he will do, we shall be doing little else but sitting here hearing reports from the President, so numerous would be his reports. If he thinks any one of these departments or bureaus should be abolished, or any of these commissions should be abolished permanently, he is required in the bill to furnish to Congress his reasons for that. I hope we will not require the President to report to Congress every Executive order he makes under this bill, because every order that he makes will be registered and filed in the department, and will be a public record, and no doubt will be printed in the newspapers, and every Member of Congress and everybody else will have access to it.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. GILLETT. Does not the gentleman think that Congress ought at least to be apprised, after giving the President its own powers? Ought not the Congress at least to be told what has been done? Have we to go to the departments to keep track of the different departments and find out what changes have been made?

Mr. WEBB. We have passed here many bills in the last 15 years giving the President the power to change and coordinate and transfer employees in the departments, and there has not been a single word in the various acts about reporting to Congress.

Mr. GILLETT. Those are employees. These are duties.

Mr. WEBB. What is the difference? They are both executive functions and agencies.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I rise in fact to support the amendment that has been offered. Some gentleman yesterday remarked upon the small attendance on general debate on this bill. He might also have remarked upon the small attendance that has generally prevailed during general debate upon the various bills offered here. The reason is plain why we have such small attendance. It is because it is believed that these debates are simply perfunctory and that we are going through an idle ceremony when we come here and discuss these measures, because no amendments would be permitted and the bills would pass in any event. But I never thought that any gentleman would rise in his place, as the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEBB] has done, and tell us it ought to be a mere form, that there ought not to be any debate, that there ought not to be propositions to amend, and that even discussion should be limited.

Mr. WEBB. I said there should not be any amendment to this bill unless it was vital to the bill. I said that no immaterial amendment ought to be tacked onto this bill.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Let us see whether there is any necessity for this amendment. What is the purpose of this bill? What is it that is desired to be done? Who has attempted to tell us? Has the gentleman from North Carolina told us what is to be done under this bill? Has the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], with all his power and ability, told us what is going to be done? No. We do not know what is going to be done under this bill. We have no idea what is contemplated.

Now we are told we shall not even be permitted to find out what has been done after action is taken. Did anybody ever hear of a more astonishing proposition than that? Why, gentlemen, have we reached the point where debate has ceased to mean anything, when amendments, however meritorious, are not to be permitted? When a bill comes here are we simply to adopt it, not only without knowledge as to what is intended to be done under the powers conveyed, but are also told that we should not even be permitted to learn of any action taken under it?

Mr. Speaker, this bill is not of my choosing. I would not have framed it in this manner. I recognize the need of coordination. Who does not? I am aware that the departments exercise various conflicting duties which they are undertaking now to perform. I recognize it especially with reference to my own State, where the Fuel Administration now says that coal should be sold at a certain price and that the railroads shall pay a certain price for it, but the Director General of the Railroads now says, as I understand, that the railroads shall not pay it. Therefore the mines of my State are idle, and the people stand a good chance of freezing next winter because they can not mine the two kinds of coal, and the mines are not operated.

I am in favor of coordination. I am in favor of abolishing these duplicated functions. Who is not? How long would it take this House to give the President the power, if he needs anything further than he now has? I claim that he needs nothing further than he has now to prevent this duplication. But how long would it take Congress to give him the powers that he needs, if he needs any, if only they were specified? Mr. Speaker, what this country now needs is coordination between the administration and Congress, not that blind coordination that comes from the House voting measures when it does not know what powers are included in them or what powers are going to be exercised under them, but the country needs a genuine cooperation and coordination, uniting the abilities of both the adminstration and of Congress.

We have seen failures in certain departments. We saw our aircraft plans all go by the board here recently. Why? Because Congress knew nothing about what was going on. If Congress had known what was going on, does anybody think that that state of affairs would have been tolerated or that it would have continued for a whole year? We know now that we are not to have our program for artillery carried out until some time in the fall of 1919. Does anybody think that that would have been permitted, that Congress would have permitted the Ordnance Department to wait on designs to be worked out when the French had already furnished us with the plans of the most successful gun ever devised? But we know nothing about these matters until they are dragged out by a congressional investigation. The fact is that we have not the coordination that we ought to have between the administration and Congress. If we had, we would come nearer making successful our war preparations.

Success in this conflict will not be won by simply shouting "We must win the war; we will win the war!" Action must follow these words, and the Congress ought to know whether that action is being taken. If it does not find out, it is an impotent body and does not deserve its place in our Government.

Mr. Speaker, I feel compelled under the position in which we are placed to vote for this bill, because the President says he can not carry on these war preparations sufficiently without it. I am unable to understand why, but I must admit that as our affairs have been conducted he alone knows what our necessities are. I do not propose to assume, and Congress is not called upon under the circumstances to assume, the responsibility for any failure that might be charged to a refusal to pass this bill. I hope, however, this amendment will prevail. [Applause.]

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee). Does the gentleman rise in opposition to the amendment?

Mr. COX. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, if I made any criticism at all on this bill it would be that it has been delayed too long. In my judgment, it should have been the third bill passed after Congress recognized that a state of war existed between our country and the German Empire.

The first bill that Congress passed was a declaration of war. To back this declaration up it was immediately followed by the selective-draft measure, designed to raise an army, and this should have been followed by the measure under consideration.

As a rule, democracies are not prepared for war. Democracies do not live or grow by war. The weapons democracy uses are education, enlightenment, knowledge, wisdom, and liberty. It devotes its energies to a development of the things designed to make men better in this world instead of devoting its energies to a constant and continued preparation for war.

The President needs power to enable him to successfully fight this war to a final and successful conclusion. He is the Commander in Chief of the Army and the Navy, and as such is held responsible for the direction and movement of the Army and Navy in time of war. With the Army and Navy divided into different branches and parts, the President needs the concentration of power in his hands to get the best and quickest results.

The human memory is very short. We are prone to forget things rather quickly. We become engrossed in our everyday life, in things immediately surrounding us, and few of us take into account the things of the past.

Precisely the same argument made here to-day and made in the Senate for the past six weeks against this bill was made in Congress 50 years ago against giving the immortal Lincoln power to enable him to successfully command the Army and Navy of the North during the Civil War. Many able but misguided men both in the House and in the Senate heaped criticism upon criticism upon the head of President Lincoln during those trying and troublesome times, because they said that President Lincoln was seeking to get too much power and control in his hands for a democratic government such as ours. Many men in high authority are now crying out that President Wilson is being given too much power under laws passed by Congress. This Congress has not given to President Wilson the power that Congress granted to President Lincoln. I doubt if at the conclusion of this war President Wilson will have as much power placed in his hands as Congress placed in the hands of President Lincoln during the Civil War; yet President Lincoln, though clothed with almost absolute power—in the language of the matchless Robert G. Ingersoll—"never abused the power except on the side of mercy." The same thing will ultimately be true so far as President Wilson is concerned. You can clothe him with all the power that Congress under the Constitution can possibly grant him, yet he will never abuse it except on the side of mercy. He can not abuse power granted to him by Congress. The Constitution plainly fixes his limitations. So far can the President go, even in time of war, but no farther; he must obey the Constitution as well as the humblest citizen of the land, in time of war as well as in time of peace. I have no fear of granting to him all the power that he asks and all the powers that Congress has the right to grant to him under the Constitution of the United States.

The people constitute our Government. The President, the Congress, and the Supreme Court of the United States, the three coordinate branches of the Government, in no wise constitute the Government. The people constitute the Government. All powers not expressly granted by the people in the Constitution are expressly reserved by the people. The men who fill these places or positions in each of the three coordinate branches of the Government are but the agents of the people; they constitute but the trappings of the Government, the framework of the Nation itself, while the Nation is composed of men and women—human beings—with the rights of all plainly and explicitly set forth in the Constitution.

During the Civil War Congress authorized President Lincoln to suspend the writ of habeas corpus, a right fought and contended for by all English-speaking people of the earth for nearly 10 centuries, a right nearer and dearer to the heart of every English-speaking man or woman than his own life. President Wilson has not asked for a suspension of the writ of habeas corpus, and I doubt very much—unless unforeseen contingencies arise—if he will ask for it. In fact, when what is known as the Chamberlain bill was up for consideration in the Senate recently he quickly and promptly wrote a letter to the Senator in charge of the bill, expressly stating that the bill under consideration would practically place this country under martial law, and that there was no necessity for such legislation, plainly and unequivocally showing a disposition not to declare martial law in the country—not even to have placed upon the statute books the law giving him the power to declare martial law in force.

Mr. FESS. Congress did not do it. The President did it.

Mr. COX. Oh, I beg the gentleman's pardon. Congress gave to the President the power to suspend it by Executive order, and I will insert that act, or at least a part of it, in the RECORD. The gentleman will find it in Twelfth Statutes at Large, page 755, just exactly as I am saying.

Mr. FESS. Is it not true that President Jefferson suspended the writ of habeas corpus?

Mr. COX. I have not gone back that far.

Mr. FESS. In order to prevent the escape of Aaron Burr when he was in prison. And is it not true that Lincoln suspended the writ of habeas corpus before Congress acted?

Mr. COX. I think not.

Mr. FESS. Oh, he did, and was criticized by Congress because he did it.

Mr. COX. Grant that to be true. I have not looked it up; but the point I am making is this, that Congress by an act gave President Lincoln the power to suspend the writ of habeas corpus, and he did that on many occasions.

Mr. FESS. But that was after he had suspended it.

Mr. COX. It does not make any difference whether it was after or whether it was before Congress gave him the power to do it. [Applause.]

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last two words. I am in favor of giving the President all the power that he ought to have to conduct the war successfully. I do not care how much power it is necessary to give him. I want him to have it, for I want to see the war won, and I want somebody in power to conduct it as it ought to be conducted. Now, as the president of an ordinary business corporation I have frequently had the power to coordinate every activity of the corporation, and I do not know of a man who would be qualified to act as the chief executive of a great private business enterprise who would accept the presidency of it unless he had the power to utilize every man under his jurisdiction in any way that he thought proper to use him. That is all this does. It gives the President that power. He ought to have it, and I am in favor of seeing that he gets it. I do not think there ought to be any question about what we will do. I do not think there is. I think almost every man here is in favor of the enactment of this law. Some may want to modify it, some may want to pass it just as it is. Whether it is passed as it is or in a modified form, it will centralize the power in the President of the United States to do the things that he ought to have the right to do. Then, if he fails to do them, the burden will be upon him.

Now, of course, the question arises whether the President ought not to have said to us just exactly what he wants to do. I do not see how he could do that, for the questions that he will have to deal with will arise from time to time as emergencies arise and he will have to deal with them when they arise. If he should do otherwise, he might make a bad job of it. He must have the power to deal with an emergency, and this bill gives him that power. I do not think it would harm the President of the United States any if he should report to the Congress when he does make an important change, when he does centralize power, when he does exchange the functions of one man for those of another. It would not hurt him to send in to Congress a statement of what he has done. It would not place any responsibility on the Congress to approve or disapprove of what he did. It would simply keep the Congress informed of what was going on. There can be no harm in that, and to that extent I think the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania would have a wholesome effect. But even without that amendment the bill is all right. I have no doubt about the outcome when this House gets ready to vote upon it. My hope is that after we have given the power that this bill conveys to the President he will take advantage of every opportunity to reorganize every branch of the Government, to make it as efficient as possible, to the end that the war may be conducted with a vigor that will leave no doubt in the minds of the American people what the attitude of the Government is.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. Would not the gentleman think it would be sufficient publicity if the change that was made was published in the Official Bulletin?

Mr. MADDEN. The trouble with the Official Bulletin is that it does not get to a man's desk until three weeks after the transaction has taken place, and then it does not tell the whole story. But regardless of whether the President is required to make such a report, it is not important, although I do not think it would embarrass the President if he was required to do it under the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. It would be no humiliation to him, and it would be of great service to the Congress of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, at first blush I felt that I was very much opposed to this bill. I would like to see the amendment adopted directing the President to report such action as he may take in consolidating the offices to Congress. I have been very much opposed to giving greater power to the President unless it be absolutely necessary to more efficiently carry on the war.

I do not see but Congress has given the President greater power than is possessed by the Emperor of Germany. And yet we are fighting for the establishment of democracy and the discontinuance of autocracy in the world. I can not see any great wisdom in banishing a czar across the seas and at the same time creating one over here. I do not believe that the President could have any greater power under this bill than he now has. That is my candid opinion. Every Cabinet officer is appointed by the President. Any Cabinet officer that will not carry out the wishes of the President will lose his position, in my opinion, and rightfully so, because they are the advisory board of the President.

I do not see how we can give by this bill any greater power to the President than he already has. If he wants to consolidate certain branches and agencies in the War Department, where there are now about 100, all that is necessary is to call the attention of the Secretary of War to his wishes and his wishes will be carried out without doubt. I had made up my mind to vote against the bill, but I am frank to tell you that to-day I called upon an Army officer whom I know very well, a man of very high character and great ability, and he assured me of the necessity of the passage of this bill to more efficiently carry on the operations of this war. To be frank with you, I regard the aircraft proposition as a scandal. To say that we have appropriated more than three-quarters of a billion dollars and have but one airplane only abroad for fighting purposes which has been made over here is to me the next thing to a scandal.

It was stated by an Army officer not long ago before a committee of this House that the reason why they did not have fighting aeroplanes abroad is because of the fact that they did not have spruce lumber for that purpose. It requires 2,000 feet of spruce lumber in the construction of an aeroplane. I know there are millions of feet of spruce lumber all ready upon the mill docks of this country for the purpose of building aeroplanes.

Mr. BARNHART. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. BARNHART. The gentleman said that if the President saw fit he could consolidate the bureaus and purchasing agencies without the authority of this bill. Does the present law authorize him to do that, or does the present law require that they shall be conducted as they are now?

Mr. FORDNEY. The gentleman misunderstood me. I said that all that would be necessary was for the President to make known to the Secretary of War what he wished, and the Secretary would carry out those wishes, undoubtedly.

Mr. BARNHART. Could the Secretary of War do that?

Mr. FORDNEY. The Secretary of War created these purchasing agencies.

Mr. BARNHART. But he can not make and unmake law.

Mr. FORDNEY. The law provides that he can create the agencies, and he has created them, and now can not he abolish them? I may be wrong and I may not have a proper understanding of the matter.

Mr. GILLETT. He certainly could change the officials.

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes; and God knows that he ought to change some of them.

Mr. QUIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. QUIN. I was interested in the gentleman's observations as to the aircraft proposition. I am a member of the Military Affairs Committee, and it has been hard for me to get any information. When the gentleman states there is but one aeroplane in France, I want to know where he got the information.

Mr. FORDNEY. It is common gossip, everybody knows about it, and a gentleman in the Signal Corps to-day told me that was the cold solid fact.

Mr. QUIN. I can not get the truth from any source, and I wanted to know if the gentleman had it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired .

Mr. FORDNEY. I ask for five minutes more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. REAVIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. REAVIS. Two members of the Military Committee in the Senate have quite recently stated on the floor of the Senate that that was the evidence before their committee—that there was but one fighting aeroplane in France.

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes; I so understand, and if I am correct, the Congress of the United States has appropriated in one lump sum $600,000,000 for that purpose.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Six hundred and forty million dollars.

Mr. FORDNEY. Oh, well, a little matter of $40.000.000 in these days does not amount to much. My good friends, we have by this bill or by existing law, in my opinion, given away our prerogatives here. We have delegated them to the Executive. Some one has said that we are now nothing more than rubber stamps. Good Lord! I begin to think that I am not even a rubber stamp here. The Constitution of the United States provides that all revenue laws shall originate in the House of Representatives. Such measures are referred to the Ways and Means Committee of the House.

I am informed now, through the press, that the administration proposes a new revenue law. The Committee on Ways and Means has heard nothing about it at all except through the press. I believe the Congress of the United States ought to be consulted by the administration in such matters. I think it is a usurpation of the rights of the Members of Congress to attempt to force legislation upon the country by mere dictation to Congress by Cabinet officers and the administration. I think that is wrong. First of all, before we pass another revenue law I would like to know how much money is going to be collected for the calendar year of 1917 under existing law, and how much money we are going to need. I understand now it is said by Secretary Baker that he made a slight mistake in his estimates last year of something like $4,000,000,000, but a little thing like that is not much of a mistake these days. However, it seems to me the administration ought to come nearer than $4,000,000,000 in estimating the outlays of the Government for the Army and the Navy for one year. I do not believe the Members of this House are going to consent to the passage of a new revenue law until we know how much is going to be raised under existing law, and how much we want and how much has been spent and how much it is proposed to spend this year. I do not mean to say that our tax laws now on our statute books do not distribute the taxes upon the people where they should be distributed. It is my contention that the man who is making the money is the man who can afford to pay the taxes.

Mr. QUIN. Will not this new revenue bill make him pay more taxes? Is not that the object of the bill?

Mr. FORDNEY. Any bill, if it were only for 10 cents more than we are paying now would, of course, add that much to the tax laws of to-day, and make the people pay that much more. But where are you going to place it?

Mr. QUIN. Place it on the big excess-profits men.

Mr. FORDNEY. We are going to place it where it belongs. It ought to be equitably placed upon the people, and the man that can afford it is the man who ought to pay. The man who is making money ought to pay. If I am making money out of business during this war I can afford to pay taxes, but if a man is poor and only earning enough money to buy bread and butter for his wife and children, he should not be heavily taxed. Make the man pay the taxes who is making the money.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, answering the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN], is it not possible that some of this new taxation might be levied on cotton at this time, seeing there has been no tax placed upon that product heretofore?

Mr. FORDNEY. Oh, yes; my friend from Pennsylvania is always interested in cotton, and so am I.

Mr. HARDY. I presume he shows his patriotism in that way.

Mr. FORDNEY. But, my good friends, I have been opposed and am now opposed to a consumption tax. We have kept away from consumption taxes so far, and I do not believe we should resort to a consumption tax on the articles of use in clothing and food. The Lord knows, prices are high enough now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that gentlemen who are sincerely in favor of this bill will support it without the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. If we are going to support the President at all, if we are going to trust him, we ought to do so without attaching conditions. You are proposing to do a vain thing here, at most. You are proposing to pass a great measure which gives to the President of the United States power to make great changes, and then you say, for fear that our dignity might be compromised, that the President must tell us what he has done after he has done it. And after he has made his report, what then? Does it accomplish anything? Has any good been accomplished thereby? It is very possible that some of these changes may be made while Congress is not in session; and then what are you going to do about it? I rose simply to suggest that men who are really and honestly in favor of this bill would not attach a string to it, and I do not believe the true friends of the bill will. So far as I am concerned, I have tried to forget since this war began that I ever had any partisan feeling. I do not know how I am going to make a political speech this fall. Now, if you are going to pass this bill at all, it ought to be passed without slapping the President in the face at the time you give him authority, and that is what you will do if you amend the bill by requiring him to report to Congress.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania) there were—ayes 36, noes 73.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. TOWNER: Page 2, line 7, after the word "writing" insert the words "and when in contravention of any act of Congress shall be reported to Congress."

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, I could not support the amendment which was offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania for the reason that it would require the President to report on changes which he has already power to make. It will require the President to report whenever he transfers certain employees from one department to another. It would require the President to report all the matters which are now within his power to act as the Executive head of the Nation on which he is not now required to report. But, gentlemen, I appeal to Members on this side especially, I think that it is important that we should require the President to make a report to Congress whenever he makes, under the authority of the bill, any order which is in contravention of an act of Congress. Gentlemen, that is information which we ought to have. If we give this broad power to the President to repeal an act of Congress, certainly Congress ought to be notified of what that action is. I want to call the attention of gentlemen to the language of the President in referring to the things that he said were necessary to be done in order to effect this coordination work of the executive departments, and I want the President to have that power if it is needed. I shall support this bill because I want the President to exercise this power, but it is certainly only proper that he should report his action to the Congress. Now, gentlemen, what does the President say he wants to do? In a communication which he made, as you remember, when this matter was first brought up in the Senate of the United States, he said:

Effective measures of reorganization have been thoughtfully and maturely perfected.

And then he said:

If Congress will but remove a few of the statutory obstacles of rigid departmental organization which stand in the way, these changes can be effectively made.

So that it is the purpose and intention of the President to change some of the statutory requirements and to set them aside for the purpose of an effective reorganization. Now, the amendment which I offered, and which I think is no more than it is our duty as the Congress to do, is only that when any act of Congress is in fact repealed by this order of the President that he shall report such fact to Congress. Certainly Congress ought to know when its own act is repealed. Some doubt the constitutionality of giving the President this power. Leaving that out of consideration now entirely, it is expected that the President will repeal some of these rigid departmental statutory enactments in order to reorganize the Government and all that the amendment does is that whenever any statutory enactment is repealed by the order of the President that he shall report that act to Congress.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TOWNER. Certainly.

Mr. HARDY. Does not the whole bill contemplate that the departmental jurisdictions may be readjusted by the President, and would not every order made under this bill come within the purview of the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. TOWNER. Oh, no; I will say to the gentleman, the President himself says that there are only a few statutory enactments which stand in the way. The President himself can now change almost every single department in so far as its coordination and reorganization is concerned. He can do this because no statutory enactment stands in the way, but there are a few, the President says, statutory enactments that do stand in the way. This really gives him the power to repeal, and when he does so this amendment says that he shall report to the Congress.

Mr. HARDY. I understood the gentleman to say that he has the other power now.

Mr. TOWNER. Yes, sir.

Mr. HARDY. The power that is conferred by this bill would be embraced in the amendment of the gentleman?

Mr. TOWNER. Why certainly.

Mr. HARDY. So every order which he made under the power of this bill would have to be reported to Congress?

Mr. TOWNER. Oh, no; I am just saying he ought not to report it only when it is in contravention of a statutory enactment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I rise to oppose the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER]. I feel the amendment proposed relates back to the same scope, probably a greater scope even than that offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, but I do not think it is as well expressed as the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. This amendment provides for the insertion of the words "in contravention of an act of Congress." Now, it seems to me that we can not assume that anything that the President does under this act transferring authority will be in contravention of an act of Congress since whatever he will do will be done under this bill, which is an act of Congress, and therefore will be done by the authority of Congress. There could be nothing done in contravention of an act of Congress, because that is another way of saying that the Executive would violate an act of Congress and do some particular act in actual violation of an existing act, and that if he does that then he should report that particular act of violation to the Congress of the United States. That, as has been said, is assuming that he is going to violate the law which is precisely what he is not going to do. The whole bill has for its purpose a transfer of governmental departments and utilities. That is the object of the bill. There is nothing created, no new statutory power is here created, and no new offices or boards are created, merely the power to assemble governmental utilities, largely within the departments, and have those utilities assembled, redistribute them, and if they are in one place and they belong for better efficiency in another place, the President is authorized to do that particular thing. Now, that is all the bill means, and to say that if he acts in violation of law, acts in contravention of an act of Congress, he must report that to Congress might by inference seem to give him a permit to contravene statutory law if he would make report thereof.

Mr. DOREMUS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. I will yield.

Mr. DOREMUS. If I understood the gentleman's proposition correctly it is that the bill itself, if it is enacted into law, will repeal by implication the statutory enactments to which the gentleman refers.

Mr. GARD. That is an excellent way of expressing it. But I know there would be no wider scope than the transfer of these Government activities because there is no wider authority conferred by the bill, and I can only say that the proposed amendment harks back and is not so good as the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Now, the whole matter affecting both these amendments is contained in the language in lines 7 and 8 on page 2 of this bill, where it provides that the President is authorized—

To make such regulations and to issue such orders as he may deem necessary, which regulations and orders shall be in writing and shall be filed with the head of the department affected and constitute a public record.

That is not a matter for Congress. Congress passes a law. The other part is for the administration of this law, and the administration of the law, so far as the transfer of departmental activities and utilities is concerned, is essential for the information of the departments and every good purpose is performed, it seems to me, when this bill provides that the regulation shall be in writing and filed with the head of the department affected and shall constitute a public record. All that would be gained under authority of these proposed amendments would be the ceremony, because it could not be called anything else; it would have no greater dignity—the ceremony of transmitting something that was done, after it had been done, to this body. I am sure this House does not desire to be cluttered up with a lot of reports, many of them necessarily of small import, which would be coming in if either of these amendments should prevail. It seems to me in all sound sincerity of judgment the very purpose sought to be accomplished is accomplished when the rules and regulations are filed with the department affected, so that that department may know its work, because that is the department which is to be transferred as a new agency of efficiency. It is that a particular force is sent to another department or to act in other work, and when the department itself is advised and gets on the job and does the work that is the action which we want under this assemblage and distribution bill. [Applause.]

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I do not share the alarm of those who fear the provisions of this bill. As a matter of fact, its provisions have been magnified far beyond their importance or their danger to the country. This bill, instead of occupying the attention of either branch of Congress for many weeks, should have been passed as soon as possible after its introduction.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Not now, but later on.

This bill simply ratifies an authority that the President already has and should have exercised a year ago. And if there have been shortcomings in any of the departments, if there have been failures to get a proper functioning of governmental activities, the President should have exercised the rights that he now has long ago, and that are only repeated in this bill.

As a matter of fact, I am thoroughly convinced that the title of this bill is the vital part of it. There is nothing very vital in the language of the bill. The title of the bill assumes it is necessary that the President should have the authority that is granted in it. I concur in the judgment of Senators and of Members of this House who believe that the President has all the authority now that is granted by the provisions of the bill. Therefore I am in favor of its passage at the earliest moment possible.

Now I yield to my genial friend from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH].

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman stated that this bill should have been passed immediately after its introduction.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. As soon after its introduction as possible.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Has the gentleman read the bill as introduced? Does not the gentleman think that prolonged debate upon this bill has resulted in making it a bill that it is possible for him to support, where he could not have supported it as introduced?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I confess that the first publication made of this bill made an impression upon the country that the President was asking for unusual, autocratic power. I did not share, after reading the bill, in the opinion that it did grant unusual powers. At any rate, there should be no further delay in the passage of the bill. What the country to-day requires is action, and if the President is withholding any of the powers that he now has until after the passage of this bill this excuse for further delay should not be given.

Mr. REAVIS. I would like to have the gentleman give me his construction of this language on page 2, commencing with line 13:

Provided further, That the termination of this act shall not affect any act done—

If the act was done under the provisions of this act, how could the termination of this act affect the legality of that act?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. It could not.

Mr. REAVIS. What does the language mean, then, when it says the mere termination of this act shall not affect any act done under this law, in the opinion of the gentleman? How could the termination of this act affect anything done under this measure?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I assume that as the first section of this bill provides that the act shall terminate at a certain time after the close of the war——

Mr. REAVIS. Within six months.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. After the close of the war. And I assume if any act has been done by the President that would otherwise contravene a statutory regulation the fact that this law has terminated shall not affect that action taken by the President.

Mr. REAVIS. What I had in mind, if the gentleman please, is this: That any act done under this measure while it is in force is a legal act?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes; undoubtedly.

Mr. REAVIS. Why should the act say that the mere termination of this act would not make illegal an act that is already legal?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I presume that language is placed there out of abundance of caution, because it is rather unusual to pass a law and provide that its provisions shall terminate at a certain date, leaving no law upon which to base acts which have been done under it.

Mr. HARDY. It does preserve rights?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. It preserves the rights of those who have their status fixed under this law.

As I was about proceeding to say, the country is not interested in technical details at this time. Neither is the country interested in the question as to whether or not this grant of authority is unusual. What the country wants to know is that at this time the Executive has the power that he says he must have in order that he may successfully conduct the war; and, if he requires authority that he does not now possess, that authority should not be longer withheld.

The matter of our aircraft has been referred to to illustrate inefficiency now. What the country is interested in to-day is in having as many fighting planes over the fields of France as are necessary to get results upon the western front. Is there a hope that under the provisions of this bill aircraft production may be increased? It may be that we can get better results. If so, we can not afford to delay a single hour the inauguration of the moment when aircraft production shall be increased and multiplied. I say, therefore, if the President believes he lacks authority, let this bill pass. In my judgment it grants him no power of consequence that he does not already possess.

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. Does the gentleman know anything that the President has in mind to do under this bill, with reference to aircraft production?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I do not. I wish I did.

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. Does the gentleman know what he can do under this bill that he can not do now to increase the efficiency of aircraft production?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I say what I said before, that I do not believe this bill grants anything to the President that he does not now possess in every essential feature. He can reorganize every department under him to-day by changing the personnel, by consolidating them, or by doing many things that might improve the service. And I will say that since the introduction of this bill many consolidations and changes have been made with a view of bettering the service in the departments.

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. I would like to ask the gentleman this question: If the President can do everything now that he could do under this bill, why is it so urgent that we pass this bill immediately?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. In order that it shall not further appear to the country that the President has passed the buck to Congress and Congress has refused to pass it back.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make some observations on the amendment I offered as a substitute for section 1.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman desire to speak on that amendment?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. WALSH rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Has the gentleman from Massachusetts an amendment to offer to the paragraph?

Mr. WALSH. Yes. I offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WALSH: Page 2, line 19, after the word "war," strike out the period, insert a colon and the following words: "Provided further, That the redistribution authorized by this act shall not apply to the Interstate Commerce Commission, but the President may transfer or detail such of its subordinate officers to such other executive or administrative agencies, bureaus, commissions, or offices for such duties as in his discretion he may deem necessary."

Mr. WEBB. Mr Speaker, I apprehend that this amendment will take some little discussion, and I would like to agree with my friend who offered it upon a definite time at which this debate shall close.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Has the gentleman any suggestion to make?

Mr. WEBB. Yes. I ask the opinion of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. I do not know, but I think perhaps 30 or 40 minutes' debate ought to be sufficient.

Mr. WEBB. I suggest 30 minutes. It has been thoroughly debated in the House already to-day.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman mean 30 minutes on a side?

Mr. WEBB. No. Thirty minutes on both sides.

Mr. WALSH. We have occupied almost 30 minutes on this other amendment.

Mr. WEBB. Make it 40 minutes; 20 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Massachusetts and 20 minutes by myself.

Mr. WALSH. I do not want to have control of the time. I would rather have it controlled by the Chair. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, it has been suggested that inasmuch as we have consumed a little over an hour on these other amendments we might need a little more time. I dislike to prolong the discussion, but I think if the gentleman would agree to 25 minutes on a side that would be satisfactory.

Mr. WEBB. In reply to that, Mr. Speaker, the amendments discussed in the last hour were new amendments. We have known all along that the amendment that the gentleman from Massachusetts has offered would be offered, and we have discussed it during the debate. I suggest to the gentleman that if he can get along with 40 minutes in all we would be glad, because we want to get the bill to the final stage this afternoon and vote on it, or vote on it to-morrow morning.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto shall conclude at the end of 40 minutes, one-half of that time to be controlled by himself and one-half by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH]. Is there objection?

Mr. REAVIS. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, the request for unanimous consent does not affect further amendments to this section?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This amendment and all amendments thereto. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from North Carolina for 20 minutes.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to consume the 20 minutes allotted to me, because my views on this matter were expressed yesterday during the debate on the bill. I shall simply summarize briefly the opinions that I have upon this particular phase of this legislation.

Congress has created what is known as the Interstate Commerce Commission, and from time to time it has enlarged and modified its powers. It has to do with a particular class of matters which do not infringe upon any other administrative board or office. It has to deal with matters that are not ordinarily handled by any other official; and this act would permit the President to say to the Director General of Railroads, "I transfer to you all the powers and duties now possessed by the Interstate Commerce Commission, those powers and functions to be exercised by you hereafter." But it may be said, "Does anybody think that the President would dream of doing anything of that kind?" If he does not dream of doing it, then it is apparent that there can be no objection to writing that provision into the bill.

Mr. REAVIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield to my colleague from Minnesota.

Mr. REAVIS. As I understand it, then, the reason assigned for granting the President this power is his promise that he will not exercise it if granted?

Mr. WALSH. I do not know that that is the reason, but that is the argument that, I think, has prevailed with some gentlemen who are following this legislation very closely. Now, the Interstate Commerce Commission is an administrative board possessed, as I submitted yesterday, of semijudicial functions; and in this crisis, when we have put the control of the railroads in the hands of the Government, I submit we ought not to divest the Interstate Commerce Commission of its functions and authority, because it would be a queer tribunal which, just because the control of the roads has been changed, should have its functions transferred to somebody else.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be reported again, and that the time taken in reporting it be not taken out of the time of the gentleman from Massachusetts. I want to hear the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the amendment be again reported, not to be taken out of the time of the gentleman from Massachusetts. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WALSH: Page 2, line 19, after the word "war," strike out the period, insert a colon, and add the following words:

"Provided further, That the redistribution authorized by this act shall not apply to the Interstate Commerce Commission, but the President may transfer or detail such of its subordinate officers to such other executive or administrative agencies, bureaus, commissions, or offices, for such duties as in his discretion he may deem necessary."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER]. Will the Chair advise me how much time I have consumed?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has consumed three minutes.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] provides that the redistribution of executive and administrative powers authorized by this bill shall not apply to the Interstate Commerce Commission. That means, generally speaking, that the powers granted by the bill to the President shall not extend to divesting the Interstate Commerce Commission of its power to make rates, determine classifications of freight, or to take from it the uncompleted work of valuing the railroads. It is generally understood that the Government has taken over the control of the railroads during the period of the war for every purpose directly or indirectly affecting the prosecution of the war. So that the effect of the adoption of this amendment would be to leave with the Government the absolute and unlimited control of the railroads for the prosecution of the war, but leave with the Interstate Commerce Commission its rate-making and classification powers and its great work, still uncompleted, of placing a valuation upon all the railway systems of the country.

It will be remembered that when the bill to take over the railroads was presented by the administration it provided that the rate-making power should be transferred from the Interstate Commerce Commission to the President or Director General of Railroads. The necessity and advisability of such action was carefully considered and extensively debated in both the Senate and House, and as a result the rate-making power was left with the commission. It was thought that such transfer was unnecessary, because rate making was a purely civil business question arising between the railroads and the people, and had nothing to do with the conduct of the war. It was believed that it would be unwise to take a power so technical and intricate from a body especially selected and experienced in such matters and confer it upon anyone not trained nor adapted for such work. Now we are considering an administrative measure which, in effect, repeals our act so recently adopted and gives the President power to transfer all such powers and functions from the commission to the Director General. That action we know is especially desired by the administration, and the power to take such action is conferred by the terms of this bill unless the amendment is adopted.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes; for a question.

Mr. MORGAN. The gentleman is familiar with the proviso in line 17, page 2, which says that the authority by this act granted shall relate only to the conduct of the war. Does not that cover the point the gentleman has made?

Mr. TOWNER. I do not think so. The act will be administered and interpreted by the President, as he is advised by those who are in control of the railroads. We know what their interpretation will be. They believed when the railroad act was before us that rate making was in some mysterious manner connected with the prosecution of the war. The Congress took a different view. It believed that the making of rates between the railroads and the people, operating upon the purely civil business of the country, had nothing to do with the prosecution of the war. If we now grant the power of transfer, it is only reasonable to suppose it will be exercised.

THE RATE-MAKING POWER.

Gentlemen advocating granting without restriction the powers contained in this bill as applied to the Interstate Commerce Commission argue that if there are increased expenditures the rates must be raised, and therefore the transfer would be justified. But there would be no justification for the transfer on that ground unless it be assumed that the Interstate Commerce Commission would not raise the rates to meet increased expenditures. Such an assumption is not warranted. On the contrary, the commission is much better qualified, both by knowledge and experience, to rearrange rates so as to meet increased expenditures than any person without such knowledge and experience.

A still stronger and more vital reason exists why any rearrangement of rates should be made by the commission. Rate increases are made by the commission sitting as a court, on hearing, upon evidence submitted, after argument of counsel. It is not practicable and it is not contemplated that changes in rates should be so made by the Director General. The method of hearings and the manner of submissions have been settled after long and varied experience. Precedents have been established; the practice is understood and determined; counsel know how to prepare cases for submission, and that orderly procedure which is essential to a fair hearing and an impartial finding is determined. All this will have to be abandoned if the contemplated transfer is made.

It is not alone necessary in order to meet increased expenditures without injustice that merely an increased revenue should be considered. There must be in any contemplated readjustment of rates a consideration of how particular increases will affect particular communities and localities. There must also be considered the proportion of increases which should be applied to various commodities involving very intricate and puzzling questions of classification. Questions of discrimination are not only difficult and demand both technical knowledge and long experience, but they are so momentous in their consequences that the greatest care should be exercised to prevent injustice. Cities have been ruined, communities have been depopulated, because discriminating rates were imposed against them. The development of a country's resources may be prevented, any business may be ruined, by the imposition of a discriminating rate. The facts regarding such conditions must be disclosed and the rates so adjusted as to cause as little injury as possible.

But it is said we can and should trust the President. Those who argue against granting the power to abolish the commission do not distrust the President. No one would claim that he is qualified to pass upon questions of rate making or classification, or discrimination. He would not himself claim that he was so qualified. He would not attempt to pass upon such questions unadvised. But who would advise him? We do not know. We are justified in distrusting an unknown and undisclosed advisor. We could not justify ourselves as representatives of the people in giving such tremendous powers so vitally affecting the people's interests to be used by some one who may be antagonistic or indifferent to their welfare. The President might trust such unknown advisor, but the people might deeply distrust him. A tribunal should act in such important matter which would hold the confidence of both the President and the people.

No one man can properly determine railroad rates. More than 10,000 changes in rates and classifications are submitted to the commission for determination in a single year, and yet it is proposed to transfer this power from a learned and experienced body of nine men to an untrained, inexperienced man already burdened with a multiplicity of duties. Only a few months ago we enlarged the commission from seven to nine members, because of the constant increase in its duties. Now, with all the additional burdens and complications occasioned by the war it is proposed to reduce the commission to one and to transfer its tremendous volume of work to an individual.

Already there are 44 volumes of the printed reports of the decisions of the Interstate Commerce Commission. Some of the opinions cover hundreds of pages of these volumes. In learning, discriminating judgment, in dignity of utterance these decisions would do credit to any appellate court. Time and again the Supreme Court of the United States in reviewing these decisions has commented on the learning displayed and the force and logic of their conclusions.

In the St. Louis case, Manufacturers Railway Co. v. United States, decided April 15, 1918, wherein the Supreme Court reviewed and affirmed an important finding of the commission, Mr. Justice Pitney, speaking for the court, said:

Whether a preference of advantage or discrimination is undue or unreasonable or unjust is one of those questions of fact that have been confided by Congress to the judgment and discretion of the commission, and upon which its decisions, made the basis of administrative orders, operating in futuro, are not to be disturbed by the courts except upon a showing that they are unsupported by evidence, were made without a hearing, exceed constitutional limits, or for some other reason amount to an abuse of power.

Something of the importance of the issues that are determined by the commission and the nature of the duties conferred upon it can be ascertained from that statement of the court. Something also of the tremendous responsibilities resting upon the commission and the far-reaching effect of its decisions can be understood from the court's statement. It is inconceivable that gentlemen can seriously contemplate the destruction of such a tribunal. It is to preserve it for a continuance of its beneficent and essential work that this amendment is proposed.

VALUATION OF RAILROADS.

There is another reason why the power to transfer the functions of the Interstate Commerce Commission should not be given thus broadly and without reservation.

In 1913 Congress conferred on the Interstate Commerce Commission the power and the duty of valuing the railroad property of the United States. That great task was undertaken by the commission and is now in progress of accomplishment. Something like $11,000,000 has already been expended on this work.

To take from the Interstate Commerce Commission its power to proceed with its valuation of railway property would be a calamity, indeed. For three and a half years this work has gone forward, and it will not be completed for some time yet. It is an immense undertaking, and when completed will be of great value from every standpoint. It will make no difference whether the Government shall both own and control the railroads or whether a mere oversight and control is provided when the war is over, a valuation of the various railway systems is essential.

It has been well said that a more important work than this was never entered upon by any body ever created by the authority of the Government. The magnitude of the work is exceedingly great. Hundreds of experts, engineers, accountants, and examiners have been engaged for years on this huge task, and it will be two years more before it can be completed. To contemplate the abandonment of this work would be folly. To consider transferring this power from the commission to any person or another body would seem so inexpedient and unwise as to be impossible of serious consideration. And yet we are asked to grant the power to the President by a simple order to either abandon the work or transfer it to any person or to any other board or commission he may designate.

It should be understood that this great work has been under attack by powerful influences from the first. There is a large number of very able and very influential persons who desire to prevent the completion of this undertaking. If they could obtain the ear of the President and win his approval, their purpose could be easily accomplished. It is easily conceivable that the President, with the best of motives and with the most patriotic purpose, could be induced to abandon or transfer this work. It is not wise to take such a risk at such a time.

It can not be too strongly emphasized that only a few weeks ago, after the fullest debate and the most careful consideration, Congress determined that it would not be wise to grant the power to the President to take from the commission its powers and transfer them to the Director General of Railroads. We are now asked to reconsider such action and repeal such law. Gentlemen have said during this debate that the President has no intention of divesting the commission of its rate-making power or of taking from it the work of valuing the railroads. If that be true, then we ought not to grant to him that power. If he does not intend to use it, he does not need it. But the statement that the President does not intend to use the power is not authorized. We know that those nearest to him and whose advice he is most likely to follow desire, and greatly desire, that he should use the power. Unless the exercise of the power asked to be granted is justified on its merits, it is our duty to refuse to grant it. It is the people's rights, the people's interests that are involved, and as their Representatives we should not surrender or sacrifice them.

Mr. Speaker, if this question were an exercise of a war power, I should not hesitate. I believe in the largest grant and the largest exercise of the Executive power in the prosecution of the war. I have in the past and I shall in the future give the President the amplest power and the fullest support in carrying this war to an early and a successful conclusion. But this is not a war question. It is a purely civil question involving the merely business interests of the people. That being the case, we should act on the merits of the proposition and determine it as we believe it will be injurious or beneficial in its effect on the people of the country. For that reason and upon those grounds I believe there is ample justification for the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. WEBB. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN], a member of the committee.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this amendment for a number of reasons. I know of no reason why we should discriminate in favor of the Interstate Commerce Commission. There are other commissions as important as the Interstate Commerce Commission. There are other commissions that might more properly be excluded. We have recently taken over the control of the railways. Necessarily the work of the Interstate Commerce Commission is more or less restricted. There is, therefore, I think, good reason why the Director General of Railroads might utilize the Interstate Commerce Commission, or a part of it, and the force of experts it employs. This amendment excludes the Interstate Commerce Commission, except subordinate employees. I do not know how the term "subordinate employees" would be construed. I presume, however, that "subordinate employees" would mean anybody except the commissioners. But if the President would take away all of the employees under the commission it would be powerless to do anything. We should not except any of the executive or administrative commissions, bureaus, or agencies. The President should be given a free hand and held responsible for the results. This is the only wise, practical, sensible thing to do. We ought not to quibble over small things. There are too many great things pending. The times now deal with questions of life and death. The issues now involve the existence and perpetuity of nations. They involve the destiny of the whole human race. The object of this bill is to give the United States greater power in settling these great questions right. I am opposed to any amendments that might prevent the bill from accomplishing the great purpose for which it is to be passed. We should either give the President all of this power and give it to him ungrudgingly, or give him none of it. We should not tie his hands. If he may be safely intrusted with any of this power he may be trusted with all of it. There is nothing peculiarly sacred about the Interstate Commerce Commission, and to exclude it from the provisions of the bill would be most unfortunate.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, the illogical position of those opposed to the amendment was shown by the gentleman from Nebraska when he said that the chief excuse for opposition to the amendment was that the President would not exercise the power if granted.

Mr. REAVIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. REAVIS. What I said was that the principal argument for granting the powers to be exercised was that they would not be exercised.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I stated it conversely, but it comes to the same conclusion. Gentlemen say that there is no need for passing the amendment because the President will not exercise the power. Then why not permit the amendment to pass? I have only heard one gentleman, and that was the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN], advocate the taking away the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission. No other gentleman, so far as I know, desires or wishes any such thing to come to pass. The reason is very plain. The Interstate Commerce Commission is a semijudicial body; it has powers to hear evidence, try cases, make findings, and enter judgments, and there is no other body to which those powers could be properly transferred.

Mr. STEELE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. STEELE. Do I understand the gentleman to say that the Interstate Commerce Commission is a judicial body?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I said a semijudicial body.

Mr. STEELE. In the opinion of the gentleman, are the duties of the Interstate Commerce Commission judicial or administrative?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Oh, I do not care to enter into any discussion of that question.

Mr. STEELE. It makes some difference as to this bill. If they are judicial the bill would not apply.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman continues to pervert my language. I told him that I did not say that their duties were judicial, but he insists that I did.

Mr. MORGAN. If the gentleman from Iowa will pardon me, I thought I heard him make some reference to some position I took. My attention was being diverted, and I would be glad if he would restate his proposition.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I understood the gentleman from Oklahoma to say that he had no objection to the functions of the Interstate Commerce Commission being taken away from that body.

Mr. MORGAN. I did not exactly say that.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. All right; let it go; I do not care to have any controversy about that. What I say is, the functions of the Interstate Commerce Commission ought not to be taken away, because there is no other body to which they can properly be transferred. We have no other board, commission, or court that can perform the same duties in the same manner that the Interstate Commerce Commission now performs them. For nearly a quarter of a century the people worked and endeavored through their Representatives to obtain the rights and privileges conferred through the establishent of the Interstate Commerce Commission. One of the greatest struggles ever known in this Congress occurred over the establishment of this commission, and when it was in fact brought into power there has never been any board or commission in this country more influential in maintaining the rights of the people against unjust discrimination in railroad rates than has this board. Subsequently there was an attempt to establish a commerce court which would take away some of the Interstate Commerce Commission's powers. We passed over a President's veto a bill abolishing the Commerce Court by an overwhelming vote. So firmly intrenched was that commission that I never supposed that any gentleman would ever advocate in any way or in any way countenance the proposition that that commission be deprived of its duties or functions. But now, for some reason not connected at all with the war that I can see, this proposition to give the power at least of depriving this board of its duties and functions is embodied in the bill.

Mr. WEBB. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. WEBB. Is the gentleman fearful that the President will raise rates or lower rates of the railroads if he has this power?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Let me answer the gentleman by a counterquestion: What has that to do with the argument?

Mr. WEBB. It has a vital relation to the argument, because if the President proposes to raise the rates the President is not going to get the money; it is going to the Treasury of the Government; and if we have to have the money that is one source of raising it.

Mr. RAYBURN. If he is going to raise or lower the rates, is not that a question that ought to be first passed upon by the Interstate Commerce Commission?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It is a matter that requires the most expert knowledge.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. MORGAN. Has not the President the power now to initiate, and do not the rates stand until there is a hearing by the Interstate Commerce Commission?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes; and that shows the value of the commission. There is no question that needs so much study and expert knowledge as the fixing of rates. It involves so many other questions. In the act of settling one rate you may upset hundreds and even thousands of others, and no one but experts can properly pass upon it. We have built up a board capable of passing on these questions, and it is the only board in the country that could be properly allowed to pass on these questions.

The bill which we passed with reference to railroads still preserved to this board its power and duties in this respect. The President can, as the gentleman from Oklahoma says, initiate rates, but they must be referred to the Interstate Commerce Commission for a hearing, because that is the only board in the country competent to sit on that subject, and the right to be heard should be preserved.

Mr. HARDY. Is not the gentleman mistaken about rates initiated by the Director General having to be referred to the board? They may be appealed from, and then on appeal a hearing is granted.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Oh, that is a distinction without a difference.

Mr. HARDY. The rates initiated by the Director General go into effect at once.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do not care about that. The party whom they affect still has the right to have the Interstate Commerce Commission pass on the rates, and that right ought to be preserved. The only way to preserve it is by this amendment.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DEWALT].

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Speaker, with all due respect to the opinion of my friend from Iowa, Mr. GREEN, it seems to me that the discussion which he has pursued is rather an academic one. Why academic? In the railroad bill which was passed a very short time ago the power of initiating rates was given to the President of the United States. You will all remember that the Sweet amendment proposed that the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission should be retained by that body, but you will remember also that the original bill, the railroad bill, as it was called, contained these words:

> Until and except so far as the President shall from time to time otherwise order, the rates, fares, charges, classifications, regulations and practices of carriers under Federal control shall during the period of Federal control continue to be and to be determined as hitherto. But when in the judgment of the President it is necessary in the public interest he may initiate rates, fares, charges, classifications, regulations, or practices, or changes therein by filing the same with the Interstate Commerce Commission in such form and at such time and upon such notice as he shall direct. All rates, fares, charges, classifications, regulations, and practices, or changes therein so ordered, shall be fair, reasonable, and just; and the Interstate Commerce Commission shall upon complaint make investigation and grant full hearings concerning the fairness, justice, and reasonableness of any rates, fares, charges, classifications, regulations, or practices, or changes therein so ordered by the President; and shall make report of its findings and recommendations concerning the same (which findings and recommendations shall prima facie be taken as correct) to the President for such action as the President may deem required in the public interest.

That is the provision of the present railroad act. In other words, the President has the right to initiate rates, and those rates shall be submitted by him to the Interstate Commerce Commission. Upon complaint made, the commission may hear the evidence in regard to the reasonableness and fairness thereof. As I understand the contention of the gentleman from Iowa, it is simply this, that by the provisions of this act the President may, in his discretion, remove the authority of the Interstate Commerce Commission. Am I correct in that statement?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I have relied somewhat on gentlemen on the other side with reference to that, two or three of whom at least have so asserted.

Mr. DEWALT. The only reasonable inference, then, would be this, that the President, in his discretion, might take away from the Interstate Commerce Commission the right of review of his initiation of rates, as to the reasonableness of those rates and charges.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEWALT. Certainly.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman surely does not mean to say that this is all the power the Interstate Commerce Commission has?

Mr. DEWALT. Oh, no. I am speaking of the provision of the rate-fixing power. The other provisions in regard to the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission under the Sherman Act are positively now nullified, as the gentleman well knows—that is, in regard to determination of routes and things of that sort. That has all been nullified by the railroad-control bill, so that actually at this time almost all the powers conferred upon the Interstate Commerce Commission are simply these: The regulation of rates——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute more to the gentleman.

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Speaker, I was about continuing in this way, that the residuum of the argument of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] and those who are opposed to the granting of this power to the President is simply this, that the President would, by the authority given by this act, have the power to take away from the Interstate Commerce Commission the power of review. Supposing he does take it away. I for my purpose would argue in this way, that it would be the height of absurdity to take it away, because the Interstate Commerce Commission is the body most competent to judge of this very matter, and he would simply be impeding his own regulation and efficiency by so doing; but the only inference you can draw from the powers you say the President has, is that he may confer them, upon whom? The Director General of Railroads. If the Director General of Railroads finds it necessary in the emergency to provide for a deficiency of $300,000,000 in receipts of railroad companies, to make up a deficit in the management thereof, I say that immediately that power should be given to the President of the United States, but the power of review and the power of adjustment still remains in the Interstate Commerce Commission and is not taken away by the provisions of this bill. [Applause.]

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to use a few moments of the time remaining on this side in reply to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DEWALT]. Of course, if the President does not exercise the power of transferring the functions of the Interstate Commerce Commission to some one else their functions will not be interfered with, and it is natural to suppose, inasmuch as we have a Director General of Railroads, who is at the present time considering the matter of adjusting the wages of the railroad employees, and properly so, that when it comes to the matter of revenue the President will have in mind the appeals which have been heretofore made to the Interstate Commerce Commission and their refusal to raise the rates, and possibly he may decide that he will confer not only the right of review which is vested in the Interstate Commerce Commission by the railroad act, but all its other rights and functions to the Director General of Railroads, arguing upon the line that inasmuch as he has to supervise the control of these carriers under the railroad act, we might just as well turn over the matter of the regulation and the rate-making power to him. Now, I submit if that were in contemplation that it would not be a proper exercise of the powers as contained in this measure, that we should preserve by legislation the rights which we have previously given to the Interstate Commerce Commission, and that we should not make it possible for the Executive to transfer the right of review of his action in initiating rates to any other official.

Mr. DEWALT. But, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. WALSH. I will yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. DEWALT. But it seems to me that the gentleman from Massachusetts misses the point of the argument.

Mr. WALSH. Very likely I do.

Mr. DEWALT. The purposes of this bill are simply coordination and the transfer of powers from one department to the other. Is that true?

Mr. WALSH. I do not agree with the gentleman.

Mr. DEWALT. Well, that seems to have been the argument through the process of this debate.

Mr. WALSH. I can not agree with the gentleman.

Mr. DEWALT. Suppose the gentleman did not agree with me, nevertheless the body of the House seems to take that position. Now, let me give the gentleman a parallel instance. The gentleman, being a lawyer, knows that the supreme court, possibly, of his State consists of 8 or 10 members; in our State it consists of 9. We will say for the purpose of argument that the gentleman from Massachusetts is the presiding judge of the supreme court—the chief justice, if you please. He will have eight confreres on the supreme bench. We will say for the purpose of argument that the chief justice has the decision of matters which are being submitted to him. Does the gentleman mean to say that the chief justice would not consult with the other eight members of the court? Why, certainly he would.

Now, granting, for the sake of argument, that the President might, if you please, remove the power from the Interstate Commerce Commission as to the advisability of changing rates, routing traffic, and so forth. Does the gentleman mean to say that it is at all likely, that it is at all possible, that he would not consult the constituted body—in other words, his eight confreres upon the bench?

Mr. WALSH. I mean to say this in reply to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that whether he consulted with them or not, that if he consulted with them and their views did not meet with the approval of the Director General of Railroads, that their views would go into the discard and the Director General of Railroads would prevail; and I want to say that we ought not to destroy the power and authority of that great ommission which for years has been studying the problem of rates and regulations of railroads and permit by this legislation a transfer of all its functions to one man, who might consult with them as to what they thought, but if their views did not meet with his approval their views would not prevail.

Mr. DEWALT. Will my friend permit?

Mr. WALSH. I will yield further, if I have time.

Mr. DEWALT. In the first place, I think the gentleman's assumption is a violent one. In the second place, I do not think it is founded upon facts in regard to the administration and the course it has pursued; and in the third place, I do not think the gentleman's argument is well founded for this reason, that this bill being for the purpose of coordinating the efficiency of the different departments it does not by its provisions in any measure, nor can it be construed in any measure, to remove from the Interstate Commerce Commission the right of review. That still remains with it.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I do not agree with the gentleman, nor do I agree with anybody who holds those views, because when this matter was discussed in the other body and when it was discussed in committee and when it was discussed upon the floor of the House the words "to make such redistribution of functions" do not confine it to simply coordinating and consolidating the executive departments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I understand that all time on this side has now expired.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Yes.

Mr. WEBB. I will yield one minute to the gentleman from Massachusetts in order to enable him to answer a question.

Mr. RAYBURN. I wanted to ask the gentleman this question, in reply to the gentleman from Pennsylvania. We all agree, of course, that the Interstate Commerce Commission now under the railroad-control bill is the final arbiter in rates if complaint is made. This language here says, "to make such redistribution of functions among executive agencies as he may deem necessary, including any functions, duties, and powers hitherto by law conferred upon any executive department, commission, bureau, agency, office, or officer," and so forth.

Now, the last expression of the Director General being that he wants the power to fix rates himself without consultation of the Interstate Commerce Commission, does not the gentleman think that it is conclusive under this language here that he will have that power and in all probability he will exercise it?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is any doubt of that, particularly when you read the language of section 1 in connection with the coordination and consolidation language of section 2. The strong term in that regard is "redistribution," because that means you can pass from one board to a single individual this power and function. You do not have to redistribute them among the same board or among the same personnel. He can transfer it absolutely from the Interstate Commerce Commission to the Federal Trade Commission if he saw fit, or from the Federal Trade Commission to the Director General of Railroads under the language of this act.

Mr. ESCH. Under that power might he not transfer the power of physical valuation of railroads to an individual?

Mr. WALSH. He certainly could. I thank the gentleman from North Carolina for yielding me that time.

Mr. WEBB. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD].

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, it is well I think to understand exactly what the amendment offered is. As I recall, it provides in terms for the exclusion of that body known as the Interstate Commerce Commission and provides that the President may require subordinate officers of the commission to be assigned to any other commission or bureau or department or office.

The Interstate Commerce Commission is recognized as being distinguished from other commissions in that it had a quasi-judicial jurisdiction. In other words, it could, upon appeal, find from a certain state of facts and make an order, which order was capable of enforcement, thereby establishing its order within the realm of that which is ordinarily considered a judicial decision. It seems to me that the Interstate Commerce Commission should be included in this bill, and should not be excluded from the bill, because my view of the matter is, as I have tried heretofore to express, that every utility in the United States, every commission, every bureau, every department, should afford its best work toward the end that we may have a better, a more superior efficiency. For the purpose of the practicality of the time, the transportation of to-day means the national security and defense, because it does; the transportation upon railroads first must mean the transportation of troops where they will be most effective; second, the transfer of foodstuffs and equipments, including all sorts of munitions of war. This is the first work of the railroad; this is the work to which everything else must be subordinated. So that the question of the fixing of rates, which has been the power of the Interstate Commerce Commission, even this great power should be subservient to the military emergency. But I think the amendment should not be adopted, for the reason that the Interstate Commerce Commission is a body of men trained by long years of experience in the fixing of railroad rates and in determining what should be the payments of railroads. Now, if there is a body which could properly act with the Director General of Railroads under our railroad-control bill it is the Interstate Commerce Commission. And I would not have them excluded from the operation of this bill. I would not say that the Interstate Commerce Commission may not act, but that the subordinates of the Interstate Commerce Commission might act. I would say that the best authority which the Interstate Commerce Commission can afford should be given to the present control of the railroads of the United States. And, therefore, it would seem to me, that, instead of asking that the Interstate Commerce Commission be excluded, it be by all means included, because I would not have a subordinate to give assistance when the principals could afford it. I would have the assistance come from the source which could bring the most and best information.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will my colleague yield for a question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] has expired.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I take it that this bill does include the Interstate Commerce Commission, and it ought to include it, because, as I said a moment ago, there are a thousand expert trained men in this commission who during the Government control of railroads, as long as the war lasts, will be to a certain extent more or less idle, and those employees ought to be used by the President in any department of Government he may think they can best help to win this war.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. In just a moment.

Gentlemen are afraid that the President will transfer the rate-making power to Mr. McAdoo or somebody else. That suggestion has no terrors for me, Mr. Speaker, although I will tell the House what the President tells me, that he has no notion of so doing; that he expects to lean on the experts of the Interstate Commerce Commission, as the country has leaned on them in the past. Whenever he discovers there is a Government deficit in the railroads and he needs $300,000,000 or $400,000,000, he will report it to the Interstate Commerce Commission and probably ask them if they can prepare a scientific raise of rates that will bring in enough revenue to meet such deficit. And if they do it, they will avoid the necessity on the part of this Congress raising the money from some other source, either by taxation or by sale of bonds. The roads are ours to all intents and purposes, and the Interstate Commerce Commission and the railroads for the present belong to the same sovereign power—the people of the United States.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Leaving out the question of the rate-making power, would the gentleman advocate the transfer of the power of valuation of railroads from the Interstate Commerce Commission?

Mr. WEBB. I do not see who else could value the railroads, except the army of experts that are doing it now, and I would not assume that the President would transfer this task to any other department of the Government, and I will not do it, and I think the gentleman will not do it. I value the Interstate Commerce Commission. It is a great body of men. And so does the President. But, so far as I am concerned, if it were necessary to abolish absolutely the Interstate Commerce Commission—every vestige of it—during the pendency of this war, in order to make us successful in this great struggle, I would gladly abolish it, and I believe every Member of this House would do it, too. Besides, I am assured that the President is not going to abolish the rate-making functions of this commission. Suppose he should transfer the rate making to Mr. McAdoo—which would probably mean to the President himself—then what? That is nothing new. It has not been longer than three months ago since the House did that very thing by a vote of 210 to 165. And 45 distinguished Republicans voted to give the President the absolute power to fix railroad rates. Why should we haggle here now on the mere possibility of his assuming that authority? Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. BAER. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A division is demanded.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 40, noes 47.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is not. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. Those in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] will, when their names are called, answer "yea"; those opposed will answer "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 88, nays 213, answered "present" 1, not voting 128, as follows:

On this vote:
Mr. WINSLOW (for) with Mr. DUPRÉ (against).

Mr. TALBOTT. Mr. Speaker, has the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BROWNING] voted?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Jersey has voted.

Mr. TALBOTT. Then I will allow my vote of "yea" to stand.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. Speaker, I have a general pair with the gentleman from Washington [Mr. DILL]. So I withdraw my vote of "yea" and vote "present."

Mr. HENSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to suggest the absence of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] on account of illness.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A quorum is present. The amendment is rejected. The Doorkeeper will unlock the doors.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Amendment offered by Mr. LONGWORTH: Page 2, line 19, at the end of section 6, insert:

"Provided further, That the authority by this act granted shall not extend to the functions, duties, or powers of the War Finance Corporation or the Capital Securities Committee."

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I shall not detain the House with a discussion of this amendment. I discussed it very fully this morning. I appreciate the feeling of the House toward the passage of this bill, and I merely ask for a vote on this amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH].

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. LONGWORTH) there were—ayes 61, noes 109.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STERLING of Illinois: Strike out, beginning on line 4, page 2, the words, "to carry out the purposes of this act" and insert the following: "To make said departments, commissions, bureaus, agencies, offices, and officers more effective in the prosecution of the war and in the interest of a more efficient concentration of government."

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I should like to call the attention of the chairman of the committee [Mr. WEBB] to this amendment. It seems to me that the language of the bill is without sense in the words which I propose to strike out. It says that the President may do these things in such a manner as in his judgment shall seem best fitted to carry out the purposes of this act.

Now, what are the purposes of this act? The purposes of the act are to authorize the redistribution of the executive departments, bureaus, and agencies of the Government. If you will analyze the sentence as it stands in the bill, it simply means that the President is authorized to do these things in a manner best fitted in his judgment to do them. The only purpose of the act is to redistribute the functions of the agencies of the Government. The purpose of the act is stated in the paragraph above. It seems to me not to make sense. It ought to state that he is authorized to do it in the manner best calculated to make the agencies, departments, and bureaus more efficient in the prosecution of the war, or in the language used in the title of the bill, more effective in the concentration of government. It seems to me the language ought to be stricken out and the language I propose inserted.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman's amendment would restrict the bill entirely too much. The purposes of the act are set forth in the first section. It is for the national security and defense, for the successful prosecution of the war, and for the support and maintenance of the Army and Navy, for the better utilization of resources and industries, and for the support of the land and naval forces. That is the purpose of the act, and anything that comes within that purpose ought to be allowed the President to do. It is restricted too much, some think, by the last proviso, that the authority shall be exercised only in matters relating to the conduct of the present war. Many gentlemen would be glad to have the power exercised in time of peace. I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois will not be adopted because it will restrict the purposes of the bill.

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. If the gentleman will note the language proposed to be stricken out, "to carry out the purposes of this act." What are the purposes of the act? Why, it is to redistribute these functions and duties of the several executive departments of the Government so as to make them more effective.

Mr. WEBB. And in the interest of national defense, the support of the Army and Navy, in the administration of the Government.

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. The only purpose of the act is to give the President power to redistribute the functions and duties of the several executive agencies of the Government.

Mr. WEBB. And all these acts must be connected with the national defense and the effective administration of the Government for the maintenance of the Army and the Navy.

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. When you say "carry out the purposes of this act" you simply say that the President shall do the things in a manner which in his judgment is best fitted to do the things. It is meaningless.

Mr. WEBB. It gives discretion in coordinating the various duties and functions of the various branches or the abolition of them, as to whether or not it will aid in the national defense and prosecution of the war in support of the Army and Navy.

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. I think the gentleman confuses the purposes of the act with the thing that he seeks to accomplish by the act, which is giving the President power to redistribute the functions and duties of the executive agency of the Government.

Mr. WEBB. No; that is not the whole purpose.

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. The purpose is to redistribute the functions and agencies of the administrative bureaus and that he may concentrate them for the more efficient work of the Government. Why not say so instead of simply repeating what is inferred from the language that goes before?

Mr. WEBB. If you only repeat the language, there is no need for the amendment.

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. It is not a repetition.

Mr. WEBB. I think the purposes of the bill are thoroughly set forth in the first section.

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. I agree that they are set forth in the first section, and that is to give the President the power to do these things in a manner which in his judgment is best fitted to do the things. That is not the idea. It is to give him the power to attain the end which we are seeking to arrive at.

Mr. WEBB. The language the gentleman wants to strike out is "to carry out the purposes of this act," which is for the national security and defense and successful prosecution of the war and the support and maintenance of the Army and Navy. I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. STERLING].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD].

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that it is apparent that there is no real opposition to the bill on either side, it would seem that if you agree with me that the first two sections could be put in a better and more logical form that there is no good reason why we should not do so. It is perfectly evident to anyone that reads the two sections that they relate to the same subject, still whoever drafted the bill did not seem to realize that fact. They give power to the President to effect this reorganization. What I am trying to accomplish is the consolidation of the two sections, so as to embody in compact form the power granted. The provision in reference to the repeal of the act should be put with the repealing section at the end of the bill.

Of course I realize it is useless to appeal to the House if it has made up its mind it will not dot an "i" or cross a "t," and I would not appeal to you if this was a partisan measure; but here is a measure that both sides are substantially agreed on, and the question is simply this, Are we to pass this bill in the ill-shaped, illogical form in which it is now or shall we correct it? There is not a thing in the amendment as I propose it to the House that will take from the President any power given in the bill. It will grant just exactly the same power; grant it much more clearly and just as effectively as the original bill. If this amendment is adopted, I shall move to strike out section 2 and add the provisions in reference to the repeal of existing laws now in section 1 at the end of the bill with the repealing section of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That the President is further authorized to establish an executive agency which may exercise such jurisdiction and control over the production of aeroplanes, aeroplane engines, and aircraft equipment as in his judgment may be advantageous; and, further, to transfer to such agency for its use all or any moneys heretofore appropriated for the production of aeroplanes, aeroplane engines, and aircraft equipment.

Mr. GOULD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GOULD: Page 3, lines 4 to 11, strike out all of section 3 and insert in lieu thereof as section 3 the following:

"SEC. 3. That there is hereby created an executive agency which shall have full jurisdiction and control over all governmental activities in connection with aeronautics except operation; the agency so created shall be in charge of an aircraft administrator to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate; there shall be transferred to such agency for its use all or any moneys heretofore appropriated for the production of aeroplanes, aeroplane engines, and aircraft equipment and accessories; and further, the President is hereby authorized to take such other steps as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this section."

Mr. GOULD. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me from the record of what has gone on with respect to our aircraft problems and the developments in the hearings in connection with the Senate Committee on Military Affairs and various other data that have been brought to the attention of Congress, my amendment should be adopted. The essential point of difference between the bill as written and the amendment rests with the two words "may" and "shall." The bill, as written, would permit the President to make changes. The amendment, as I have offered it, says that it shall be done. My reason for the suggestion is the fact which has been referred to here in the House that if we are going to have the successful completion of any of our programs, the President and the heads of the different departments must be given full authority. The Aircraft Board at the present time, according to the information which has been given us, has not that authority. I was told this morning that in an airplane manufacturing plant there are to-day 50 planes tested and ready for shipment which probably can not leave that plant for from two to three weeks, because there are no wire wheels to supply the airplanes, so that they can be used by our boys.

I am further advised that the reason why these wheels are not available is because of muddling. Various engineers and those connected with the Signal Corps and the Aircraft Board have caused to be placed contracts for wire wheels, which are a failure, and thousands of them, I am advised, undoubtedly must be scrapped. The Aircraft Administration ought to have a man the size of Mr. Ryan, whom I am told the President plans to have take charge of the program. So far as I know his record is fine, and he has great ability, but what is the sense of asking Mr. Ryan, or Mr. Schwab, or God Almighty himself to take charge of a program unless he is to be it, and this amendment which I have offered will put the authority in the hands of the man who is selected, and will enable him to go ahead and do business, and that is what we have got to have. [Applause.] I am sick and tired, so far as I am personally concerned, from my experience around the various departments, of hearing the excuses that are made for delays and the habit men have of passing the buck, and all I can say is that if our aircraft program is to come out all right, we have got to give a man authority to do business, and I urge the adoption of this amendment in the interest of our country and all of us. [Applause.]

Mr. DECKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOULD. Yes.

Mr. DECKER. I do not understand the difference between the gentleman's amendment and the provision in the bill.

Mr. GOULD. Essentially the word "may" is in the body of the bill.

Mr. DECKER. Who may, the President or Mr. Ryan?

Mr. GOULD. The President, of course.

Mr. DECKER. Where do you want to lodge the power?

Mr. GOULD. In the Aircraft Administrator, subject to the direct orders of the President.

Mr. DECKER. It is the difference between "may" and "shall"?

Mr. GOULD. Yes.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I just want to say that I hope the House will not adopt the amendment, because I think section 3 covers everything the gentleman wants, with the exception that we authorize the President to do this, and he says that he shall do it. The President has already done what the gentleman desires—he has appointed Mr. Ryan the head of this Aircraft Board, and when section 3 is passed he will have the authority to establish his executive agency, over which Mr. Ryan will preside, and all of the money appropriated will go into Mr. Ryan's charge, to be used in doing this work.

Mr. GOULD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. With pleasure.

Mr. GOULD. May I ask the gentleman if he is in a position to tell the House how long this matter of realigning of the aircraft-production board reorganization has been under consideration by the Executive?

Mr. WEBB. Really, I can not tell, and I do not know that anybody knows that. Of course, I can not tell.

Mr. GOULD. Well, I have reason to believe, from what I have been told—I am not prepared to vouch for the information—that the general lines of the reorganization of the Aircraft Board—practically on the same lines as the bill which I introduced here several weeks ago, and of which at that time I had no knowledge—had been prepared and submitted to President Wilson in January or February of this year, and up to the time the Senate Military Affairs Committee brought forth the condition that existed nothing had been done. That is my reason——

Mr. WEBB. That may be so.

Mr. GOULD (continuing). For suggesting that we had better take quick action, and there certainly can be no harm in the House of Representatives suggesting to the President that we, as representatives of the people, would like to have things hurried up, if possible.

Mr. WEBB. That is exactly what we are doing in section 3 of the bill, and the President has already, as I say, appointed

Mr. Ryan executive head of this force, and we propose to turn over the money to this executive head, so something will be accomplished and accomplished speedily.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the noes appeared to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. GOULD) there were—ayes 62, noes 99.

Mr. GOULD. I demand the yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Those in favor of taking the vote by yeas and nays will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Twenty Members have arisen, not a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are refused.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act, any moneys heretofore and hereafter appropriated for the use of any executive department, commission, bureau, agency, office, or officer shall be expended only for the purposes for which it was appropriated under the direction of such other agency as may be directed by the President hereunder to perform and execute said function.

Mr. DECKER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to give my hearty support to this bill. I believe the purpose sought is important and far-reaching. This bill gives to the President power to coordinate and consolidate the different executive and administrative commissions, bureaus, agencies, offices, and departments of this Government. It gives him power to redistribute among these different departments the different functions, duties, and powers hitherto conferred by law as, in his judgment and wisdom, he may see fit in order to better utilize our resources and industries and to uphold the Army and Navy in this great war. It will enable him to eliminate waste and inefficiency; it will enable him to accomplish efficiency and saving; it will enable him to strike out duplication and conflict and establish harmony and coordination of effort; it will enable him to do away with the weak and worthless and to utilize the capable and strong. It is, indeed, a centralization of power, but it is also a centralization of responsibility. In order to have efficiency and effectiveness it is always necessary to fix responsibility. Efficiency is the greatest aim in time of war.

Our President is now the most powerful executive in the world. During the continuance of this war this bill will give him even greater power than he now has. As representatives of a free people we are justified in doing this, because we are in the greatest struggle of the world. In order to win this struggle, and we will win this struggle, it is necessary for our country to play the greatest part. No man here doubts that our confidence will be misplaced; no man here even suspicions that this power will be misused. I believe this bill will pass with an almost unanimous vote. It will be another expression of the confidence which the House of Representatives has in President Wilson; it will be but another expression of the absolute unity of purpose and loyalty to country of the Members of this House; it will be another evidence to the people of America that there is no party partisan politics in this body. Woe be to the man and woe be to the party who in an hour like this, when men must die, would strive for personal or party advantage. I am proud of the fact that since the declaration of war there has been no dividing line in this body. As the Speaker of this House has well said—

If a man had sat in that gallery since the declaration of war, unless he had a directory he could not tell who were Republicans and who were Democrats in this body.

Our boys are on the other side fighting for that flag we all do love, and the people throughout this country to-day are not thinking of selfish ambitions or partisanship or political advantage, and the Members of this House are standing shoulder to shoulder, not as Democrats, not as Republicans, but as Americans doing all we can to uphold our soldier boys who fight for us across the seas.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is upon the third reading of the Senate bill.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. DYER. Unless the gentleman from North Carolina is going to make the request, I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question first is upon the third reading.

The bill was ordered to be read the third time; was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, on that I ask the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 294, nays 2, answered "present" 3, not voting 131, as follows:

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from Florida, Mr. SEARS. I am informed that if he were present he would vote "aye." Therefore my vote may stand.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. HUTCHINSON, of New Jersey, is unavoidably absent. He has requested me to say that if he were present he would vote "aye."

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, my colleagues, Mr. WINSLOW and Mr. LUFKIN, are both unavoidably absent. They are both in favor of this bill and asked to me to announce that if present they would vote "aye."

Mr. BROWNE. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. FREAR, is unavoidably absent. If present, he would vote for this bill.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. SMITH, of Idaho, is detained from the House to-day on account of illness in his family.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. TIMBERLAKE, of Colorado, is unavoidably absent. If he were here, he would vote "aye" on this bill.

I am satisfied that if he were present he would vote "aye," but as I did have an understanding with him I will withdraw my vote of "aye" and answer "present."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. LA FOLLETTE, and he answered "Present."

Mr. WHALEY. Mr. Speaker, my colleagues, Mr. LEVER and Mr. DOMINICK, are unavoidably absent. If they were present, they would vote "aye" and against all amendments.

Mr. LAZARO. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. DUPRÉ, is unavoidably absent. He requested me to say that if he were present he would vote for the bill.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. WEBB, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, will the House indulge me a moment to express my great gratitude to the membership of this body, irrespective of party, for their hearty cooperation in the passage of this bill? I want to say that those who opposed the bill and those who wanted certain provisions stricken out and new ones put in have shown absolutely no disposition to be dilatory, but on the contrary the best spirit of cooperation has been exhibited in the consideration of the bill. I wish to make that expression on the part of the committee. [Applause.]

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. STEVENSON, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence for three days, on account of attending a meeting of the Democratic State Executive Committee of South Carolina.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by having printed therein a speech delivered by our Speaker, Mr. CLARK of Missouri, in Indiana last Saturday.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing the speech indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. GILLETT. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I understood that that was purely a political speech. I do not know if it is going to be the custom to print political speeches in the RECORD. There is no one whose political speech I would be so glad to have inserted in the RECORD as that of the Speaker. If it is going to be the custom to print political speeches, I do not think I shall object.

Mr. CRISP. To be perfectly frank, I have not read the speech in full, but my knowledge of the Speaker is such that I know he would not say anything in a speech of a partisan nature that would give offense or hurt the feelings of any Member of this House, and from what I have heard the speech dealt with the legislation of this body and of Congress and was of a patriotic nature, and I thought it might be of interest to put it in the RECORD.

Mr. NORTON. The gentleman thinks it perfectly proper to put it in the RECORD?

Mr. CRISP. Yes.

Mr. KITCHIN. I think it is a very nonpartisan political speech. [Laughter.]

Mr. GILLETT. I am willing for the precedent to be set.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BARNHART. Reserving the right to object——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

NEW YORK IN THE WAR.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of New York in the war.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of New York in the war. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

GEORGE CREEL.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, a few moments ago I placed in the basket a resolution asking that the Committee on Rules be instructed to make proper inquiry relative to remarks made by George Creel in New York on Sunday last. I do this because Mr. Creel has under his own name written as follows to Mr. Whigham, editor of the Metropolitan Magazine:

> We consider it right to spend that money—
> Referring to the funds of the Committee on Public Information—> to defend the Government and its war measures from misstatements that weaken the faith of the Nation in the Nation's war work. We are not worried about criticisms. We are worried about falsehoods.

Mr. Speaker, if there is any one thing that will weaken the Nation's faith in the Nation's war work, it is distrust of Congress; and when a public official or employee in a public meeting casts slurs upon this body he is going beyond his province, either as an employee or as a patriotic citizen. If he were a private individual, a muck-raking newspaper or magazine writer—which may or may not have been some people's previous record—I should not bring the matter up at this time. But this man is a public official or employee, and we should take him at his own word and not allow him to make scurrilous remarks against this body which, if believed by the people, would certainly weaken the faith of the Nation in it. Therefore, I have introduced the resolution to which I have referred, and I ask permission to extend my remarks by the insertion of three editorials that appeared in to-days New York papers touching on this situation. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing the matter indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is the gentleman from Massachusetts quite sure that Mr. Creel referred to this branch of Congress?

Mr. TREADWAY. He used the word "Congress." We are a branch of Congress.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Reserving the right to object, I will ask the gentleman if the money to which Mr. Creel refers as being expended by his publicity bureau is money appropriated by the Congress of the United States?

Mr. TREADWAY. I understand that it is taken out of a general appropriation, not for that specific purpose.

Mr. GILLETT. It is from the $100,000,000 fund.

Mr. TREADWAY. The $100,000,000 fund is what it comes out of.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the money that Mr. Creel spends come out of an appropriation made by Congress directly for his bureau, or out of an appropriation made by Congress to the President of the United States?

Mr. TREADWAY. I understand the latter to be the method.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The money that he spends is money allotted to him by the President, which Congress appropriated? It comes out of the $100,000,000 fund?

Mr. TREADWAY. Which Congress appropriated to the President for war purposes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And he is spending a vast sum of money in sending out books, pamphlets, and one thing or another. Is not that the fact?

Mr. TREADWAY. That covers another question, but I think the gentleman is correct.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If we are appropriating money to Creel I presume we could stop it.

Mr. TREADWAY. If the Committee on Rules adopts the resolution that I have introduced I think we can accomplish something in the line that the gentleman suggests.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. We can stop giving him money.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The money that Creel spends is by the authority of the President.

Mr. TREADWAY. Of course, the accounts must be approved in order to draw the money out of the $100,000,000 fund.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, so far as Creel is concerned the question arises in my mind whether the game is worth the candle. [Laughter.]

Mr. TREADWAY. I agree fully with the gentleman except to this extent, that the gentleman mentioned is not a private citizen but a public employee of the Government, and as such I think the candle is worth burning.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BARNHART. Reserving the right to object, I think it is hardly fair to leave the inference that the so-called Creel bureau is clogging the mails with publications that are useless. On the other hand, I know that Members in both branches of Congress have sent publications by this bureau to patriotic societies and individuals in vast quantities. I know that I have and that other Members of Congress have. It has been useful and helpful and instructive; it has helped the liberty loan and the Red Cross and the Young Men's Christian Association. I believe Mr. Creel ought to have credit where credit is due.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. A short time ago I saw a statement that Mr. Creel had spent $30,000,000 for advertising. He did not spend it in newspaper advertising.

Mr. BARNHART. I know, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania knows, as a printer, that it costs a vast amount of money to get out the publications that we have been sending to societies and people engaged in arousing interest in our cause.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes; and it overworks the Government Printing Office and clogs the mails, as I have indicated.

Mr. TREADWAY. I fully agree with the gentleman from Indiana in his statement that there have been excellent publications issued by the bureau. The suggestions of the gentleman from Indiana are more with reference to the remarks made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania and have no direct bearing on the resolution that I have introduced or the editorials that I asked permission to print in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts to extend his remarks in the RECORD by the publication of the editorials mentioned?

There was no objection.

Mr. TREADWAY. I append herewith editorials from the New York Tribune, the New York Sun, and the New York Times of this date:

[From the New York Tribune.]

THE SHAME OF CREEL.

At a meeting of the public forum Sunday night George Creel, chairman of the Committee on Public Information, appointed by the President to tell the people the truth, said:

According to the New York World:

"I don't like slumming, so I won't explore into the heart of Congress."

According to the New York Sun:

"Creel * * * added that he was not out slumming, and did not propose to explore the hearts of Members of Congress."

According to the New York American:

"I don't like slumming, so I am not going to explore the heart of Congress."

According to the New York Tribune:

"I don't like slumming, so I won't explore the heart of Congress for you."

The Congress, be it said for the edification of some readers of Mr. Creel's Official Bulletin, is a great American institution. It is the legislative power of the United States. Recently it passed what is called the sedition bill, under which during the war one may be imprisoned for uttering "scurrilous" or "abusive" language "about the form of government of the United States" or "any language intended to bring the form of government of the United States" into "contempt, scorn, contumely, or disrepute."

Mr. Creel's words bring Congress into contempt. Congress could abolish him. It probably won't—not yet. But what of those citizens in the twilight of making who were to be reached with educational propaganda by the Committee on Public Information? Will their respect for the American Government be increased or diminished?

[From the New York Sun.]

GEORGE CREEL'S ATTACK ON CONGRESS.

According to our neighbor, the World, George Creel, chairman of the Committee on Public Information, was asked in the course of certain remarks he made at the Church of the Ascension on Sunday evening the subjoined questions:

"What is a loyal heart?"

"Have all the Members of Congress loyal hearts?"

These interrogatories are obviously silly, and if Mr. Creel had declined to waste time answering them nobody would have blamed him. But instead of adopting this dignified course Mr. Creel replied to the inquiries in this fashion:

"I don't like slumming, and I won't explore into the heart of Congress."

If Mr. Creel's answer means anything more than an attempt to be smart, it means that he holds Congress to be a debased, ignorant body of men, politically and morally on the same level with the creatures of actual or pretended criminal occupation who were once exhibited for a fee to idle and heartless visitors anxious to see the "underworld" of great cities.

Mr. Creel, as an appointee of the President, as chairman of a committee consisting of the Secretary of State, the Secretary of War, and the Secretary of the Navy, speaks in a representative character. The administration has just succeeded in obtaining from the Congress a statute authorizing the prosecution of persons who utter words intended to bring the Government of the United States into contempt. Yet Mr. Creel in this phrase has held the Congress, one of the three departments of the Government, up to contempt.

It is unnecessary to speak of the ingratitude of such an attitude toward Congress on the part of any beneficiary of President Wilson's administration. House and Senate alike have given to the President loyal, unquestioning support. Their conduct has in fact been marked by self-effacement astonishing in its completeness. But in politics gratitude does not exist.

It is not inopportune, however, to point out the serious injury that may be caused by loose and contumelious utterances, coming from a responsible source, such as this of George Creel's. If a Member of Congress were to insult, say, the Cabinet, in the same words, he would be denounced as dangerous to the welfare of the Nation, and that deservedly. The words attributed by the World to Mr. Creel were unwarranted, uncalled for, and unjust, and if he uttered them he should be compelled to retract them.

[From the New York Times.]

TOO MUCH TO BELIEVE.

It is probable that most people who read attentively the report of George Creel's address on Sunday night before the open forum of the Church of the Ascension read it with constantly growing surprise, and that the feeling left with them at the end was one of positive disquiet. Mr. Creel, at the close of his address, answered questions from the audience concerning the policies of the administration, and answered them as if he were the authorized spokesman of the administration. Some of the questions were searching ones, like "Why does America object to Japan entering Russia?" and "Why does not the Government suppress the Hearst newspapers?" Offhand and glibly, Mr. Creel answered, and without the least reticence; nor was there anything in his words to indicate that he was not standing before that audience as the other self of the President. For instance, the question about why "the Government"—the Government, mind—does not suppress the Hearst newspapers was answered by Mr. Creel as if he were "the Government":

"In the first place, I do not believe in the suppression of anything. * * *"

So, when asked concerning Mr. Roosevelt's activities, he replied in the same manner:

"I tell you quite frankly that I would regret deeply if anything were done to rob us of Mr. Roosevelt's criticism. * * *"

"Us!" Asked concerning the suppression of the Lusitania memorial meeting in New York City in 1916, he used the same tone exactly:

"That was the work of your New York police, and I do not assume responsibility for them. * * *"

When he was asked why America objected to Japan's entering Siberia, he made no reservations; he answered straightforwardly on behalf of the Government: "Because we feel," etc. He even gave a little advance news about the Government's taxation intentions: "The rich man is going to be taxed higher and higher, until he will have but little left."

Now, while Mr. Creel was thus openly assuming the post of official spokesman of the administration he did not assume to be spokesman for the whole Government. He spoke with perfect assurance and confidence for the executive branch, but as soon as any other branch of the Government was mentioned he ceased to assume responsibility and ceased to appear as possessing perfect knowledge. This makes it impossible to conjecture that Mr. Creel's confident way of speaking is merely a mannerism. He speaks confidently for the administration because he does count himself, or wishes others to count him, as the voice of the administration; but when another branch of the Government is asked about he does not pretend to any special knowledge. For example, asked a question about Congress, he replied:

"I don't like slumming, so I won't explore the heart of Congress for you."

It can not be possible that Mr. Creel is really the President's spokesman, or that, if he is, he is authorized to go about the country baring the President's mind extemporaneously on public platforms in reply to casual questions. It must be that Mr. Creel has mistaken his position, his mission, his powers. It must be that he has too high an opinion of himself; that he has taken too seriously some kindly intended compliments which the President may have given him in conversation. It simply can not be that the President has authorized the chairman of the Committee on Public Information to discharge the President's mind at the top of his voice whenever some unknown person rises in a public meeting and asks him a question about important national policies.

The resolution is as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Rules be instructed to make proper inquiry into statements alleged to have been made by George Creel, chairman of the Committee on Public Information, in remarks at a public gathering in New York City on May 12, in which he is quoted as referring to Congress in the following words:

"I don't like slumming, so I won't explore into the heart of Congress."

And to report to the House what action it would advise in the premises.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 12057, introduced by myself and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, be rereferred to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization. I have consulted the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs and the chairman of the Committee on Immigration, and this request is with their consent.

Mr. WALSH. What is the bill about?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. It provides for the cancellation of the naturalization of any alien who violates the espionage or sabotage law.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to change the reference of the bill H. R. 12057 from the Committee on Military Affairs to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. WALSH. On what subject?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. War finance and the attitude of some papers in my district toward it.

Mr. WALSH. Some days ago the gentleman made a speech on the floor of the House and, without securing permission to extend his remarks——

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. WALSH. The RECORD does not show that he obtained permission; but he inserted a purely political speech against attacks that had been made upon him in his district. I wondered if this was to be of a similar tenor.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The tenor is not altogether the same. I want to comment on the war finance and the attitude of certain institutions in my district, and how they are working against the policy of the administration.

Mr. WALSH I have no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

By unanimous consent, Mr. LOBECK and Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY were given leave to extend remarks on the bill just passed.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 22 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, May 15, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. FERRIS, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 2812) to encourage and promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, gas, and sodium on the public domain, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 563), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. GOULD, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (H. SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, May 15, 1918.

Rev. J. L. Kibler, of the city of Washington, offered the following prayer:

O God, as we come to face the responsibilities of this day we reach out for Thy hand. Without Thee we can claim nothing and we can do nothing. All our help must come down from the Father of lights, with whom there is no variableness, neither shadow of turning. Thou art the giver of every good and of every perfect gift and the inspiration of all worthy endeavor.

O God, do Thou supply all our needs out of Thy fullness and according to Thy wisdom. Give these Thy servants large measures of grace and clear conceptions of Thy law. Give them power to accomplish the work committed to their hands, and grant that they may be led in a plain path because of our enemies. We ask it in Jesus' name. Amen.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Monday, May 13, 1918, when, on request of Mr. VARDAMAN and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

ESTIMATED REVENUES FOR 1917 (S. DOC. NO. 226).

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 6th instant, a statement of the revenues estimated for the calendar year 1917 derived from existing revenue laws. The communication and accompanying papers will be printed and referred to the Committee on Finance, and will also be printed in the RECORD.

The communication is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, May 14, 1918.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE:

SIR: In compliance with the resolution of the Senate passed May 6, 1918, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, directed to furnish the Senate with a statement of the revenues estimated for the calendar year of 1917, derived from existing revenue laws, stating particularly the amounts collectible under each title of said several laws.

I have the honor to advise you that the following is a statement of the actual collections from all sources for the calendar year 1917:

Internal revenue	$972,943,787.24
Customs	206,746,166.18
Sale of public lands	2,034,932.31
Miscellaneous	160,569,898.09
Total	1,342,294,783.82

While the resolution calls for an estimate of the revenues for the calendar year 1917, I assume that the Senate seeks tax estimates for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, which would show the tax on incomes and excess profits for the calendar year 1917 and the ordinary revenues for the 12 months ending June 30, 1918.

With the passage of the war-revenue act of October 3, 1917, the Internal-Revenue Bureau was charged with an immense volume of delicate and important work involving the careful interpretation of the act, the construction of the necessary regulations, and return forms for taxpayers. The complications and difficulties involved were responsible for some delay in getting out the regulations and forms. It was found necessary to extend the time for filing returns from March 1 to April 1. In addition to this, numerous special meritorious cases were presented, which made it necessary to give further special extensions to May 1. These conditions and other causes have delayed the transmission of returns to Washington.

With a view to forecasting the amount of income and excess-profits taxes forthcoming as accurately as possible, collectors of internal revenue were directed to submit by night letters on May 4 the total amount of the taxes shown to be due by the income and excess-profits tax returns filed in the various collection districts up to May 4.

As thus indicated, the returns have not yet been carefully examined to discover how accurately the tax items have been computed, and there is not sufficient information available to project estimates of income and excess-profits taxes on outstanding returns, of which there are several thousand.

The aggregate collections from all sources for the fiscal year 1918, with estimates as indicated, will amount to $4,095,699,000, distributed as follows:

Internal revenue	$3,643,899,000
Customs	180,000,000
Sale of public lands	1,800,000
Miscellaneous	270,000,000

At the time the war-revenue act was being considered by Congress the collections of internal revenue for the fiscal year 1918 were estimated at $3,400,000,000. The above estimate of collections from miscellaneous sources includes $40,000,000 estimated to be derived from increased postage on first-class mail matter provided under Title XI of the act of October 3, 1917.

The segregation of these statistics by general sources of revenue and, so far as possible, by titles of the various laws is shown on the attached statements. I regret that it is not possible at this time to show separately the amounts collectible under the income-tax laws and the excess-profits tax act.

I will state further that the total of the certificates of deposit received from collectors of internal revenue up to noon of May 11 for taxes received since June 30, 1917, amounts to $1,046,512,592.25.

Respectfully,

W. G. McADOO,
Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. JONES of Washington presented a petition of sundry citizens of Bellingham, Wash., praying for the enactment of legislation to prevent profiteering in wheat substitutes, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I present a petition signed by about 250 of the best citizens of Chehalis, Wash. They urge Congress to provide, if necessary, for the internment of those aliens in this country who have not made a proper contribution or made proper purchases of liberty bonds, and also, if necessary, that legislaion be passed that those who have been naturalized, who have not made the proper purchase, according to their ability, of liberty bonds, be denaturalized. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I have a short letter from the Tacoma Branch of the National Woman's Party asking for a vote on the woman-suffrage constitutional amendment and also a resolution by the Sectional Central Labor Council of Spokane urging the same thing. I ask that they may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter and resolution were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TACOMA, WASH., May 3, 1918.

Hon. WESLEY L. JONES,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: We heartily appreciate the five-sixths Republican vote in the House, which secured the passage of the suffrage amendment. We realize that there is a strong line up of your party in the Senate in favor of the passage of this measure. The vote on the suffrage measure more than anything else will convince the people at large that the Republican Party as a whole continues to stand for progress. Therefore we ask not only for your vote but for work in the ranks of your party to secure the necessary two-thirds vote to insure the early and successful passage of the national suffrage amendment through the Senate.

It is the wish of the members of our organization that this letter be read into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Respectfully, yours,

NATIONAL WOMAN'S PARTY,
GRACE T. TROWBRIDGE (MRS. W. P.),
Chairman.
Miss CORA LINDAAS, Secretary.

SECTIONAL CENTRAL LABOR COUNCIL OF SPOKANE AND VICINITY,
Spokane, Wash., May 10, 1918.

Hon. WESLEY L. JONES,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: At a meeting of the above council held May 6, the following resolution was adopted, and we trust it will receive your earnest consideration:

"Resolved, That at this time, when women are being thrown into industry by the thousands and are giving valiant service in the manufacturing of war material, we urge the President and the controlling administration to put its political strength back of the national suffrage amendment as a war measure and secure its prompt passage through the United States Senate: Be it further

"Resolved, That this body call upon Senator MARTIN, of Virginia, Democratic Senate leader; Senator GALLINGER, of New Hampshire, Republican Senate leader; Senator A. JONES, of New Mexico, chairman of the Woman Suffrage Committee; and Senators JONES and POINDEXTER, of Washington, to use every effort to secure the necessary two-thirds vote and pass the amendment out to the State legislatures for ratification: Be it further

"Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the above-mentioned with a request to Senators to have it read into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD."

Thanking you in advance for the above, we beg to remain,

Yours, respectfully,

[SEAL.] A. H. NOWKA,
Secretary-Treasurer.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I desire to take this opportunity to say a word. This question has never been considered as a party question, and I am glad of it, but nevertheless it is a fact that practically three-fourths of the Republican Senators are ready and prepared to vote for the passage of this amendment and yet we have been unable so far to get enough votes on the Democratic side to make up the necessary two-thirds to pass this fundamentally democratic proposition.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, the Senator from Washington has made a statement, and I wish to say that while I have no doubt there are some Republican Senators who desire a vote, I can assure him there are a large number of Democratic Senators who are also in favor of taking a vote.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I know there are quite a good number, but there is not the necessary number yet.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I want to explain my attitude on this matter. I am opposed to the Susan B. Anthony amendment to the United States Constitution. I think that is pretty generally known; but I shall vote to take it up whenever anyone will make a motion to take it up. I want to go on record and I want to vote on it. I am not in favor of delay.

AIRCRAFT PRODUCTION.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I send to the desk a telegram which I have received from Mr. Borglum, and I ask that the Secretary may read it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read the telegram, as follows:

STAMFORD, CONN., May 14, 1918.

Senator BRANDEGEE,
Senate Chamber, Washington.

I shall have delivered to you between 2 and 3 to-morrow, Wednesday, my denial to Mix's slanderous charges presented by Senator THOMAS. Please place this reply before the Senate and oblige,

Yours, faithfully,

GUTZON BORGLUM.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I am awaiting the receipt of the documents which Mr. Borglum says he will send to me. I think he labors under a slight misapprehension as to my function in this matter.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, might we ask the Senator from Connecticut to speak a little louder. We are interested in anything he has to say upon this subject.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I will ask the Senator to preserve order in the Chamber, and then he will hear me perfectly well.

Mr. LEWIS. I may preserve order in a certain part of the Chamber, but when my eminent friend from Connecticut speaks, disorder always arises. Therefore, I would ask him to protect us against it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I will say to my genial and bonhomie friend from Illinois that I do not have the gavel in my hand, and so I can not preserve order.

Mr. President, I do not know what Mr. Borglum's charges are or what his affidavits are; I do not know anything about the evidence that he may have. He says he is going to send me some papers. I do not feel that it is my duty to lay before the Senate of the United States a whole lot of affidavits and assertions and charges. Therefore if those documents are received by me, through messenger or otherwise, I shall return them to Mr. Borglum and tell him that he had better take them to the Military Affairs Committee, if the Senate shall authorize that committee to make an investigation. That is all I care to say upon the subject.

THE JUDICIAL CODE.

Mr. CULBERSON. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 5558) to amend section 101 of the Judicial Code, to report it with amendments, and I submit a report (No. 441) thereon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

ACCEPTANCE OF PIECES OF PLATE.

Mr. LODGE. From the Committee on Foreign Relations I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 4477) authorizing certain persons formerly connected with the American Embassy at Berlin to accept pieces of plate presented to them by the British Government, and I ask for its present consideration. It is recommended by the President and by the Department of State.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following persons formerly connected with the American Embassy at Berlin be, and they are hereby, authorized to accept pieces of plate presented to them by the British Government in recognition of services rendered by the embassy while in charge of British interests in Germany: Mr. Joseph C. Grew, counselor of embassy; Messrs. Hugh R. Wilson, Albert B. Ruddock, Alexander C. Kirk, L. Lanier Winslow, Lithgow Osborne, Oliver B. Harriman, Robert M. Scotten, and Charles H. Russell, jr., secretaries of embassy or legation; Brig. Gen. Joseph E. Kuhn and Maj. George T. Langhorne, United States Army; Lieut. Col. C. L. Furbush, Medical Corps, National Army; Maj.

Albert H. Roler, Medical Reserve Corps, United States Army; Lieut. Grafton W. Minot, Ordnance Reserve Corps, United States Army; Mr. H. R. Pyne, Aviation Service, United States Army; Commander Walter R. Gherardi and Surg. Karl Ohnesorg, United States Navy; Dr. A. E. Taylor, War Trade Board; Mr. Christian A. Herter, Department of State; Mr. E. L. Dresel and Miss G. de Courcy, employed at American Legation at Berne.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES S. FRIES.

Mr. ROBINSON. From the Committee on Claims I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 2097) for the relief of Charles S. Fries, and I submit a report (No. 440) thereon. I call the attention of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] to the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. This is a bill to compensate an employee of the Government who was injured in the Capitol in the discharge of duty. It carries a small appropriation. I have looked into it very carefully and find it to be meritorious in every respect. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Charles S. Fries the sum of $1,248, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for injuries received while employed as a decorator in the United States Capitol on October 24, 1911.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

THE COMMITTEE ON THE BUDGET.

Mr. WILLIAMS submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 244), which was referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That a committee consisting of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the chairman of the Committee on Finance, the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, and the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, together with the four senior minority members of the four committees first named, shall be constituted a committee to be called "the committee on the budget," and shall be charged with the duty of making recommendations for the coordination of governmental expenditures and governmental revenues; and be it further

Resolved, That all appropriation bills, all bills for the expenditure of money, and all bills raising revenue shall be submitted by the committees having jurisdiction to the committee on the budget for amendments suggested by it before being reported to the Senate for action.

POWER AND RESOURCES OF THE COUNTRY.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I offer the following resolution and ask that it be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 243) was read, as follows:

Whereas it is the settled conviction of the people of the United States that for their own safety, and for the permanent peace of the world, the military power of Germany must be completely overthrown and the criminal designs of her ruling classes finally destroyed; and

Whereas to assist most effectively in accomplishing these righteous purposes it is necessary to increase our Army, strengthen our Navy, and to direct intelligently all the energy and resources of the country; and

Whereas it has become the immediate and highest duty of the Nation not only to raise, equip, transport, and maintain a sufficient Army and construct and man an adequate Navy but to furnish continuously an immense volume of supplies to our allies; and

Whereas the number of men who can be withdrawn from industrial pursuits and assigned to the war forces, and the mobilization and organization of those who remain into efficient groups for the necessary production, can be ascertained and effected only by a careful survey of the whole situation as it is now presented: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Commerce, the Secretary of Labor, and the Provost Marshal General be, and they are hereby, requested to confer together and report to the Senate as soon as practicable upon the following subjects of inquiry, to wit:

First. How many men can be withdrawn within the ensuing two years from industrial or productive occupations for military service, leaving enough workers in the fields of necessary or essential production to supply (a) all the requirements of our military forces; (b) all the necessities of our civil population; (c) all the imperative needs of our allies; and (d) the essential commerce of neutral and friendly countries?

Second. What occupations involving man power can be abandoned without serious detriment to the general welfare, and how can those now engaged in them be turned into necessary or useful production?

Third. How many men are there, fit for military service or for labor, not within draft age, who are now employed in hurtful, unnecessary, or nonuseful occupations, and what are these occupations?

Fourth. How many men are there, fit for military service or for labor, not within the draft age, who do not work regularly in any occupation?

Fifth. What further legislation is desirable in order to utilize our maximum man power in the military service, with the minimum disturbance in the field of necessary or useful production?

Mr. CUMMINS. I ask that under the rule the resolution lie over for a day, and I give notice that to-morrow I shall call it up and submit some observations upon it and ask its disposal at the hands of the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. May I suggest to the Senator that where the words "how many can be withdrawn from the field" occur, would it not be well to say "and factories"?

Mr. CUMMINS. I was not using the word "field" in quite that sense. I was using it simply in the broad sense and not as referring to agriculture.

Mr. GALLINGER. It did not refer to agriculture alone?

Mr. CUMMINS. No; I did not use it in that sense.

Mr. GALLINGER. Probably that covers it.

Mr. BORAH. May I ask the Senator from Iowa a question? Has the Senator thought upon the proposition of assigning this duty to competent men who are not already overburdened with work? The task which is to be imposed upon these men is a task in and of itself separate and apart from any other duty if it is going to be performed efficiently and with any degree of success, and so as to give us desired information. It occurred to me that while of course these men will be consulted, if it is going to be done in an effective and efficient way, it ought not to be imposed upon men whose tasks are already as great as is possible for men to perform. I should like to see the work performed, if at all, most efficiently.

Mr. CUMMINS. My view of it is that the men whom I have named are the men, and the only men, who can furnish Congress the facts upon which it must ultimately act.

My design is to put before the country, and especially before Congress, the information necessary to reach a fair and considerate judgment with regard to the immediate future. It will not be long until we shall be compelled either to transfer the authority upon this subject to the President or to some one man or to exercise it ourselves. I am simply desiring to get before Congress the information that will enable it to reach a sound conclusion with regard to a question which I think is absolutely vital at this time. I will be very glad to have a suggestion made by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]; and if I can secure consideration for the resolution to-morrow, I have no doubt the Senate will finally designate those men who are best fitted to give us the information we want.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, as I understand, one of the purposes of this commission, in case it shall be created, is to determine how many men may be withdrawn from the industrial field without impairing our industries. In my humble judgment, that is a task which will require a vast amount of original investigation. I do not want the judgment of the Provost Marshal General upon any information that he now possesses as to how many men can be withdrawn from the agricultural field. I have had his judgment upon that. He will be obliged to make much further inquiries as to the agricultural situation than he has thus far, in my opinion, been able to do. I do not want the judgment of any man who does not go further into the subject than it has yet been gone into on the part of the department. They can not do it and do the other work which is assigned to them.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I have not the same feeling about the Provost Marshal General as has the Senator from Idaho. I think Gen. Crowder, the Provost Marshal General, knows more about the general subject than does any man in the administration or any man connected with the war; but however that may be, I hope the Senate, when the time comes, will carefully consider the suggestion of the Senator from Idaho. All I want is to avoid a fatal mistake which we may presently make—a mistake, unlike that of the aviation plan or of the shipping program, that once made can not be repaired and the consequences of which might determine the war in which we are engaged.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over under the rule.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had, on the 14th instant, approved and signed the act (S. 3402) to fix the age limits for candidates for admission to the United States Naval Academy.

LAWS OF PORTO RICO (S. DOC. NO. 225).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on the Pacific Islands and Porto Rico:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

As required by section 23 of the act of Congress approved March 2, 1917, entitled "An act to provide a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes," I transmit herewith copies of the acts and resolutions enacted by the Ninth Legislature of Porto Rico during its special session (February 6 to February 16, 1918, inclusive).

These acts and resolutions have not previously been transmitted to Congress and none of them has been printed.

THE WHITE HOUSE, 15 May, 1918.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Morning business is closed.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 7237, known as the Post Office appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7237) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I believe the pending question is on the amendment on page 11, beginning on line 8, which was passed over at the suggestion of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES].

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 11, line 8, the committee proposes, after the word "exceeded," to insert a colon and the following proviso:

Provided further, That hereafter when any employee in the Postal Service under the law is entitled to compensatory time for Sunday or holiday service, if he so elects, he may be paid for overtime in lieu thereof.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I am inclined to make the point of order against that amendment that it is general legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not see how it can be held to be general legislation. The provision is already in the law.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It changes existing law. It provides that "hereafter"; it is not confined to one year, but it is permanent legislation changing existing law. If it does not change existing law, it is not necessary; and it certainly is of a permanent character.

Mr. HARDWICK. It is not general legislation. It merely regulates this branch of the Postal Service.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It changes existing law, and is of a general permanent character.

Mr. HARDWICK. It authorizes the service to be paid for in a certain way.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; throughout all time.

Mr. HARDWICK. Well, that is true; there is no doubt about the permanency of it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I make the point of order on the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there a rule which fixes the compensation of the employees in the Postal Service and which fixes the compensation to be paid for Sunday and for holiday service?

Mr. HARDWICK. There is such a law.

The VICE PRESIDENT. And this proviso proposes to change it?

Mr. HARDWICK. No; that is the very point. This amendment does not change it. If the Chair will permit me, I will state the purpose of the amendment, and the Chair will then see the situation and can decide the whole thing. This amendment was suggested by the Post Office Department, and this is the memorandum which was furnished the committee in support of it:

Clerks and city letter carriers in first and second class post offices and a number of other employees are granted by law compensatory time for services performed on Sunday or holidays.

I interpolate here, Mr. President, to say that this does not change that law at all—

The compensatory time for Sunday service must be given during the 6 days following the Sunday on which it is performed, and that for the holiday service within 30 days after the holiday. The department has issued positive orders that the law be obeyed.

The amendment referred to has been suggested to the department by many postmasters. The statement that the department at times forces men to accept overtime payment in lieu of time off is erroneous, because under the law the department can not pay for overtime in lieu of granting compensatory time. The comptroller has ruled on this matter, and strict orders on the subject have been issued by the department.

I am appealing to the Senator from Washington in this matter, because I think on reflection, under the statement of the department, his point of order is probably good; but I hope he will not insist on it for the reasons that I have given.

So far as the department is concerned it is immaterial whether the employees are paid for overtime or given compensatory time. Many of them prefer overtime employment and payment therefor because in this way they can use the money to pay for liberty bonds and war-savings stamps. The proposed amendment will give the department authority to grant their wish, and, if it becomes a law, it will be left optional with the employees as to whether they accept payment for overtime or receive compensatory time in lieu thereof.

Now, with the high cost of living and all the demands on the departmental employees to which in patriotism they will have to respond—buying bonds and war-savings stamps—surely no one of them can be injured if he be given an option to say, when under the law he is required to render service in exceptional cases on Sundays or during holidays, that either he will take time off in lieu of it or will take the money at the rate provided by law.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Would not the change proposed by this amendment virtually mean that, while there may be an election on the part of the employees to accept either compensatory time or the money, they would be required to do the work whenever called upon?

Mr. HARDWICK. Not a bit in the world; there is not the slightest chance of that. The department has no such policy as that.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is not the law now on the statute books satisfactory to the department and working well?

Mr. HARDWICK. I have just read what the department says about it; they have not objected to the law. But the Senator will find, I think, before he gets through, if he pursues the investigation far enough, that this demand comes from the employees themselves. The department so states and says that many postmasters and many of their employees have urged it.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I want to correct the statement, so far as my information is concerned, that this change is proposed at the instance of the employees. I have received a number of communications—and, unless the point of order is sustained, I will present one or two of them to the Senate—protesting against the change as practically depriving them of their holidays and Sundays.

Mr. HARDWICK. It does not do that at all; they can not have this provision in mind.

Mr. SHIELDS. It does not in terms, but the effect of it will be to do that.

Mr. HARDWICK. They can not possibly have this section in mind, because, under the law, they can be required to render such service anyway on Sundays and holidays; and the sole object this amendment of the department seeks to accomplish is when these employees are required by law, as they will be whether this amendment is adopted or not, to render that service that they shall then be given the option of either receiving pay in time or in money.

I think on investigation that the point of order is good, and, if any Senator wants to take the responsibility of making it, after this statement, I do not see how we can resist it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I desire to read just a paragraph of a letter from the secretary-treasurer of the National Federation of Postal Employees, giving the reasons why they are opposed to this amendment. I wish to say that these reasons appeal very strongly to me and I think justify me in making the point of order:

This amendment is objectionable for a number of reasons. It would nullify the Sunday compensatory time law, which has been in successful operation for five years and which minimizes Sunday work and insures one day's rest weekly to the employees. It is true the amendment provides that the employees may "elect" to take either overtime pay or time off, but actually they would have no free choice. The acceptance of overtime pay, in my judgment, would be compulsory. The service is admittedly undermanned. There is now a constant temptation to keep the skilled distributors at work seven days a week. Violations of the existing law are not uncommon. The department at times forces men to accept overtime payment in lieu of time off in some offices. This amendment, I fear, would legalize this objectionable practice and make it of universal application, resulting in the deprivation to many employees of the needed release from toil one day in seven.

But even should the employee be given the choice between time off or pay, as the amendment contemplates, there are many who must, because of an insufficient wage, accept money instead of a rest period. The remedy for this condition, however, is not found in an invitation to work seven days a week. It can be corrected by a wage standard high enough to admit of sufficient earnings within the limits of a six-day working week. It is unjust to invite or urge or compel men to forego an earned day of rest at the inevitable expense of their health and stamina and morale, upon which depends the efficiency of the Postal Service.

Mr. President, I know that under the terms of this amendment it is left to the election of the employees as to whether they will accept compensatory time or pay.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator to suggest that the entire letter be printed in the RECORD?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am going to ask that that be done. What I have read will go in the RECORD, anyhow. But, Mr. President, I think there is very much force in the suggestion contained in this letter, that, if this amendment is adopted, it will be used to a certain extent as a coercive measure.

Mr. HARDWICK. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Certainly, although I think I know the opinion of the Senator.

Mr. HARDWICK. I merely want to suggest to him that the Post Office Department is on record as saying that they have no idea of coercing anybody; the option is to be given, and I do not see how the Senator can entertain that opinion.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I know there are various ways by which the department heads and those in control of bureaus, and so forth, can accomplish the purpose where there is a discretion of this kind left.

Mr. HARDWICK. Of course, the Senator understands very well that the law requiring this service on Sundays and holidays in exceptional cases will be left unchanged. This provision is merely intended to give the men under such circumstances an option.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It could very well be intimated to a man that he should take the pay instead of taking the time, and we know what the effect of a suggestion of that kind would be. I really think that the fears expressed in this letter have considerable foundation.

Mr. HARDWICK. Of course, the Senator must think so when he makes the point of order.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do, and therefore I ask that this entire letter be printed in the RECORD, and I make the point of order against the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter referred to is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 17, 1918.

Hon. WESLEY L. JONES,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Your attention is respectfully invited to a Senate committee amendment in the pending postal appropriation bill (p. 11, lines 8 to 11), which will, if enacted into law, materially change the existing laws granting compensatory time off to post-office employees for Sunday and holiday service.

The present laws—and they are satisfactory to the employees—provide that Sunday work shall be compensated for by time off upon one of the following six days, and holiday work (the seven principal holidays only) shall be compensated for by time off upon one of the following 30 days. The proposed amendment would alter these laws by permitting employees to elect to accept overtime pay in lieu of compensatory time off.

This amendment is objectionable for a number of reasons. It would nullify the Sunday compensatory time law, which has been in successful operation for five years and which minimizes Sunday work and insures one day's rest weekly to the employees. It is true the amendment provides that the employees may "elect" to take either overtime pay or time off, but actually they would have no free choice. The acceptance of overtime pay, in my judgment, would be compulsory. The service is admittedly undermanned. There is now a constant temptation to keep the skilled distributors at work seven days a week. Violations of the existing law are not uncommon. The department at times forces men to accept overtime payment in lieu of time off in some offices. This amendment, I fear, would legalize this objectionable practice and make it of universal application, resulting in the deprivation to many employees of the needed release from toil one day in seven.

But even should the employee be given the choice between time off or pay, as the amendment contemplates, there are many who must, because of an insufficient wage, accept money instead of a rest period. The remedy for this condition, however, is not found in an invitation to work seven days a week. It can be corrected by a wage standard high enough to admit of sufficient earnings within the limits of a six-day working week. It is unjust to invite or urge or compel men to forego an earned day of rest at the inevitable expense of their health and stamina and morale, upon which depends the efficiency of the postal service.

There is no valid reason for changing the present statisfactory compensatory time laws in the manner sought by this amendment. Since these laws have been on the statute books the Postal Service, according to the reports of the Postmaster General, has become self-sustaining financially and has reached its highest point of efficiency. Therefore these laws can not be said to have hampered the department in a proper administration of the service. On the contrary they have contributed toward an improved service by improving the working conditions of the employees. To amend them as proposed would be a distinct lowering of working standards with the consequent impairment of postal-service efficiency.

I respectfully ask your cooperation in having this objectionable amendment stricken from the bill in the Senate.

Very truly, yours, THOS. F. FLAHERTY,
Secretary-Treasurer National Federation of Postal Employees.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I do not intend to discuss the point of order. I simply wish to explain what I understand to be the effect of this amendment. As the law now is, these employees are entitled to compensatory time when they are required to work on Sundays and holidays. Nobody questions that that law will remain in force, whether this amendment is adopted or whether it is not, so far as that is concerned. The only proposition here is that if under the law and the exigencies requiring extra time a man is compelled to work on Sunday or on a holiday, he may say whether he prefers to take compensatory time or pay for that time.

I have discussed this matter with a great many postal employees, and I——

The VICE PRESIDENT. May the Chair interrupt at this point to inquire whether the law now provides for the payment for overtime

Mr. BANKHEAD. It does provide for overtime pay, and this provision simply gives the employee an opportunity to choose between pay for overtime and compensatory time. That is all there is to it; it merely gives the employee an opportunity to choose.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

Mr. BANKHEAD. Now, wait a moment.

The reason these employees give is that if they are compelled to take compensatory time they have no remedy at all; they must take it. They have nothing to do, they say, during the week days. They can not go out with their families and have a holiday; they can not do anything except loaf. Now, they say that they prefer, if they do prefer it and make that preference, that the Post Office Department should simply pay them instead of giving them the time. What is the objection to that? It may be a technical change of the law, but it just simply giving these people an opportunity to choose, and they ought to know what they want.

Everybody knows who writes this letter that has been presented here. It is not worth while to discuss that, and I am not discussing it at all; but to say that this law will not be executed according to its provisions if this amendment remains in the bill is to say that the Post Office Department will not obey the law of Congress. That is all it means. You can not put any other construction on it.

I hope the point of order will not be sustained.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question. I understood the Vice President to ask the chairman of the committee whether or not the law now provided for extra pay for overtime work.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It does.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator said it did; but I want to ask the Senator if this is not the case—that if they work on Sundays, then, instead of getting paid for that, they get that much time off during the week?

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is the law now.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is true; but now this is to change that, and provide for pay. So that the question the Vice President asked does not bear upon this proposition. That is all I want to know.

Mr. BANKHEAD. This simply gives the employee an opportunity to exercise an option. If he says, "I prefer the pay," he gets it. If he says, "I prefer the compensatory time," he gets that. That is all there is to it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I asked the question because I thought the Vice President had the idea that the law now provides for actual pay for working on Sunday, when as a matter of fact it does not. It simply gives him compensatory time off during the week, and this changes that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The state of the law at the present time seems to be that the Post Office Department has authority, in an emergency, to require these employees to work on Sundays or holidays. If they work on a Sunday or a holiday, under the law they are entitled to compensatory time; that is, as the Chair understands it, they get a vacation. The post-office law also provides for payment for overtime work, not, however, applicable to cases of this character, but to general overtime work.

The rule of the Senate prevents general legislation on an appropriation bill. The question is as to whether this is general legislation, whether or not it is a law that binds everybody of a given class; because in order to constitute general legislation it is not necessary that it should cover everybody in America, or everybody in the Post Office Department, but only all those persons who come under the class.

The Chair would have no doubt about this being general legislation if it were compulsory in its terms, if the employees were compelled to work and accept overtime pay in lieu of compensatory time for Sunday and holiday service. However, it does not seem to be that. It seems to be a proviso pertaining to these employees to the effect that anyone of them, if he wants to, may accept money rather than time.

The Chair thinks it is a very close question on the subject of general legislation, but is going to overrule the point of order.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I feel that I must respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the ruling of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate? [Putting the question.] By the sound the "ayes" seem to have it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN], who is necessarily absent, to the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and vote "yea."

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. KNOX. I am paired with that Senator and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment. In line 11, after the word "paid," I move to insert "at the rate of one and one-half."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the committee amendment, page 11, line 11, after the words "may be paid," insert the words "at the rate of one and one-half."

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, that is the usual practice in all lines of employment where employees work overtime. They are paid oftentimes as high as double pay, but the general rule is one and a half for overtime, and I think the Government ought to follow that rule. I offer this amendment in view of the fact that the Senate has held that this is not general legislation on an appropriation bill. Just what kind of legislation it is I do not know, but nevertheless it has been held in order on this bill by the Senate, and I hope this amendment will be adopted so that these employees will be placed on the same basis with other employees in other lines of work and a great many Government lines of work. I think in the navy yards of the country, where they work overtime, this rule applies.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I hope the amendment to the amendment will not be adopted. That is all I have to say.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the committee. [Putting the question.] The noes seem to have it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment is lost.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I should like to have the attention of the chairman of the committee for a moment. Was the question regarding the postal order recently issued by the Postmaster General in regard to soldiers' mail under consideration by his committee, and was any change in the law or regulations proposed in the committee or given consideration?

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; the matter was not considered by the committee at all.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I wish to ask the chairman if he will move a reconsideration to enable me to offer an amendment to section 9 on pages 30 and 31 of the bill.

Before he agrees to do that, I wish to explain, if I may, just what my object is in proposing the amendment. I have drawn an amendment here which modifies the order of the Postmaster General. The amendment that I would propose is intended merely to bring the matter fairly before the conference committee for consideration, as to whether there should be what is practically an innovation in the mailing of packages to soldiers. The amendment I would propose would allow the immediate family of the postal employee in the military and naval service, or any other member of the American Expeditionary Forces, to have sent to him a package each month not exceeding 3 pounds in weight. I would be very glad if the chairman would move a reconsideration of the section for that purpose.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If the Senator will offer his amendment, I will accept it with the understanding that it will go to conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). The section proposed to be amended has been agreed to. A motion to reconsider the vote by which the same was agreed to is in order. Without objection, it is now before the Senate on reconsideration. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of section 9, page 31, line 4, insert:

And once in each month the immediate family of any such employee, while in the military or naval service of the United States, or of any member or individual connected with the American Expeditionary Forces in Europe, may send to such employee or member or individual one package of mail, not exceeding 3 pounds in weight, other than letter mail, without the request required by Order No. 1259 of the Postmaster General.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The amendment, on page 27, for pay of rural carriers was passed over, and I ask the Senate to recur to it.

The SECRETARY. The first amendment passed over on that page began on line 7. The second amendment, offered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] is a substitute for section 2 as reported by the committee.

Mr. HARDWICK. Let us dispose of the first amendment before we come to section 2. That was the request of the Senator from Alabama, I think.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama requests that the amendment near the top of page 27 be disposed of first. The question is on the amendment passed over.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, under date of the 11th of April a letter over the signature of the Postmaster General was addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and a copy of the same mailed to each Senator. I ask unanimous consent to insert that letter in the RECORD.

Mr. BANKHEAD. We are dealing now with the amendment relative to rural carriers.

Mr. CALDER. I am aware of that fact, and my remarks cover the entire subject of increased pay for postal employees.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

APRIL 11, 1918.

Hon. J. H. BANKHEAD,
Chairman Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR BANKHEAD: The bill (H. R. 7237) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes, as reported to the Senate by the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, carries an amendment (sec. 2) providing, in addition to the automatic and other promotions now provided by law for certain employees, for an increase of 15 per cent in the salaries of postmasters at offices of the fourth class and employees of the Postal Service during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919. This proposed amendment involves an additional expenditure of approximately $33,297,000.

When the bill (H. R. 9414) granting increased compensation to certain officials, employees, and laborers in the Post Office Department and Postal Service, etc., was under consideration recently in the House many of the arguments in favor of increased salaries for postal employees were based on the fact that the department reported a surplus of more than $9,000,000 for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1917. It is true that the receipts of the Postal Service exceeded the expenditures during the last fiscal year by more than that amount, but the discussion of this subject by Members of the House clearly discloses that many of them are misinformed as to the policy of the Postmaster General in conducting the Postal Service. They stated that it is being conducted for profit, when, as a matter of fact, the fixed policy from the beginning of my administration has been to conduct the Postal Service for the convenience of the public and not for profit. Were it conducted for profit it would then be an indirect means of taxation. My policy has been fully outlined in the annual reports and letters addressed to committees of Congress.

In the report of the Postmaster General for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1913, it was stated:

"The dominant policy of the present administration will be to conduct the Postal Service for the convenience of the public and not for profit. Its controlling purpose will be to promote efficiency by the complete standardization of the service, which will be attained by harmonizing equipment, adjusting the personnel, and securing the greatest possible cooperation in every quarter."

In the report for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1914, it was stated:

"The general policy of the present administration of the Postal Service, as defined in the last annual report of the Postmaster General, has been adhered to with good results.

"The service has been administered for the convenience of the public, not for profit; to promote efficiency by standardizing and simplifying procedure; to recognize merit and eliminate partisanship; to extend service wherever present or prospective returns justify; to reduce rates in so far as proves consistent with general fiscal necessity; and to provide all communities and all sections of the country, as far as practicable, with uniform service."

In the report for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1915, it was stated:

"The efforts of the department have been steadfastly directed toward rational and economical administration for the purpose of obtaining for the public the most efficient service possible. The measure of efficiency is not determined solely by the amount of money spent but by the results obtained from the expenditures made."

In the report for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1916, it was stated:

"Whereas the department is no longer a tax on the general revenue, it is desired to again emphasize its position that it should not be permitted to become a revenue producer for the Government. It should become its fixed policy that all surplus postal revenues should be used for the enlargement of the service, the increase of postal efficiency, and, when justified, to a reduction of rates of postage."

This policy was also set forth in a letter addressed to you under date of January 30, 1917, in which it was stated:

"The cost of the Postal Service is borne by the public and it should, therefore, not be conducted for profit, as to do so would be an indirect form of taxation. The question therefore arises as to what additional advantages should not be given to the public so that they might enjoy from the present manner of administering the Postal Service."

The business of the Post Office Department is vast and far-reaching. In the interest of the public service it is necessary that it be conducted the same as a successful business institution. The administrative officers are simply the trustees of the public and should exercise the utmost care in the administration of the service and in the expenditure of its funds. They should require a dollar's worth of service for every dollar of public funds expended, but the primary consideration must necessarily be efficient postal service. If by eliminating special privileges and extravagances without impairing in any manner its efficiency the revenues of the Postal Service exceed the expenditures, the public should be given some benefit, such as extensions and improvements in the service or reductions in the rates of postage. This policy has been consistently followed and has resulted in a reduction in the rates of postage on parcel post and many extensions and improvements in the entire service. In line with this policy, when it became apparent early in the last fiscal year that there would be a large surplus in the postal revenues, I urged the Congress to reduce the rate of postage on drop letters from 2 cents to 1 cent per ounce or fraction thereof, in order that the public might receive some benefit from the economies effected.

It has also been alleged by Members that in order to show a surplus the department has not paid the employees a fair compensation. The salaries of the postal employees are fixed by the Congress and in each instance they have been paid the salaries provided by law. Government employees are justly compensated and I have always contended that their salaries should be equal to or in excess of that paid for work of as exacting character in the commercial world. This matter was discussed in my annual report for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1916, from which the following is quoted:

"It has been the earnest effort of the department to fix the standard rates of pay for the different classes of work at from 15 per cent to 30 per cent above the average rates paid for similar service by leading commercial institutions of the country. The same rule has been followed throughout the Postal Service in fixing salaries that are not fixed by law. Whenever an employee or a group of employees is found to be receiving salaries below the standard the department will make an effort to secure appropriate increases."

The same policy was outlined during the hearings on the legislative, executive, and judicial bill before the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives last year, when the following statement was made:

"Under this system an effort is made to pay every employee the salary he earns, based upon the standard of 15 per cent to 30 per cent higher than that in business institutions, and if there is any class of clerical work in the department for which the compensation is not equal to or higher than this standard we would be glad to have it pointed out and we will accordingly ask Congress for an increase."

The employees of the Postal Service are recruited from the wage earners—employees of the farm, the factory, the school, and the office—and enter the Government service to better their working conditions and receive increased compensation. The nature of their employment and their compensation before entering the Government service is fully set forth in their applications for the civil-service examination. The data on pages 236–245 of the hearings before the special subcommittee of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads of the House of Representatives during December, 1917, and January, 1918, on salaries of postal employees, show the occupation and salary received by a number of persons applying for the civil-service examination. It will be observed that the salaries in most instances were less than the entrance salary to the Postal Service. In urging increased compensation representatives of the employees referred to the average wage received by persons employed by the United States Steel Corporation. The record (p. 247 of the hearings) shows that the average wage paid to employees in the Postal Service from 1908 to 1915, the last year for which data was furnished, was from 17 to 20 per cent in excess of that paid employees of the Steel Corporation. The average salaries in each case had increased in practically the same ratio. A recent report discloses that during the calendar year 1917, because of the existence of a state of war and the resultant abnormal conditions in the labor world, the average wage of the Steel Corporation, including all salaried employees, had increased to $4.16 per day, approximately the same as that of the post-office clerk and city letter carrier. In computing this average wage the high-salaried employees have been included, while for the Postal Service only those receiving $1,200 and less per annum have been considered. If the computations were made on the same basis in both instances the average wage of the postal employee would no doubt still be considerably in excess of that paid by the Steel Corporation. Investigation also shows that employees of the railroads and business institutions who perform work of as exacting character as those in the Postal Service are now, in many instances, receiving less salary.

As heretofore stated, the Government should be a model employer. Its employees should be justly compensated, and their salaries, under normal conditions, should exceed from 15 per cent to 30 per cent those paid by business institutions, and they have been so fixed in the past. To fix salaries in excess of this will greatly disturb the industrial and economic conditions. Because of his salary and working conditions, the Government employee has always been considered a favored employee. It may be possible that at the present time, due to war conditions and in order to secure labor, some business institutions have greatly increased temporarily the compensation of their employees. But granting that this be true, should not the employees who have so long been favored now make some sacrifice at a time when it is necessary to expend millions of dollars in connection with the war, which must be met by increased taxes and the sale of bonds?

It is true that the cost of living has increased during the existence of the present war. The question, therefore, naturally arises as to whether in the great emergency with which we are confronted the salaries of Government employees should be increased. If so, to what extent? If it is the desire of the Congress that the salaries of the departmental employees be increased, then it is the desire that the salaries of the postal employees be increased to the same extent and in like manner. However, the increase of 15 per cent proposed in the bill (H. R. 7237) reported by your committee is far in excess of the $120 per annum for those receiving $2,500 and less proposed for departmental employees in the bill (H. R. 10358) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes. If the employees of the Postal Service are allowed, in addition to the automatic promotions now provided by law, the increase of 15 per cent, as proposed, those now receiving a salary of $800 per annum will receive an increase of 27½ per cent; those receiving $900, 6⅔ per cent; those receiving $1,000, 25 per cent; and those receiving $1,100, 24/7 per cent. This will result in dissatisfaction among the departmental employees. If the increases proposed in H. R. 7237 and H. R. 10358 are granted, then a clerk who has been employed in the Washington City post office for a year at $1,000 per annum would on July 1 be advanced to $1,265, while the departmental clerk in the same grade would be advanced to only $1,120 per annum.

The cost of the increased salaries proposed in the bill reported by your committee will involve an additional expenditure of more than $33,000,000 during the next fiscal year. The Post Office Department is paying into the Treasury of the United States at this time approximately $5,000,000 a month, collected as a result of increased rate of postage on first-class mail matter, and which was imposed on the public as a war tax. More than one-half of this amount will be required to pay the additional cost due to increased salaries; and while the public must meet this cost, it will receive no compensating advantage in the way of service. This additional cost will no doubt exceed the total gross increase in revenues of the Postal Service during the next fiscal year, and doubtless create the largest deficit in the history of the Postal Service. It is not a sound business policy, and no substantial business institution would think of giving its entire increased revenue to increasing the compensation of its employees. If these increases in compensation become permanent, it will never be practicable to reduce the rate of postage on letters from 3 cents to 2 cents.

If the salaries of the postal employees are to be increased, I again urge the same increases provided for departmental employees be made applicable to those in the Postal Service. The increases provided in H. R. 10358 as passed by the House, if made applicable to the Postal Service, would involve an additional expenditure of about $18,513,150 during the next fiscal year instead of the $33,297,000 proposed in the bill reported by your committee, and would, in my judgment, under the existing conditions, be as liberal compensation as Government employees could reasonably expect.

The salary increases proposed in H. R. 7237, for the reasons set forth, do not have my approval.

Sincerely,

ALBERT S. BURLESON,
Postmaster General.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, in this communication the Postmaster General takes vigorous exceptions to an amendment—section 2—in the Post Office appropriation bill—H. R. 7237—which provides for a 15 per cent increase in the salaries of postmasters in offices of the fourth class and employees of the Postal Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919.

Directing attention to the fact that the proposed amendment involves an additional expenditure of approximately $33,297,000, the Postmaster General advances a number of reasons why this legislation is unwarranted and inadvisable. "If the salaries of the postal employees are to be increased," he says, "I again urge the same increases provided for departmental employees be made applicable to those in the Postal Service." Thus, without specifically recommending any stated amount, the Postmaster General argues in favor of a flat $120 increase per employee per annum as against the proposed 15 per cent raise in salaries. The words "I again urge" indicate that he has made this same recommendation before, but where and when this was done is not explained. Hitherto his general attitude has been one of unremitting opposition to any advance in wages.

Doubtless the Postmaster General believes that the statement submitted is sweeping and conclusive, and naturally his opinion on postal legislation should always receive thoughtful consideration. In this instance, however, the objections offered do by no means square with the fully ascertained facts in the case. When a wage controversy is in process of adjustment both the master and the man are each prone to see but one side of the question. Into just such error has the Postmaster General fallen.

In justice to the postal employees this communication from Mr. Burleson should not be permitted to go unanswered. It has to do with an important subject. The well-being of a great army of faithful workers hinges largely on the eventual decision of Congress in this issue. This communication should be answered, because it bristles with glaring inaccuracies from which the most illogical deductions are drawn, all intended, of course, to sway opinion to the department's point of view. It deserves more than a passing analysis, and the more careful the study the less conviction will it carry.

At the outset the assertion is made that an erroneous impression appears to exist in Congress "as to the policy of the Postmaster General in conducting the Postal Service." Evidence of this misinformation the Postmaster General says is shown by the recent debate in the House, when the bill H. R. 9414 was before that body for consideration, at which time "many of the arguments were based on the fact that the department reported a surplus of more than $9,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917." "It has also been alleged by Members," this letter continues, "that in order to show a surplus the department has not paid the employees a fair compensation."

Naturally the impression one would glean from reading these lines would indicate that the existence of a postal surplus was a largely contributing cause to the passage by the House of the measure to increase postal employees' salaries. Furthermore, it would be assumed that out of just such "misinformation" flow the unfounded allegations against the policy followed by the Postmaster General in the conduct of the Post Office Department. Having thus, to his own satisfaction, stated the opposite side of the question he proceeds to demolish it.

The Post Office is not run to make money; its controlling purpose is to promote efficient and satisfying service. "As a matter of fact," he argues, "the fixed policy from the beginning of my administration has been to conduct the Postal Service for the convenience of the public and not for profit."

How do these statements square with the facts in the case? A very careful reading of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD covering the debate on H. R. 9414 fails to disclose any arguments advanced in favor of an increase in the salaries for postal employees which were primarily based on the existence of a postal surplus. Instead, it was contended, that "any talk of a postal surplus means nothing" and that postal employees should be justly compensated whether the Postal Service is on a self-sustaining basis or not. This sentiment dominated throughout the discussion, and there is no evidence of the particular "misinformation" to which the Postmaster General refers. Postal revenues are not derived from a direct tax. On the contrary, at a very reasonable charge a certain indispensable service is performed for the people, and it is well if the revenues received for such service exceeds the corresponding disbursements. In any event, and in one way or another, the people must pay the bill. The attitude of the Members of the House, as reflected in the discussion to which this communication refers, was simply one of decided opposition to any policy intended to force a postal surplus by either undermining the service or by denying the employees an adequate wage. Strangely enough, the expressed sentiment of the House squares exactly with the very same policy which the Postmaster General claims he has consistently followed ever since his induction into office. The issue, therefore, is not a question of policy or of misinformation; it is a question of fact.

Is a successful postal administration to be determined by a test of profit? In order to show a postal surplus, has service efficiency and the well-being of the employees been subordinated to this end? The Postmaster General claims that it has not, and he contends that efficiency and not profit has been the controlling purpose. In confirmation thereof he submits several explanatory extracts taken from each of his five annual reports. In his report for the fiscal year 1915 he states:

The efforts of the department have been steadfastly directed toward rational and economical administration for the purpose of obtaining for the public the most efficient service possible. The measure of efficiency is not determined solely by the amount of money spent but by the results obtained from the expenditure made.

Substantially the same thought runs through the several citations which the Postmaster General quotes from his various annual reports, all of which have a strong tendency to prove that efficient service and not a postal profit has been the main purpose in mind.

The Postmaster General signally fails, however, to call attention to other statements altogether dissimilar in character which appear in these same annual reports, and which offer convincing evidence that to report a postal surplus was considered an achievement of the greatest moment. Mr. Burleson, we should remember, is not the first Postmaster General whose name has been associated with a postal surplus. His predecessor in office, Mr. Frank H. Hitchcock, pointed with acknowledged pride in his annual report for 1911 to a postal surplus for that fiscal year of more than $219,000. Shortly after assuming office Mr. Burleson took note of this claim and subsequently through the newspapers challenged the figures submitted by Mr. Hitchcock, and charged that instead of a surplus a deficit should have been reported. His real feelings on this matter are further disclosed by the following extract quoted from his first annual report as Postmaster General:

By the use of this faulty method a surplus of $219,118.12 was shown in the annual report of the department for the fiscal year 1911, in which the claim was advanced that the service had finally been made self-supporting. Taking into account the outstanding obligations for that year, which were not reported, there was in reality a deficit of approximately $732,301.90.

The ruling motive that has so largely influenced the official acts of Postmaster General Burleson throughout his administration is indicated by the following extract taken from his annual report of 1914. Denying to Mr. Hitchcock the honor of reporting a bona fide postal surplus, he wheels around and claims this very distinction for himself, failing to mention, however, that eight months of the fiscal year 1912 were under the administration of Postmaster General Hitchcock. He said:

Having shown a substantial surplus for two successive fiscal years, it can fairly be claimed that for the first time since Benjamin Franklin organized the Postal Service under the Continental Congress the Post Office Department has been securely placed upon a self-sustaining basis.

Here, too, Mr. Burleson essays the rôle of a prophet, but, unfortunately, the following year he must report a postal deficit of some $11,000,000. This he charged to the war in Europe. In his annual report of 1916, comparing his administration with the two preceding terms, he says:

But for the business depression occasioned by the European war the department would have undoubtedly secured a surplus of not less than $18,000,000. This is in marked contrast with the deficits for the eight years of the two preceding administrations, which drained the Treasury of $48,739,639.34 and $24,927,657.40, respectively.

The foregoing quoted extracts, as well as an impartial review of his official acts, show conclusively that the question of a postal surplus looms large in the Postmaster General's mind. It colors all his recommendations, just as it does in the pending communication relative to postal employees' wages.

The major portion of postal disbursements consists of wages paid for necessary labor, and the Postmaster General has consistently followed a policy intended to reduce this item of expense to the lowest possible minimum. Innovations without end and without number have been introduced to forward this purpose, and never has a single recommendation issued from the office of the Postmaster General intended to increase the compensation or broaden the privileges of postal employees. On the contrary, he has vigorously opposed every such suggestion, just as he now opposes the proposed wage increase. In this particular communication, referring to the wages of postal employees, the Postmaster General states:

It has been the earnest effort of the department to fix the standard rates of pay for the different class of work at from 15 to 30 per cent above the average rate paid for similar service by leading commercial institutions of the country. * * * Whenever an employee or group of employees is found to be receiving salaries below the standard the department will make an effort to secure appropriate increases.

Continuing on the same theme, and comparing the average wage of postal employees with the employees of the Steel Corporation, he says:

The average wage of the Steel Corporation, including all salaried employees, had increased to $4.16 per day, approximately the same as that of the post-office clerk and city letter carrier.

The foregoing quoted statements and comparisons deserve to be simply characterized as absurd—nothing less. Postal employees are notoriously underpaid—a fact universally acknowledged. Any man with the qualifications and equipment required of the efficient postal employee can command more wages in private industry than what he now receives in the Postal Service. Evidence of this fact abounds on every hand. It is shown in vacant eligible rosters; in an army of temporary postal employees; in the general introduction of women in the service; in the mounting list of resignations; and, above all, in the fading efficiency of the service. "Fifteen per cent to 30 per cent more," indeed. A casual glance at the "help wanted" column in any daily paper will show how obviously ridiculous is this statement. It needs little contradiction.

Neither do post-office clerks and city letter carriers receive an average daily wage of "approximately $4.16" or anything like it. Quoting from official salary table prepared by the Post Office Department, in conformity with an act of Congress approved March 4, 1911, I find that for a 30-day month the following per diem wage rate is scheduled:

For the $800 per annum, or entrance grade, the per diem rate is $2.22.

For the $1,200 per annum, or maximum grade, the per diem rate is $3.33.

For the nine-year period, dating from the employee's entrance into the service until the maximum grade is attained, it is estimated that the annual salary is $742, and the average per diem rate is $2.03.

Taking the foregoing quoted per diem rates, which is a fair average for all postal employees, and comparing the same with the average wages that are now being paid employees in private industries, show that postal employees, instead of receiving more, are paid decidedly less than workers engaged in the most unskilled occupations. Advertisements for laborers at 50 cents an hour are quite plentiful. Another long-standing advertisement appearing in a local paper calls for laborers at $3.85 per day, with commissary and free sleeping accommodations. Here is an advertisement from the American Express Co. for clerks and chauffeurs: "Seventy-five dollars and $85 per month to start; good prospects; steady employment." Another for truckers at $3.08. Another for night watchmen at $21 per week, and so on in similar instances without end. Remember, too, that such employees are not compelled to pass a civil-service examination or serve with uncertain compensation for a long period of substitution.

The review of the wage scales in other industries, like the mechanical trades, coal mining, shipbuilding, iron and steel mills, and kindred occupations, would reveal startling comparisons and show in contrast how pitifully small are the salaries paid postal employees. A general increase of wages for all railroad employees has been promised by Director General McAdoo, said increase to date, with back pay, from January 1, 1918.

In this connection, Mr. President, I have noticed by the daily newspapers recently the fact that the Wage Board, in connection with the railroad employees, have recommended increases that will total not less than $300,000,000 annually, and a wage scale which provides that the salaries of the men in railway employ who receive $800 per annum shall be increased 41 per cent, and so on, down the entire list. These increases show a comparison which indicate the average per cent increase to letter carriers and clerks is 17.99 per cent less than the recommendations of the Wage Board for increases to railroad employees. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to insert this schedule of wage rates for railroad employees and postal employees in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KIRBY in the chair). Without objection, permission to do so will be granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Railroad wage commission's award for railroad employees to be effective Jan. 1, 1918.

Salary annually.	Salary monthly.	Per cent of increase.
$800	$66.66	41
$900	75.00	41
$1,000	83.33	40
$1,100	91.66	36.38 to 38.22
$1,200	100.00	33.70 to 31.75

Proposed increase recommended by Senate Post Office Committee for letter carriers and clerks.

Mr. CALDER. I also ask leave to have inserted in the RECORD, without reading, a news dispatch from the Philadelphia North American on the same subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, permission to do so is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From the North American, Philadelphia, May 9, 1918.]

RAILROAD WAGE COMMISSION RECOMMENDS BIGGEST INCREASE IN HISTORY—$300,000,000 ANNUALLY TO BE ADDED TO WAGES—$100,000,000 GOES AT ONCE FOR "BACK PAY"—PASSENGER AND TRAFFIC RATE INCREASES ARE INDICATED AT WASHINGTON—MAY NET BILLION—SALARY ADVANCES APPLY TO ALL EARNINGS UNDER $250 MONTHLY IN 1915.

WASHINGTON, May 8.

Within six months of the time when the Government assumed operation of the railroads, the largest wage increase in the history of the world was recommended to-day for railroad employees.

In round numbers, $300,000,000 a year will be expended for increased wages and $100,000,000 will be immediately applied to "back pay" from January 1 to April 20, 1918, as the award in this respect is retroactive.

It represents the long work of the railway wage commission, appointed by William G. McAdoo, Director General of Railroads, for the purpose of recommending increases to employees, and it affects approximately 2,000,000 workers.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I also call attention to an advertisement which appeared in the Detroit Free Press of April 22, 1918, advertising for men to apply for police employment in that city, and indicating that the wages of such policemen will be from $1,200 to $1,400 per annum on entry into the service. The advertisement reads:

WANTED—HELP—MALE.

LIFELONG POLICE JOBS.

American citizens (not in class 1 or 2 of the draft, because of expense in outfitting them), two years' residence in any part of Michigan, between 21 and 36 years of age, not less than 5 feet 8 inches in height, physically fit, and of good habits, can become patrolmen on the Detroit police force at once at a salary of from $1,200 to $1,400 a year. Good opportunities for advancement.

Write or apply to Civil Service Commission, 802 Farwell Building, for full particulars.

The following extract, taken from the speech of Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania before the House, furnishes another illuminating comparison:

Substitute railway mail clerks are paid $2.22 a day when they work. The porters around the railroad station, some of whom can not even read or write, are paid $3.40 a day. Such a humiliating situation should not exist for a single day.

For more than 10 years the salaries of many postal employees have remained unchanged, while prices and wages were continually advancing all around. In this respect, of all workers he stands alone. He should be granted immediate relief, because the justice of his case has been fully established. A 15 per cent increase in salary will still leave his average compensation far below what men of similar experience and ability are paid in private industry.

But—

the cost of the increased salaries proposed in the bill reported by your committee will involve an additional expenditure of more than $33,000,000 during the next fiscal year.

Assuming this statement to be accurate, what has it to do with the case? If one man is entitled to a wage increase, a larger number are equally so. The principle involved is the same. In the Postal Service there are something like 270,000 employees, and naturally any increase of wages, no matter how small it may be, will sum up an imposing total. It happens, too, that while the additional appropriation necessary may exceed a total of $33,000,000 the actual increase granted under the terms of the proposed 15 per cent salary advance will average less than 50 cents per day per employee. This angle of the case the Postmaster General signally fails to mention, but instead fearfully portrays a figure of disquieting proportions. Unless the post office is intended to be administered on a profit basis, this argument is utterly without weight.

Compared with the $300,000,000 wage increase recommended by the Railroad Wage Board, the sum of $33,000,000 increase for the post-office employees is a small matter indeed.

It is true that certain employees in the lower grades will receive annual automatic promotions in addition to the proposed 15 per cent increase by the terms of this amendment. Practically the same result would be reached, however, if the plan for a hundred and twenty dollars per annum increase, which the Postmaster General appears to favor, was enacted into law. Taking the case of an employee drawing $800 per annum, the result would be exactly the same—$1,020 annual salary, or 27½ per cent increase by either plan. Furthermore, it is generally conceded that the lower-salaried employees are deserving of especial consideration.

Calling attention to existing rates charged for first-class postage the Postmaster General says:

If these increases in compensation become permanent, it will never be practicable to reduce the rate of postage on letters from 3 cents to 2 cents.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator from New York?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. CALDER. Yes.

Mr. LEWIS. I wish to ask the Senator if he has had time to reflect on this phase of the situation: Is this increase, which we are seeking to give these postal employees any greater than that which we voted here some time ago to the different employes here at the Capital, which the Senator will recall? I will also ask the Senator if he does not recall that it is practically upon the same basis, showing that, if we grant this increase, it will likely enough be a uniform increase in view of the uniformity of increase in the price of living?

Mr. CALDER. The increases recommended by the committee are a little greater than the increases provided for in the legislation recently passed by the Senate for Federal employees in the District That increase was 10 per cent, I believe; this provides for a 15 per cent increase; but the Senator should have in mind that last year the Federal employees in the District received an increase, while the post-office employees did not; and then, too, the rural carriers are required to pay much more for their equipment and the city carrier is compelled to purchase uniforms out of his pay and incur other expenditures which are not incurred by the employees in the District of Columbia. The 15 per cent increase will in no wise equal the increase in the cost of living. The figures submitted to me by the Department of Labor indicate that the increased cost of living totals something like 35 per cent. So I believe, in view of these facts, that the committee amendment is little enough under the circumstances.

Mr. LEWIS. The Senator, I am sure, concedes that the amount that is being given these men, when one thinks of what they must expend for uniforms and otherwise leaves them with a net increase no greater than that which we gave the Federal employees in the District?

Mr. CALDER. That is true; in fact, the increase in the carriers' pay, when one considers the cost of their uniforms and equipment, the additional is less than the amount given to the Government employees in the District.

Mr. LEWIS. I thank the Senator. I know he has given great attention to this subject. I have made that assertion elsewhere, and I am gratified to have him fortify it.

Mr. CALDER. Again, it is pertinent to inquire what has this argument to do with the case? No one has ever claimed, not even the Postmaster General, that the wages of postal employees should hinge on the rates to be charged for postage. If a low rate of postage means a corresponding cheap salary standard, then the public should be so informed. Postal employees' wages should be based upon the character of men required and the equipment and ability they are expected to possess to efficiently perform the tasks allotted them. In no manner should a postal surplus or the price charged for postage affect the making of an equitable wage schedule. By attempting to becloud the issue through the introduction of these items lends color to the belief that the Postmaster General is more concerned in reporting an annual postal surplus than in securing an equitable wage standard for postal employees.

If postal employees are justly entitled to a raise in wages, it should be granted. This principle is fundamental. Referring to this phase of the controversy, the Morning Call, of Allentown, Pa., in its issue of April 16, 1918, illuminatingly observes:

So let this situation be argued backward and see what results: The country desires a return to 2-cent postage. According to Mr. Burleson there should be no increase in wages to the postal employees in order that there may be a return to 2-cent postage. Therefore there also ought to be a return to original purchasing power of the dollar that is paid these men. There ought to be a return of $3 shoes, 12-cent beef stew, 4-cent bread, $15 suits, and other prices in proportion.

What would be more reasonable? There would not be any demand for increase, for there would not be any need.

In concluding this remarkable communication to Mr. BANKHEAD the Postmaster General directs attention to the fact that an annual increase of $120 per annum per employee, as provided in H. R. 10358, will entail an appropriation of only $18,000,000 instead of the $33,000,000 contemplated by the proposed 15 per cent increase. Thus, he argues, the saving of some $15,000,000 would be effected. Even so; what bearing has this statement upon the issue? This argument is beside the question. By the same token if no increase at all were granted the entire $33,000,000 would be saved. It is well to repeat that the question involved is not what the proposed salary increase will total or what will be the eventual effect upon the postal surplus, but what under the existing circumstances should be a reasonable wage for postal workers.

An impartial analysis of the Postmaster General's statement shows it to be a strained and labored effort to bolster up a weak case—in fact, no case at all. From the beginning his attitude has been one of unremitting hostility to any increase in the wages of postal employees. In his most recent report he characterizes such petitions as "selfish demands" and charges that the postal employees "are justly compensated, receiving three times as much as those fighting in the trenches." This communication in question shows that he has receded somewhat from his prior stand and he is now reluctantly agreeable to $120 annual increase per employee. To support his new position on this question he advances arguments in opposition to a modest increase of wages that are utterly without merit. Every fact germane to an inquiry for fixing a wage schedule fully establishes the reason and justice on which are based the claims for a reasonable increase in salary of postal employees.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I ask the Secretary to read the next amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. The committee proposes, on page 27, line 7, after the words "rural station," to insert the following proviso:

Provided further, That on and after July 1, 1918, rural carriers assigned to standard horse-drawn vehicle routes on which daily service is performed shall receive $24 per mile per annum for each mile said routes are in excess of 24 miles: Provided further, That a carrier may use any character of vehicle on a horse-drawn vehicle route that is approved by the postmaster of the post office from which said route starts.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there are so few Senators in the Chamber that I feel it my duty to suggest the absence of a quorum before this amendment is finally acted upon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum is suggested. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Johnson, Cal.	Norris	Smoot
Borah	Jones, N. Mex.	Nugent	Sterling
Calder	Jones, Wash.	Overman	Sutherland
Chamberlain	Kellogg	Page	Thomas
Fall	Kendrick	Phelan	Thompson
France	Kenyon	Poindexter	Townsend
Gallinger	Kirby	Ransdell	Trammell
Gronna	Lenroot	Shafroth	Watson
Guion	Lewis	Sheppard	Wilfley
Harding	McKellar	Shields
Henderson	McNary	Simmons
Hollis	New	Smith, Md.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-five Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is not present. The Secretary will call the names of absent Senators.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. BAIRD, Mr. HALE, Mr. POMERENE, and Mr. VARDAMAN answered to their names when called.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KIRBY). The present occupant of the chair will announce that his colleague, the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], is absent on official business.

Mr. HARDWICK, Mr. CUMMINS, Mr. NELSON, Mr. KNOX, and Mr. UNDERWOOD entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-four Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I do not care to discuss this amendment. It is so just and fair that it seems to me a mere word should satisfy the Senate that it ought to be adopted.

The amendment simply proposes that rural carriers shall receive $24 per mile per annum for each mile traveled in excess of the standard route, to wit, 24 miles. In other words, at present if a carrier carries a route of 24 miles, he gets $1,200; if he carries 30 miles he does not get any more than $1,200. That is to say, he does not get a cent for any number of miles traveled above the standard route. For carrying the standard route of 24 miles he receives $50 a mile, and the committee thought it was just and fair that these carriers should be allowed something for the excess mileage they are required to carry on these long routes above 24 miles. We fixed the amount at less than half the pay they get per mile for a standard route.

It seems to me that that is all that it is necessary to say.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator what is the allowance per mile for the excess?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Twenty-four dollars per mile per annum.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, if the Senator from Alabama will permit me——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do. I yield the floor.

Mr. HARDWICK. Though the Senator's opening statement may be complete, this precise proposition was unanimously adopted by the Senate and put into the last Post Office Appropriation bill.

Mr. SMOOT. It went out in conference.

Mr. HARDWICK. It went out in conference; that is right. That is why it is put back here, but the Senate voted on this precise question last year.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Georgia a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. HARDWICK. If I have the floor, I yield.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I want to know whether this extra amount of $24 per mile is in addition to the $24 per mile which they now get?

Mr. BANKHEAD. They do not get anything now for the extra mileage.

Mr. HARDWICK. Let me explain the matter to the Senator in this way: One thousand two hundred dollars is fixed as the pay for a standard route, which is 24 miles. If the route is under 24 miles, the compensation is reduced $24 and more per mile; but under the existing law, if the route is over 24 miles, no pay is added to the standard pay.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Why has that been the practice? It seems to me very inequitable.

Mr. HARDWICK. It has always been an inequitable thing and always an unjust thing. A year ago I succeeded in getting a proposition just exactly like this put into the Post Office bill, and at that time the Post Office Department agreed to it; but in the disagreement that we had with the House over salary increases generally, this was lost in conference.

Mr. SHAFROTH. There is no other proposition of a different amount before the Senate?

Mr. HARDWICK. No; none in the world on this question.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I simply want to say a word in relation to this amendment.

There is no class of Government employees who are paid so little for the actual work done as the rural carriers. When the Senate stops to think, a great percentage of the rural carriers have routes running from 24 up to 36 miles. They are paid but $1,200 per annum, and out of that $1,200 per annum they must pay the expense of maintaining an automobile or a horse and buggy, which sometimes takes more than half of the $1,200. Senators can see, therefore, how poorly paid this class of employees is.

Mr. GALLINGER and Mr. NEW addressed the chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOLLIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator speaks of a horse and buggy. In the New England States, and particularly in wintertime, they are very fortunate, indeed, if they can transact their business with two horses, and some of them are using three horses; and they frequently lose a horse by overwork or from some other cause.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If the Senator will permit me, I will state that nearly all the rural carriers have two horses.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; they must have.

Mr. BANKHEAD. And a great many of them have three.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; that is right.

Mr. SMOOT. I thank the Senators for calling my attention to the matter. I was fully aware of it, but was unhappy in my statement in confining it to one horse. But even if they had to employ only one horse and a buggy, the cost of maintaining the horse and buggy to-day is such that there is hardly a rural carrier in the United States who makes more than $50 per month.

I have in my office an itemized statement from at least 100 rural carriers in the different parts of the country, and it shows that in over 75 per cent of the cases the rural carrier is not netting more than between four and five hundred dollars per annum after paying the expenses that he absolutely has to meet in order to make his daily route.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. NELSON. I want to say to the Senator that in Minnesota, my country, the rural carriers have to have at least two horses, and most of them have three horses; and even with three horses they find it very difficult to maintain the service in the winter months. They have to drive with two horses, and they need one as a reserve, in case of an accident or in case a horse is tired out. During the winter, at least, practically all of them have to use three horses, and they can not use automobiles.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the statement made by the Senator from Minnesota will apply to every State in this Union. I scan the appropriation bills pretty carefully, and I have scanned this one, and there are items in this bill that I believe could be reduced; but I want to say that the item that we have under consideration, increasing the salaries of the rural carriers, is as just an item as could appear in an appropriation bill; and I do not believe there is a Senator, who will make an investigation of the matter, who will say for one moment, or even intimate, that it is not just.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, may I be permitted to ask the Senator a question?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have not looked into this matter recently with any care. Is an increase in salary granted in this bill to the rural carriers who cover only the 24-mile route?

Mr. SMOOT. The only increase of that character will be the general increase of 15 or 20 per cent that will be given the employees of the Post Office Department; but this particular item is $24 per mile where the route is over 24 miles.

Mr. GALLINGER. But the general increase will be about $120, will it?

Mr. SMOOT. It would be an average of perhaps $180.

Mr. GALLINGER. I was hoping that Congress might see the propriety of giving these men about $1,500 a year. I have looked into the matter with a good deal of care, so far as certain routes are concerned, and I know that many of the carriers are "living at a poor dying rate."

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that if the Senate adopts the 20 per cent increase it will be $1,440.

Mr. HARDWICK. But there are a great many of these routes that are 25, 26, and 27 miles long.

Mr. SMOOT. And some of them as high as 37 miles, as I understand.

Mr. HARDWICK. Thirty-six.

Mr. GALLINGER. There never was any justice in requiring those men to cover more than 24 miles, which is the standard route, without increased pay. That has always been, I have thought, a gross injustice to these men.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I hope this amendment will be agreed to. If there is any question of appropriations being extravagant, let us begin scanning all the appropriations, and we can cut out a good many times what this is going to cost the Government, without doing any service of the Government any harm.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me a word further, I was aware of the fact that we inserted an amendment perhaps identical with this one, or at any rate similar to it, in the last Post Office appropriation bill; and, as the Senator from Georgia has suggested, it was lost in conference. I am going to express the hope that if this amendment is agreed to the conferees on the part of the Senate will not yield readily if a demand is made that they shall yield, but that they, representing the Senate, will fight with great vigor and earnestness to secure the increase.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator from Utah will allow me, I will say that they would not have yielded last time if I had been on the conference committee. That is, I do not think one of them ever would have yielded, but there will be no trouble about it this time. We will stick to it. Not only that, but this same proposition has passed the House already, and they are for it. There will be no trouble about it. It is an act of justice long delayed.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. VARDAMAN. If the Senator from Utah will pardon me, I want to express my sincere gratification at the expressions of approval of this amendment. It is a matter to which I have given a great deal of thought, and upon which I have gathered a great deal of data; and I think there are no employees of the Government who are more inadequately paid for the great service they render the American people than these rural carriers.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, we have heard a great deal in this Chamber during the last 30 days of the poorly paid clerks in the departments at Washington. Why, Mr. President, there ought to be in some appropriation bill or some other bill a provision prohibiting the heads of the new bureaus and commissions from paying salaries from lump sums, in many cases 75 per cent higher than similar employees are paid when they are regularly appropriated for by act of Congress. We find these commissions taking Senators' clerks. We find all of the departments whose clerks' salaries we appropriate for by statute being robbed of clerks nearly every day for the purpose of going to these commissions and bureaus, where they receive sometimes as high as $600 more than they were paid before. If we want to save money, there is a very fruitful field.

Mr. THOMAS. But we do not.

Mr. SMOOT. But, as the Senator from Colorado suggests, we do not.

The situation is known by all Senators who have given the matter any attention. The Appropriations Committee of the Senate has discussed the question time and time again, and one item now in the legislative appropriation bill, agreed to by the Senate, preventing the increase of $120 per annum from applying to the employees in the bureaus and commissions that have been established since January 1, 1916, is being fought out in conference. The conferees so far have been unable to agree with regard to it; but I think the Senate provision was a just one, and the only objection I have is that it did not go far enough.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the enormous increase in the cost of living all over the country has had the effect of cutting down the income of every person who is living on a fixed salary. Ordinarily I have been opposed to the increase of salaries, but for the last year or two we have seen the cost of living going up by leaps and bounds yearly, monthly, and almost daily, until it has become apparent that it is with great difficulty that the man who a few years ago had an income that was amply sufficient to support himself and family and to accumulate some saving for old age is not now able to make both ends meet. The increase in the cost of living has affected everybody, and wherever the income is stationary like those working on a salary it has made it almost impossible often for people who before have been living in ordinary comfort to even exist.

Every man with a moderately small income that is fixed has been directly affected by this change, and particularly since we have been engaged in the war this increased cost of living has been growing at an alarming rate until, in my judgment, it has become necessary for the Government to increase the pay of all the lower-salaried employees.

This cost of living applies in a double way to the rural free-delivery carriers. The increased cost of living as it applies to a human being applies also to the keeping up of the equipment and the horses that are necessary for the rural carrier to maintain, so that the rural carrier has been inflicted twice by this increased cost of living.

Therefore, while it seems to me that other salaries ought to be and must be increased, and some have been increased, we ought to be more liberal in the increase of a rural carrier's salary than in the increase of the salaries of those who do not have to keep up the equipment they must at all times maintain in good order and repair. The cost of keeping a horse or a team has increased just as rapidly and at the same rate as the cost of maintaining an individual.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HARDWICK. I suggest to the Senator from Nebraska, as further strengthening his argument along that line, that the rural carriers are the only people in any branch of the Postal Service who furnish and maintain their own equipment at their own expense. The city carriers have horses, trucks, and so forth, provided for as fixed by law.

Mr. NORRIS. I thank the Senator for the suggestion. I do not wish to criticize the supplying of the city carrier with his equipment. I think the Government ought to do that or ought to pay for the support of it—one or the other. A rural carrier can not perform his duty unless he has horses and wagons or automobiles, and in most cases he is not able to use an automobile all the year around.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator will pardon one further suggestion, I am not trying, of course, to criticize the department in caring for the city carriers.

Mr. NORRIS. I did not take the Senator's remark that way.

Mr. HARDWICK. Of course, the very reason which leads to it in one case leads us to extend equality of treatment in the other case.

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly; as a matter of common justice, we ought to do it.

Something has been said about the cost to rural carriers of equipment and cost of upkeep of equipment. I have had reports from 150 rural carriers in the State of Nebraska giving an itemized account of their investments and their expenditures. That reminds me that the rural carrier's outfit costs a great deal of money. He not only gives his time, and has to support himself and his family and care for his horses and the balance of his equipment, but he has a whole lot of money invested in that equipment. I have selected at random only a few of these reports, to which I want to direct the attention of the Senate.

Something has been said about the number of horses that must be maintained. I find, in looking over these reports—and I have also found upon personal investigation—that the man who is covering a route of from 24 to 30 and 31 or 32 miles—and in the West most of them are more than 24; in a great many localities they will average 30—is not able to do his work even with two horses. It is difficult for him to perform all the service with three horses. It depends, of course, somewhat upon the kind of a horse he has. If he has a good horse, he has invested a great deal of money in it, and it will do more work than a poor horse; but many of these rural carriers maintain four horses, many of them keep three, some only two and an automobile. Occasionally one does a good deal of work, if he is favorably located, with an automobile, and he has only one horse, which he uses when the weather or the road is such that he can not use the automobile.

Here is a report from a rural carrier at Atkinson, Nebr. He has four horses, and the cost of his horses was $400. Everybody will concede that that is a very moderate estimate. The cost of his vehicle was $100, the cost of the harness $50, making a total cost of $550 that he has invested. We are all acquainted enough with conditions that exist now to know that this man has put that equipment very low. It is wearing out every day; the horses are getting older.

Mr. VARDAMAN. How many horses?

Mr. NORRIS. Four horses. He has a total investment of $550. He has spent during the year $24 for shoeing and repairs, $430 for oats, for corn $42, for hay $200, for other feed $15, and he has marked the depreciation at $75. Total upkeep, $786. It is easy to figure it; anyone can do it. If you do, you will find that every one of these estimates is very moderate, taking the prices of things into consideration. Now, when he got through he had left a net salary of $438 for a year's work, and he devoted his time and the time of four horses and the vehicles he used in connection with it.

Mr. President, it does not need any argument to convince a reasonable man that under present conditions that is not fair.

Here is another man who has three horses. He estimates the value of his horses at $300, the vehicles that he has at $180, harness at $50.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Can one buy a horse for $100 now in Nebraska?

Mr. NORRIS. No; you can not do it. You can not buy it for anywhere near that sum.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I thought it was not possible.

Mr. NORRIS. I have not seen these particular horses, but I presume they would not be considered first-class horses.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I should think not.

Mr. NORRIS. Any kind of a nag is worth $100 now.

Mr. VARDAMAN. That is my understanding of the price, and I could not understand why they were so cheap in Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. That is not the price; they are worth a great deal more than that; but that is the price the rural carrier has put them at, and I am sure he is very moderate in his estimate.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHAFROTH in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SHIELDS. I heard the detailed statement the Senator gave of the investments made in communications from rural carriers in Nebraska, and they are very similar in amount to items in Tennessee. I find on looking over a very large number in Tennessee that they would perhaps average about $550 or perhaps $600 for annual cost and upkeep of the equipment. I will ask the Senator if the reports he gets are not similar to those?

Mr. NORRIS. They are. I will say to the Senator that I have here somewhere among the papers the average of 150 that I will put in the RECORD.

Here is another man who has two horses and an automobile, but he uses the automobile, he says, seven months in the year. He paid $435 for his automobile. Everybody will concede that that is very modest. He has put his horses in also at $100 apiece—below what they are probably worth—and the vehicles, two of them, at $100, and two sets of harness, at $70. He finds when he gets through that he has a net income of $347.86 for his year's work for himself and all that investment.

I was interrupted when I was giving the report of the other carrier. I did not give his net account. The man whose report I was reading when I was interrupted has left from his salary with which to maintain himself and his family for an entire year only $235.

Here is another man with a route that is 27 miles long. He uses an automobile and has no team. He has invested in his automobile $525. He has paid for gasoline $187.80; for oil and grease, $35; for new parts, $50; for tires, $160; for garage rent, $35; for repairs, $50; and he puts depreciation at $200. It seems to me that that man's expenses with the automobile are very modest. He has $483.20 at the end of the year, out of which he must support his family, which we all know is entirely inadequate under present conditions.

Another one who has an automobile and two horses has left at the end of the year $205.

Here is another one who has an automobile that costs $460. He keeps three horses. His total upkeep of the horses and his vehicles is $400. The upkeep of his automobile is $300. The net income that he has at the end of the year is $453.50.

Here is another one with a net income of $465.25.

Here is another one who has a net income of $403.20, and so on through.

Mr. President, taking 150 of these reports running similarly to those that I have detailed and that I have in my possession, they show that the total cost of upkeep and operation of necessary equipment on the average for 150 rural carriers is $740.70 each, and that they have on an average a net income at the end of the year of $467.20.

I understand also that the Post Office Department is losing a great many rural carriers, and I have no doubt whatever, unless the compensation of the rural carrier is increased, as it ought to be, we will find that that part of our postal activities is seriously interfered with. They are waiting now to see what this Congress is going to do for next year. Many of them can not live on the income they now receive.

It is due, it seems to me, as a matter of justice to these faithful employees that we shall make an increase not only in their salary but a sufficient allowance that they may meet the extra cost of the upkeep for the necessary equipment they must maintain. It is not only necessary to keep our postal system in running order, but would be an act of common justice to these deserving and efficient public servants, and we should not permit the opposition of the department to prevent us from doing what, in my judgment, is our plain duty.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I feel constrained to sound a discordant note in this feast of harmony. I did not intend to do so because I know this and similar legislation will be enacted at this session of Congress for reasons which are entirely convincing to a majority of both Houses of Congress. But this is as appropriate as any time to express my dissent from proposed methods of relief legislation.

There is no doubt, Mr. President, but that the beneficiaries of this amendment are poorly paid, relatively speaking. There is no question of doubt but that the dollars which they receive do not go as far as they used to go. Such is the universal condition and such will be the universal condition as long as the war lasts, and afterwards, if we attempt to relieve it by legislation of this character.

Mr. President, although I may not be given credit for the statement, it is nevertheless a fact that I sympathize quite as heartily with those who are unable to make both ends meet at this time, whether they are in the Government service or out of it, as any other Member of the Senate. I am anxious to do what a man in my position ought to do to relieve these conditions if legislation can relieve them, but I am unable to perceive how legislation of this sort can do otherwise than aggravate them.

The country has been visited during the past 12 months by a series of strikes carried on by men in various occupations and having for their purpose an increase of wages. Each successive strike is based upon that ground, notwithstanding the fact that preceding ones have been uniformly successful upon the same ground, all of which illustrates, as I have repeatedly contended, that the race between the man who furnishes the necessaries of life and the man who is obliged to pay for them is a most unequal one. The former has all the advantage and so keeps ahead of his customer.

I do not know of a groceryman or a dry goods man or any other man dealing in the necessities of life who is not supporting these proposed increases. I have received many letters and telegrams, mostly the latter, urging me to support this and similar increases, and 60 per cent of them comes from those who deal in the necessities of life. Their hearts bleed for the man or the woman who is unable to secure them at prevailing rates, and they have a lively sympathy for their misfortunes and their sufferings. Yet we note that as these increases are made the prices of the commodities are advanced so as to take in the increase as speedily as possible.

This amendment will pass, and within the next 15 or 20 days after it shall have been written upon the statute books the price of horses and of horse feed, and of human food, and of clothing, and of everything else which ministers to the comfort and the necessities of life will advance again. As a consequence we are making of these various employees agencies only, pipes, if you please, leading into the Treasury, at the other end of which is the materialman, and we will continue to do it, with the result that with each successive session of Congress the employees of the Government will come to us for additional increases because of the identical conditions to which I refer. That is human nature; as old as the human race. The purveyor to the public gets what he can and takes advantage of favorable conditions. He would be otherwise than human if he did not.

We never will be able to meet these conditions—in all the tides of history they never have been met—by legislation of this sort. The salary of Cabinet officers is $12,000 per annum. If we made it $15,000 they would be confronted with the same raises made to absorb the increase just as soon as it was called to the attention of those with whom they deal. So, Mr. President, I am unable to lend my assent to the view that we are doing justice to anyone by this process, and I contend that we are doing injustice to the taxpayers of the country.

In supporting this measure the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] called attention to the fact that the beneficiaries of this particular amendment are very poorly paid. Indeed, he went so far as to emphasize the proposition that they are among those who are paid the poorest of any of the employees of the Government. Yet that has been said of every class of employees whose relief has been designed by similar amendments in previous bills. I must therefore conclude that of all employees in the United States those are poorest paid who work for the Government, and when they come in classes and ask for relief it is that particular class which at the time is the poorest paid of all.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] has called attention to the fact that quite a number of those engaged in the carriage of the rural mails have quit their employment because they could do better on the outside. Why should they not? A man having one horse or two horses or three horses, no matter what the number is, in view of the present demand for labor can do infinitely better outside of Government employment by taking his horses, and he owes it to himself and his family to do so, and adding to the productive wealth of the country. That is where his energy should be expended. If necessary we can do without a daily mail, but we can not do without cabbages and onions. If necessary, we can have a triweekly mail, and if these employees can do better outside the Government service it is not only their right, but I think it is their duty to do so.

On the other hand, I am informed that the waiting list of men who have qualified under civil-service examinations and who are not only ready and willing but are anxious to take these places is extremely long. So in that event I do not perceive that the Government will suffer if the salaries remain as they are, while I do perceive that they will suffer without any benefit conferred through the operation of this bill, except for a few days, while those who—and I am not criticizing them because their expenses have also risen—dealing in the necessities of life, raise their prices and absorb the advance.

The Senator from Utah says we might cut somewhere else. Where? I have opposed a number of amendments to other bills carrying sums of money in various amounts, and in each instance I have been told that while we should economize we must not attempt to do so at that particular point. The one thing that the Senate of the United States can not discover—I will not say that it does not want to discover it, but the one thing that the Senate of the United States can not discover—is the point where we should begin to practice economy. A point is said to be invisible. It has neither length, breadth, nor thickness. Doubtless that is why it is impossible for the finite mind to discover it or the mortal eye to perceive it. It is not here, and I fear it never will be.

As I have said, I have done what I could to cut expenses, and the only result of the cutting process up to this time has been the fact that some of my associates have indicated that my action would meet just rebuke. Did they cut my acquaintance? Fortunately, they have not done so yet.

We do not, we can not, we will not begin to economize until we change our methods of financial legislation.

The Senator from Utah criticizes the departments which out of general funds pay higher salaries to some employees than the salaries fixed by law for others. That is an inequity which should receive correction, but I would correct it by giving to the departments a general sum for all salaries, and let each department fix and distribute the number of employees and their salaries as seems best for the good of the service.

By that means, Mr. President, we would escape a large amount of drudgery in legislation and at the same time impose upon these departments a duty which will tend toward economy in some degree. That is the system in many if not all the other countries whose consequent financial problems certainly are less difficult than ours.

Mr. President, I believe that something should be done by the Government for its employees because of the increased expenses of living. We are doing something in the District by the housing bill. We should follow it up if necessary by Government purchase of the necessities of life, and let the employees have them at prices less than cost, if necessary, but within their common means. It is the only way in the world in which we can remedy this defect; try as we may, we can not reach it by any other processes.

Mr. President, I regret that in this as in other measures there is a tendency not only to increase the expenses in one direction, but to decrease receipts in another.

This bill carries something over $4,000,000 for the purchase of pneumatic-tube systems in various cities of the country. My judgment is that might well be postponed until after the war, even though the companies owning the tubes may be financially distressed as are the postal employees of the Government.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator will pardon me——

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator may rest under that misapprehension; but we do not propose to pay the tube companies $4,000,000 or any other amount now. In fact, we have not increased the expenditure for this item at all, but have merely amortized the payments. They are not greater this year than they were last year or the year before or the year before that.

Mr. THOMAS. But the Government makes itself liable for this sum of money.

Mr. HARDWICK. But it does not have to pay it out.

Mr. THOMAS. The Government may not have to pay it out at once; certainly it does not, according to the statement of my friend the Senator from Georgia; but we are incurring liabilities which might well be postponed for further consideration.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. May I suggest to the Senator from Colorado, in view of the interruption of the Senator from Georgia, that the fact seems to be that we have been paying about $350,000 a year more than we ought to have paid for the service of these tubes? It is hardly an answer to the argument just made by the Senator from Colorado to assert that if we keep on paying this excessive sum we shall not entail further expense on the Government.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. I hope we shall not get into a controversy; but I cheerfully yield.

Mr. HARDWICK. The only purpose of my interruption was to show that there is no increase in expenditure in this item now to come out of the Treasury.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, does not the Senator from Georgia recognize that there will be an increase in the operation of these tubes by the Government, necessitating an expenditure of from $300,000 to $500,000?

Mr. HARDWICK. No.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I so understood it.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the notice given by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] a few days ago that he would ask for a suspension of the rules, that he might attach an amendment to the bill, indicates that we are not only to increase expenses, but may also reduce revenues by this bill. We are going to afford relief to some poor newspaper and magazine publishers if the rules are suspended by postponing the collection of revenues from them, and that will probably be followed by the ultimate abandonment of that source of taxation, not because the Senator contemplates it, but because the interests affected by the tax will very naturally demand it, and ought to demand it, if their contentions for the postponement are sound.

The Finance Committee last year reported a bill to impose an added burden of about $70,000,000 upon the people of the United States who have occasion to use the postal facilities of the country. We increased first-class postage, which pays a magnificent profit to the Government, by 50 per cent; we increased second-class postage very slightly, and that is the one which is causing the trouble. The reason given for that increase was that we needed the money for the purpose of prosecuting the war; hence the good people of the country, from motives of patriotism, were required to make that sacrifice and pay more for their first-class postage by 50 per cent during the war than they had been accustomed to pay for some time, as a certain means of securing revenue for the war. Now, this bill proposes to take some $45,000,000 of that revenue and use it for increased postal expenses—not for the prosecution of the war but for the purpose of aiding what, I am sure, will be a permanent increased expense to the administration of our postal affairs.

This leads me, Mr. President, to briefly refer to the plight of a very unimportant portion of our population whose chief relation to the Government is to earn money and pay taxes. That is the humble but necessary performance of a very essential duty, both in times of war and in times of peace. They are willing to do so, and will continue to do so cheerfully, so long as the money seems to be used for the purposes we have promised to devote it.

Let us for a moment see what their burdens are: The first year of this war cost us—and I am trying to be conservative—$12,000,000,000. The estimates recently submitted by the Secretary of War for the expenses of his department for the coming fiscal year are $15,000,000,000. The comparatively trifling amount for our usual and ordinary and necessary expenses might be added to this sum, but that is not essential to my purpose.

This means, excluding other items also, that on the 1st day of July, 1919, we shall be confronted with a public debt of $27,000,000,000, interest on which at 4 per cent is the equivalent of $1,080,000,000 per annum, or a sum about equal to our total annual expenses prior to the war.

Mr. President, if the Government had the magical power of creating money, if it enjoyed the sole possession of some mysterious process by whose operation the vaults of the Treasury could be kept perpetually filled, I should be very glad to support this and similar proposed increases and to grant this and similar proposed exemptions. I might go so far as to adopt and apply the political platform of Tittlebat Titmouse and stand for "everything for everybody"; but, unfortunately, that is impossible. The money which is necessary to run the Government must come from some source. We must either raise it by grinding taxation or we must borrow it, if we can, and let posterity pay it. A third alternative, that of creating a noninterest-bearing debt, I hesitate to even suggest, because it is regarded as too heterodox to receive serious consideration. So probably that will be postponed to a day of dire necessity, which may never come.

Mr. President, in order to meet some of these enormous war expenses we enacted what was called an excess-profits tax revenue bill last year, which was miscalled "a war-tax revenue bill," under which the taxpayers, on or before the 15th day of next month, must pay at least $3,500,000,000 into the United States Treasury. I receive, and I have no doubt my colleagues receive, many plaintive appeals urging the enactment of legislation during the next 30 days under the provisions of which these taxpayers may pay this enormous sum of money by installments. The reason they give for urging such legislation is that the burden of taxation is so great that they can not pay the whole sum at one time without serious inconvenience and, in some instances, without being compelled to use their credit to borrow the money and to pay interest upon it. The sum of $3,500,000,000 is the equivalent of $35 per capita of our population. A man with a wife and several children therefore finds the burden of that tax to be very considerable. The added sum of $15 per capita for State, county, and municipal taxes is conservative, and that means $50 per capita in actual taxes for the good year 1918.

I have a homely notion, Mr. President, that the requirements and needs of these people should be a subject of first consideration with the American Congress, and yet it does not seem to concern it much. If I should introduce a bill proposing to pay from the Treasury of the United States to every citizen $50, so as to enable him to meet these added burdens, I should be laughed out of the Senate Chamber. But should not the people who must pay all the money that we expend be entitled to some consideration when we are expending it? I do not believe that the Congress should appropriate a dollar for ordinary governmental expenses during this war which is not absolutely and unavoidably necessary. I believe that the people should all make sacrifices, and strenuous sacrifices, if necessary, to the end that the war may be successfully prosecuted and be terminated as soon as possible. And all the people, including those who are asking the Government to divert part of its revenues to them, should. Suffering and self-denial accompany expenditures required by great crises, that we may the more certainly realize the sums necessary to defray them. But organized beneficiaries of Treasury appropriations would seem to be exempted from this supreme requirement. The taxpaying citizens of the Nation will be heard from later.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, there is a great deal of true philosophy in what the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] has stated. Indeed, he is considerable of a philosopher, and says many things which are worth hearing and observing. It seems to me, however, that the problem before us is not theoretical, but one that is entirely practical and must be met under the conditions which surround us.

It is undoubtedly true that the salaries paid in the United States to the agents of the Government form a fund which is sought by every producer, by every dealer, by every person who sells the products which the people require. The millions paid by the Government in salaries are the object of every device which greed and avarice can devise and every increase stimulates their efforts. But because of this shall we leave the employee naked and hungry? I will not permit any man to go further than I will go in condemnation of the profiteering system which is widespread throughout the land. I receive letters, as do other Senators, frequently from the people of the United States asking that I support some measure which will enforce the penalty of death through courts-martial upon spies and other alien enemies; but I have never been willing to consider favorably the proposition of doing away with our courts and administering summary punishment upon people who have not been tried by a jury in a civil court, except in the Army and Navy, where martial law is absolutely necessary. I nevertheless condemn as strongly as any man can do the traitors and spies within our midst who seek to do injury by retarding preparation and depreciating patriotism; but I would class among the most dangerous enemies to this country those who are profiting unconscionably out of the present necessities of the country.

It is because of this condition that such laws as the one proposed are required; it is because of this that billions of extra money for war preparations are needed. If the Government had to pay only a reasonable profit to those who produce the things necessary for the conduct of the war and for the living of the people, our taxes would be less and our people would not suffer so much; but the fact is that these conditions do prevail, and I know of no way presently to prevent them.

It is undoubtedly true that if we could conduct all of the affairs of the Government without salary, there would be less opportunity for dealers to speculate on the necessities of the people; but we can not get the service of the Government performed for nothing. Therefore it becomes necessary for the Congress, so far as Government employees are concerned, to fix reasonable salaries for services rendered.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to make a suggestion at that point?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I do not know of any enterprises that have been commandeered by the Government, including the railroads, steamboats, and other instrumentalities of commerce, that are not to-day making larger profits than they ever made before probably within their history, while the laboring men, the employees of the Government, whose interests we are taking care of in this bill at the same time large enterprises are making enormous profits for the service rendered by them to the Government, receive a salary scarcely adequate to their needs and to meet the expenses of their families. There is no profiteering in what they are doing on the salaries they receive, and, unless the Government does raise salaries, want and suffering will be the result. The Government can not afford to be unjust in dealing with its employees.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, the one point which the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] makes which I can not accept, and to which I do not assent, is that the people could endure without an efficient Post Office Department.

Mr. THOMAS. I said during the war, if necessary.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I accept the correction. Mr. President, there is no department of the Government that is more necessary in war than is the Post Office Department. If any Senator will sit down and look the field over very carefully to see which instrumentalities of the Government could be dispensed with in time of war with the least harm to the Government and to the people, it seems to me he will conclude that the Post Office Department should come almost last on the list. War preparations require the Postal Service. Business, war and other, depends for its success upon the mail. Patriotism is kept aflame by the press, which reaches the people through the post office. The hearts of our soldiers and sailors are kept strong and those of their loved ones at home are kept beating by letters which pass through the mails, and the mail service should be the most efficient possible.

I admit that there are many things connected with the Post Office Department which might be eliminated. Who is able to do it? When we attempt even to make second-class mail matter pay what it costs the Government to handle it we are met with irresistible opposition; we can not succeed there. But there is a legitimate purpose of the Post Office Department that must be met.

If we are going to have a Post Office Department, if it is necessary as you and I believe it is, we must have men to operate it. I know that the war and war prices are making it difficult to secure adequate help to maintain efficiently many post offices and other agencies of the Post Office Department. I know, for example, in the city of Detroit, one of the great centers of industry of this country, that the postmaster has been unable to get efficient men to perform the services required in his office, due to the fact, as was stated by the Senator from Colorado, that people could get better wages elsewhere. The substitute carriers would not purchase uniforms because they were expecting to go into some other work at the very first opportunity. It is necessary to have the post office at Detroit; it is necessary for the business interests which are engaged in production for the Government in this time of war that the post office there shall be maintained. It is being maintained inefficiently, and it will be so maintained unless a reasonable compensation under the circumstances can be paid to the employees of that office. I have received probably 300—I have not counted them—signed statements from rural carriers in my State showing exactly what expense the carrier is put to, what it costs him to purchase and maintain his equipment. The communications contain not a word as to the cost of the carrier's own living, but simply state the necessary expenditure that he must meet in order to do the business required of him by the Government. I have not found a single instance where a man requiring, perhaps, an automobile and two horses and one or more rigs has a net income over and above the cost of maintenance exceeding $600 a year. The great majority have left after paying operating expenses less than $400. Most of the men are married and have families to support. I am not going to put all of these communications into the RECORD, because other Senators understand the situation as well as I do, but these are the facts.

Now, the question is, first, Is it necessary to have the work done? Do we want to maintain the Rural Delivery Service in the United States? I think, if put to a vote on the floor of the Senate, there would not be a half dozen votes, possibly not more than one vote in the Senate, in favor of the proposition to abolish the Free Rural Delivery System. Indeed, we are enlarging the service; on every occasion we are trying to make it more efficient by adding to it—we have added to it the parcels post, and in this bill there is a provision for truck service—because the people believe in it. I believe in it; I do not think anything has been done in this country for a quarter of a century that has contributed more to the welfare of the whole country than has the establishment and maintenance of free rural delivery.

If it is settled that we are going to keep free rural delivery—and we must keep it—the next question is, How are we going to do it? I do not think it will be possible to maintain under the present conditions the Free Rural Delivery Service in any manner adequately efficient unless we increase the compensation which the rural carriers are to receive. It may be true, as the Senator from Colorado intimates, that many people are on the waiting list for these jobs. It was true once. I do not believe it is true now. Men can not live and support their families on the salaries now paid, and this great Government has no right now to ask its postal employees to starve themselves and families while it permits mercenary profiteers to increase our taxes and the cost of every necessity of life.

The House has adopted a provision which adds 20 per cent to the compensation which carriers are already receiving. I know that the Senate bill provided, in the first place, for $24 per mile per year additional to those carriers who had routes in excess of 24 miles, plus 15 per cent additional to their salary. The House added a straight 20 per cent increase. I understand that the distinguished chairman of the Senate Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads has offered in the Senate the House provision as an amendment.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That amendment is pending and is being considered now.

Mr. TOWNSEND. That is the amendment now pending. That involves a large sum of money, somewhat larger than the original Senate provision would require. I wish so much was not necessary at this time.

I believe in economy, as the Senator from Colorado believes in it, but I believe in accomplishing the necessary things for the Government. We are doing it in everything else; there is not a single thing that is brought up in the way of war preparation as to which we even stop to consider the cost; yet it is suggested that the Post Office Department, which was originally established not for the purpose of making money but as a bulwark for a great, free Republic, as a means of disseminating information—education, if you please—be made the object of economy in this instance. It would be false economy. I do not want to waste the people's money. I, too, with the Senator from Colorado, have stood against many appropriations that I believed to be extravagant. I do not believe that this appropriation is extravagant; I believe that it is absolutely necessary not only to the welfare of the Post Office Department but to the welfare of the Government as well.

I am sorry that the exploiters of men during this horrible crisis has made it necessary for the Government to appropriate untold millions of dollars which would not be necessary if every man who had things to sell was actuated by real patriotism and was content to receive a reasonable profit upon the thing he sold. I wish I knew how to frame a law that would get at the root of this evil, but I know of no way of accomplishing it. I have supported every measure that has been proposed that seemed at all reasonable in that direction; but meanwhile it is a condition and not a theory that confronts us; it is a question of maintaining the Post Office Department efficiently or of abandoning or neglecting it, and thereby, in my judgment, doing as much to injure our country now as anything else that could be done. Therefore, Mr. President, I have been favorable to the increase of salaries to postal employees, including rural delivery carriers.

As I understand, an amendment is to be offered affecting fourth-class postmasters. The Senate provision is a wise one, but the new amendment offered by the chairman of the committee incorporating the House provision is, in my opinion, not adequate. If we are going to have fourth-class post offices, the men who are put in charge of them should at least be treated decently, so far as compensation is concerned. The rural postmaster and his carrier are the only agents of the Government with whom many of our citizens come in contact. They should be clean, honest, capable people, able to maintain a decent office and to live respectably. I trust that the amendment adopted originally by the Senate will at least be approximately approached in whatever action may be taken by the Senate to-day on this measure.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I favor the proposed amendments for the increase of the compensation of postal employees, including clerks, city and rural carriers, and fourth-class postmasters. I believe that such increase is just and fair to these employees, and necessary for an efficient Postal System.

We have better carriers now than we had when this system was first put into operation some twenty-odd years ago. They have all undergone the civil-service examination. They have other duties and added responsibilities. They are no longer mere messengers to deliver mail and papers. They must be and are men of fair business capacity. The Parcel Post System and Postal Savings Bank have added materially to their responsibilities. Competent men with the required qualifications can not be obtained for the pittance paid them at this time. This is specially so as to the rural carriers. They are required to pay out about one-half of it for the purchase and upkeep of their horses and vehicles, and can not support their families upon what is left.

Many good men are leaving the service on this account, and it is hard to supply their places. The proposed increase of salaries is absolutely necessary to maintain an efficient service, and should not be longer delayed. They are the only class of postal employees required to furnish their own equipment, and the poorest paid men in the service.

Congress has not only by repeated legislation increased the compensation of numerous employees, and in all the new offices created in the last three or four years it has provided for larger salaries and compensation than ever before, but every business concern in the country of any magnitude has taken cognizance of the increase in the cost of living and has increased the compensation of its employees. These are facts of common knowledge and of common practice throughout the United States; and yet here are a deserving set of employees who, notwithstanding the great increase in the cost of living, estimated at not less than 60 per cent, have had no increase in their salaries or wages for more than 10 years.

It takes no argument to show the injustice of this treatment. When the cost of their living doubles, the effect of it is to reduce their salaries one-half. Every Member of the Senate has felt that in the last three or four years his salary is not worth more than two-thirds of what it was five years ago. Mr. President, this proposed legislation only applies to small salaries, comparatively speaking. The reference to Cabinet officers getting $12,000 a year or other officers receiving three or four thousand dollars or upward is not pertinent. A man who gets four, five, or twelve thousand dollars can very easily economize. It does not take all of that to supply the necessaries of life to his family, as it does in the cases covered by this bill, where these people get only from $600 to $2,000. Every dollar of this is needed by them to properly feed and clothe their families. These are the sort of salaries that ought to be increased, and they are the salaries that are proposed to be increased by this bill.

I have been struck with the fact that the cost of the Rural Free Delivery Service to the Government is about $53,000,000 and that the carriers are required to expend for equipment annually one-half of that sum—about $25,000,000. This is startling. It seems an outrage that these employees should be required to pay one-third of the cost of the Rural Delivery System.

I believe that, if anything, these increases are too small. We need efficient men in these places, and the Government ought to be just to them. I hope there will be no opposition to the proposed increase of the compensation of all these postal services. They have onerous duties to perform and should be paid salaries commensurate with what other employees are receiving and with due consideration of the high cost of living.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I wish to give notice that I reserve the right to have a separate vote in the Senate on the amendment proposed by the committee referring to the pneumatic-tube system.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I shall not delay a vote on this amendment by any extended remarks.

I want to say that I approve most heartily of the views of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] regarding the matter of taxation, and the necessity for rigid economy in governmental expenditures. I shall not support any measure that has not for its purpose justice. I am voting to raise the salaries of these employees, because I feel that they are entitled to it. I feel that the Government, at their present wages, is not treating them fairly; that it is not giving them sufficient salaries to meet the demands upon them and to support, as every American family ought to be supported, the families of these particular employees of the Government.

When conditions change, when values decline, and the depression comes, if I have the honor to be a Member of this body, I shall vote for a reduction of salaries. In other words, the vote that I shall cast to-day will not in any way bind my conscience and my judgment for the future.

We must treat conditions as they are, not as we would have them. We must deal with them as they are to-day, not as they were yesterday or as they may be to-morrow. Viewing the matter from that standpoint I do not think Congress can afford to do less for these earnest, efficient public servants than to adopt the amendment offered by the committee.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I am in favor of this amendment, and trust that it will prevail.

As I look at the amendment and note the increases for which it provides, and that those employees receiving $800 or less are to have an increase of 20 per cent per annum, I am led to wonder how, with a salary of $800 or less, they have lived or are enabled now to live. As we come face to face day after day with the high cost of living, we wonder not only with reference to these employees with salaries of $800 or less, but with reference to those with much higher salaries, as to how they are enabled to live. So with reference to all these salaries for which there is this proposed increase I think the conditions fully justify the increases proposed by the committee in this amendment.

Why, Mr. President, take the highest salaries which will be increased by this amendment, what under present conditions is likely to be the effect upon the efficiency of the service? The employee receives a salary barely enabling him to live from day to day and support his family, with no prospect of sufficient for future needs for sickness or for age. That prospect, I think, can not help but impair the efficiency of the employee who faces it, and I think we shall never have efficient service in governmental affairs until there is reasonable compensation paid to the Government employees.

Mr. President, I am particularly interested in the increase provided for in this amendment for the rural carriers. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] a while ago read from some statements he had received. I have scores of them here, but I just want to call attention to two or three, with a word of comment by the carrier himself in addition to the statement which he has filled out.

Here is one who fixes the total cost of upkeep of a motor vehicle at $696, considering, of course, depreciation and all. The total cost of upkeep of a horse-drawn vehicle—and he is only able to use the motor vehicle six months in the year, and therefore he is obliged to have the horse-drawn vehicle in addition—is $565, and the total cost of upkeep of all the equipment here is $1,260, leaving him a net salary upon which to live and support his family of $60. He gives the following prices of some of the articles necessary for him to buy in order to maintain the equipment that he has:

Present price of gasoline per gallon, 29 cents.
Oats, per bushel, 90 cents.
Corn, per bushel, $1.25.
Hay, per ton, $12.

Then he adds this:

I have given an exact statement of expense. I am compelled to make my living after I return from my route. In the last year I have run behind $600. A mail carrier's word is not considered good any more, because his salary is not sufficient to nearly pay his expenses alone.

Here is another whose expenses are less. He has no motor vehicle, but he performs his work with a horse-drawn vehicle alone, and the salary he has left, on which to live and support his family, is $410.05. How can he live and support his family on a salary of that amount?

Here is another who, after paying the upkeep of his motor vehicle and his horse-drawn vehicle, has a net salary left of just $70, and he gives some prices, as follows:

Present price of gasoline 28 cents per gallon.
Oats, per bushel, $1.05.
Corn, per bushel, $1.75.
Hay, per ton, $21.

He is able to use his motor vehicle eight months of the year, but because he can not use it the other four months he has to maintain a horse-drawn vehicle equipment, and he says, in commenting on the situation:

Unless Congress sees fit to grant a liberal increase this spring I, as well as many others, will be compelled to resign and seek other employment.

And so it will be, not with this one man, but with many another in this Rural Carrier Service, who by his experience and his devotion to the work has become an efficient rural carrier. He is now compelled to quit. Some man may take his place, it is true, and go through the same experiences, but the man who takes his place will not render the efficient service that the present incumbent renders, and as he gains the experience—the dearly bought experience—he, too, will find it necessary to seek some other employment.

I have here just one other statement which I will read. It is from a man whose net salary left, after he pays the expense of the upkeep of his motor vehicle and his other expenses, is $64.72. This motor vehicle he is enabled to use 10 months of the year, but because he can not use it the full 12 months he is obliged to maintain the full equipment for a horse-drawn vehicle; and, as I say, his net salary left after the payment of all his expenses is $64.72. He says:

A farm I owned before taking this position is bringing in $550 rent. The rent from a house in town is bringing in $400. If it were not for this source of income I could not exist on the salary of mail carrier. I never spend money foolishly.

Mr. President, it seems to me that the great Government of the United States, whatever it costs, can and must afford to be just; and that is what is involved in these increases, simple justice to these men who render this efficient service in an indispensable system, for the Rural Carrier System now is indispensable. One Senator a moment ago inquired how many Senators would vote against it if the test came. I doubt if one would have the hardihood to vote against the Rural Carrier System. When we come to consider its tremendous benefits to all the people of the United States—socially, intellectually, and educationally—they are really immeasurable. We can not measure the benefit that the Rural Carrier System has been, and whether in peace or in war, we must maintain the system.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator if, in his judgment, it is not inconceivable that a single member of either

House of Congress would vote in favor of abolishing the Rural Delivery System?

Mr. STERLING. I quite agree with the Senator. I think it is inconceivable that one Member of either House of Congress at this period would vote against it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Is it not also a fact that the public generally would vote substantially unanimously in favor of continuing it?

Mr. STERLING. I will say to the Senator from New Hampshire that I am satisfied that such would be the case if the matter were submitted to a vote of the people. They would not for a moment think of dispensing with this great service. So, as I said a moment ago, we must be, and I believe we can afford to be, just in the matter of these salaries, and such is the purpose of this amendment.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, the discussion has been principally directed to section 2 and the proposed substitute therefor. The immediate question pending before the Senate, however, is a somewhat different, though a related, subject matter.

The amendment before the Senate is to be found on page 27, lines 7 to 14, and is as follows:

Provided further, That on and after July 1, 1918, rural carriers assigned to standard horse-drawn vehicle routes on which daily service is performed shall receive $24 per mile per annum for each mile said routes are in excess of 24 miles: Provided further, That a carrier may use any character of vehicle on a horse-drawn vehicle route that is approved by the postmaster of the post office from which said route starts.

Independently of the question of increasing the salaries of postal employees generally and of the amount by which those salaries should be increased at the present moment, if at all, this amendment has merits that are peculiarly its own. If we were not engaged in a war, and if we had no rapidly mounting cost of living, this amendment ought to be adopted by the Senate without division or dissent, as it has been in the past, as a matter of simple justice as well as of correct governmental policy.

Twenty-four miles is the standard horse-drawn route, and the pay for that route is $1,200; yet by law if the route is 22 miles in length and under 24 miles, the pay for such a route is $1,152 per annum. In other words, the first step under the 24-mile route is a deduction of $24 per annum for each mile under 24.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, is not that an injustice?

Mr. HARDWICK. No; I do not think so. I will tell the Senator why not in just a moment.

Mr. SHAFROTH. All right.

Mr. HARDWICK. Of course, distance has been the standard adopted for pay on this question. Other standards might be adopted; but, considering the country as a whole, and all the considerations involved, the legislative bodies have always, ever since this system was established, considered that distance was the correct yardstick by which to measure pay.

On routes not over 20 miles in length and under 22 miles, $1,080 per annum is the salary—a deduction from the standard in that case of $36 per annum for each mile short.

On routes not under 18 miles and not over 20 miles, the pay is $960 a year, a deduction of $60 per mile for the shortage, and so on down to the limit, $60 in the lower grades.

If distance is to be the yardstick, and you fix your standard at 24 miles, and the Government adopts a scale of pay descending from the standard and deducting for each mile of shortage from the standard, it seems to me, if you have a correct yardstick at all, that the same standard ought to be applied ascending above the 24 miles as descending below it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I fully agree with the Senator as to the ascending scale, because it is that much more service than the Government has contract for, and, consequently, when it is performed, it ought to be paid for; but it does not seem to me that there ought to be a deduction there, where the route is less, anywhere near in proportion to the $24 per mile.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator will pardon me, I am going to try to tell him why the law is that way. It is not a perfect system, in my judgment. There are objections, doubtless of the same character that the Senator has in mind, to be urged to it. But it must be remembered that distance has been fixed by law as the standard; the yardstick by which to measure this pay; and, of course, when you fix a certain distance as the average or the standard, if it goes over that you should get more pay, and under that you should get less pay. It seems to me that not only is that right as a matter of equity and justice between the carriers, but it is absolutely necessary to have this ascending scale; and you will notice that it has not been put at as high a rate as in the descending scale, which is $24 on the first 2 miles, $36 on the next four, and then, under that, $60 a mile deduction. We have only provided one step in the ascending scale, and that is $24 per mile.

I say not only is it a matter of justice to do that, and equity between carriers, but it is a matter of most important public policy in the administration of the postal affairs. Otherwise, if you do not have some increase of the pay for the mileage above 24 miles, the temptation to a department that is trying to make a good balance sheet—and I commend instead of criticising any administration for that—will be to stretch the routes and make them too long for efficient service, so as to get an apparent net result that is more favorable to a surplus in the Post Office Department. In fact, not only in theory but in fact, that has been the result of not having this ascending scale fixed. If the Post Office Department could stretch a route, and they have done it, I am afraid, in a good many cases, above the 24 miles it may be to 30 miles and 28 miles—I know it has been done so in my own State, and I know to some extent in a number of other States—they do it for the benefit of economy, because the carrier would not get any more by stretching it, and it is stretched even at the expense of efficiency in the service; whereas if we put this ascending scale on that temptation will be to some extent removed; certainly it will be lessened.

For both these reasons it has never been possible for anybody to make any successful resistance to this proposition. It has been voted on, I think, several times in both Houses of Congress. I know when the last Post Office appropriation bill was passed, it was unanimously adopted by the Senate. The argument was just and was unanswerable. I have yet to see anyone who attempted successfully to combat it.

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] suggests that there ought to be no deductions when the distance traveled is less than 24 miles.

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; I do not say we should go to that extent, but I think it ought to be in a very much less proportion, because the investment of the man is there and his time is used.

Mr. HARDWICK. I will not undertake to answer the Senator, because I agree with him. I did not understand him. It may be that a deduction of $60 a mile is too much. I always thought so, and I hope some day it will be changed because, as the Senator says, these men have to keep up their equipment and have practically to devote their time to the service, but, of course, if measured by a yardstick you have got to have a standard and to some extent determine the question by the standard. It seems to me that $24 a mile or whatever the amount ought to be uniform all through up and down above the standard. You will notice that if you pay $1,200 for 24 miles that is $50 a mile. That you pay for a standard route. The scale is not worked out in accordance with that principle. I expect that some day it may be, and if it is, it may be on some of the shorter routes to which the Senator from Colorado referred and which he had in mind there will be some increase in pay, to which I think they are entitled as he does.

Mr. President, that is all there is to the amendment, and I can not think that its adoption can be a debatable matter, because if we had no war, if there had been no increase in the cost of living, if none of the reasons that are now assigned for these general postal increases existed, this would be right as a matter of equity and justice between the carriers themselves, and as a matter of correct governmental policy.

I will say while I am on my feet a few words about the increases that we are to come to next. Other Senators in discussing these questions have not hesitated to cover the general subject. While I have no doubt the chairman of the committee will be able to cover it for the committee much better than I can, I will submit a few observations about the general postal increases carried in the bill.

So far as the 20 per cent for the rural carriers is concerned, it is the most justifiable part of the entire proposition, because the rural carriers have not only had the increased cost of living, just as every other postal employee has had, for themselves and their families, but they have also had the increased cost of equipment, horses, automobiles, wagons, and buggies throughout the country, and they have not only had to carry the increase in the original cost of the equipment but the increased cost of maintaining the equipment, higher-priced gasoline, where they are using these small motor cars, an increased cost of horse feed and of new buggies and new wagons. So there is every reason on earth why they should be entitled to a somewhat larger increase than any other class of Government employees that I know of in the Postal Service or in any other service, because according to the best of my knowledge and belief they are the only people, certainly in the Postal Service and I believe in any branch of the Government service, who furnish at their own expense their own equipment and who maintain at their own expense their own equipment. The city carrier, for instance, as I called the attention of one Senator to, has his horse and his wagon or buggy or cart or whatever furnished him, bought by the Government. The entire expense is taken out of the Public Treasury, and he not only has that done, but he has that same horse and equipment maintained at the Government expense year after year. I am not complaining about that, I think it is right, but why the discrimination? Why the difference? If it is right to do it in one case, it is right to do it in the other. There can be no escape from that proposition. If it is right to do it in every branch and department of the Government service except the Rural Delivery Service, it is right to do it there also.

I am not complaining. I think it is a good principle. I believe the Government ought to furnish this equipment in every case; but they ought to do it in every case, not in every case except one.

Mr. WATSON. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WATSON. I can not recall whether the Senator was in the other House at the time the Rural Delivery System was established.

Mr. HARDWICK. No; that was before I came here.

Mr. WATSON. I was a Member of the other House at that time and voted for the first really available appropriation for the establishment of rural free delivery. It was thought that the farmers' sons, with their buggies and farm horses, would deliver the mail in the morning and get back to use the same horses for farm purposes in the afternoon. They had very crude ideas about a rural delivery service at that time.

Mr. HARDWICK. Of course.

Mr. WATSON. We thought that the farmer himself or the farmer's boy who delivered this mail would, of course, take his own horse and buggy and deliver the mail and get back in time to use the horse for farm purposes in the afternoon. Therefore it just came along by custom, by growth, and it is very natural. Under those conditions the carrier has been all this time furnishing his own outfit. But, of course, it is indefensible, as the Senator has so well argued. It seems to me if the carrier is required to furnish his own equipment he ought to have an equivalent for it.

Mr. HARDWICK. In his salary?

Mr. WATSON. Certainly; in his salary.

Mr. HARDWICK. Therefore I say of all the increases carried in this bill, and of all the increases carried in all bills for Government employees, this is the most justifiable and the most defensible.

Now, Mr. President, I come next to consider the postal increases generally, although we are not directly on that question. I take it for granted that on the amendment pending there can be no real dispute, and we are about to consider the other question, and I wish to submit some observations upon it.

The Senate will recall that in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill we granted an increase in salary, on account of these abnormal conditions, to employees who did not get more than $2,000 per annum salary of $10 per month. The Senate raised the amount, finally, so that all those who receive a salary of $2,500 would get the increase, and it would apply to all Government employees in the other departments whose salaries were as high as $2,500. If we, for the purposes of argument, consider—and I think it is practically true—that the average salary in the departments is probably $1,200, this increase of $10 a month or $120 a year was practically a 10 per cent increase. The increase carried in the substitute that has been proposed by the Senator from Alabama will probably go somewhere to 15 and 20 per cent when it is averaged up. You may say that is greater than the increase carried for the other departments, and on first blush it appears so; and yet the fact is that as to the lower-grade employees in the nine executive departments of the Government during the past year or two, certainly during the last year, they have had certain increases—5 per cent in one case and 10 per cent in another—which were entirely denied to the postal employees; and they received during the year preceding the fiscal year we are now in, which will end June 30, increases in their compensation that the postal employees did not receive at all. So if the postal employees are allowed, in the amendment suggested by my colleague from Alabama, a little more than the employees of the other departments of the Government are allowed, it is a mere equalization, considering what has been done already for those employees.

Mr. WATSON. Will the Senator allow me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McKELLAR in the chair). Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield.

Mr. WATSON. I understand the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama, the chairman of the committee, carries the same rates and schedules of increases as are provided in the so-called Madden-Moon bill in the House, without a legislative provision to make it permanent in character.

Mr. HARDWICK. That is true; and I am coming to that in just a moment. The Senator is accurate about that.

Now, on the point I have just made, the president of the organization of Railway Mail Clerks addressed, on May 6, this letter to me, calling my attention to the facts I have just stated to the Senate. He says:

RAILWAY MAIL ASSOCIATION,
Washington, D. C., May 6, 1918.

HON. THOMAS W. HARDWICK,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: May we call your attention to the proposed adjustment of the salaries of the postal employees? Comparisons have been made by the Postmaster General regarding allowances made to employees in other departments, and we would especially call attention to the fact that such employees—were granted a 5 and 10 per cent increase, in effect during the present fiscal year, in which postal employees did not participate. It is proposed to grant them $120 for the coming fiscal year, in addition to their stated allowances. The salaries of railway postal clerks are graded according to law from $900 to $1,800 per annum. Approximately 35 per cent of such employees receive a salary of $1,200 or less per annum. If postal employees had been included in the law in effect during the present fiscal year, those entitled to the 10 per cent increase would have received an average increased allowance of $115 and those entitled to the 5 per cent increase would have received approximately $75 increase.

That is, employees in other departments—

If this had been received by these employees during the present year, there might be equity in proposing to allot them the same amount during the coming year that other employees are to receive. In view of the fact that this increase was not received, the proposed increases for postal employees during the next fiscal year will approximate that granted to the other employees during this two-year period. We are fully confident that Congress will recognize the justness of the claims of the postal employees and finally approve a measure which will grant relief to that extent.

Very respectfully, E. J. RYAN, President.

That is the contention of the committee and that is the view we had in mind. If we have made our recommendations with respect to this matter somewhat larger than the recommendations made for the other executive departments, it has been because during the present fiscal year the postal employees did not receive the same increase that the employees of other departments received, and this is a mere attempt to equalize it.

Mr. WATSON. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes.

Mr. WATSON. How do these increases compare with those that are proposed for railway employees?

Mr. HARDWICK. Thirty-five per cent, I believe, is the proposition.

Mr. WATSON. That is my understanding.

Mr. HARDWICK. These are lower. I do not think in any case these increases are above 25 per cent, and I do not believe they will average 20 per cent. They will average below 20 per cent.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] mentioned a few moments ago the so-called Madden bill. That bill passed the House of Representatives. It was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads of the Senate?

Mr. HARDWICK. It was.

Mr. CUMMINS. So far as this particular subject is concerned, the difference between that bill and the proposed amendment is that the former had no limitation with regard to the payment of increased compensation and the latter is limited to the coming fiscal year. I assume that the reason why the Post Office Committee did not make the increase permanent was that it was feared it would be open to a point of order. Let me ask the Senator from Georgia, who is a member of the committee, why the committee did not consider and report the Madden bill?

Mr. HARDWICK. I will be very glad to answer the Senator. In the first place, the Madden bill, or the Moon bill, I believe some people insist on calling it—but a rose by any other name would smell just as sweet to me at least—the Madden bill did not come to the Post Office Committee of the Senate until after we had dealt with this proposition in connection with the Post Office appropriation bill, and, of course, if we were to deal with it in connection with the Post Office appropriation bill we could not deal with it except as a proposition covering the fiscal year alone, without subjecting it to a point of order, as the Senator has suggested. That, however, is by no means the only reason and by no means the controlling reason for the position of the committee. I know that the postal employees in all the States—and I know it best of the postal employees in my own State, many of whom are my devoted friends and all of whom as my constituents I would be glad to oblige if it is in my power to do so—much prefer a permanent law with respect to this subject. But there is a great deal of merit in what the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] so well said this afternoon. He did not get his figures exactly right—the most extravagant estimate I have seen yet or heard until the Senator placed it at $40,000,000 that this proposition will cost.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS. In making that statement I took a rough average of the three amounts for the three years, which constitute the estimates of the committee—$40,000,000, $50,000,000, and $45,000,000, respectively.

Mr. HARDWICK. I beg the Senator's pardon. I did not quite understand his suggestion. I thought he meant what the average would be for the three-year period.

Mr. THOMAS. I do not think I stated that view. So the Senator's apprehension of what I said is perfectly justified.

Mr. HARDWICK. It was $40,000,000 for the first year?

Mr. THOMAS. I was simply stating the basis of my estimate.

Mr. HARDWICK. I am glad the Senator has explained it, and with that understanding I assent to his proposition. That is the estimate of the department. The estimate of the department is, I think, $40,000,000 for the first year, and it gradually increases up to until it goes over $50,000,000.

Mr. THOMAS. Forty million dollars for the first year, $50,000,000 for the second year, and then down to $45,000,000 for the third year.

Mr. HARDWICK. So the Senator took $45,000,000 as the average for the three-year period. There is a good deal of justice in the proposition when we have taken $70,000,000 from the people who write letters and postal cards in this country on the plea that we want to take it from them to help wage war, and when we have taken or propose to take $45,000,000 from the people who pay second-class postal rate, the omnipotent press of this country, and are confronted with a clamor the like of which was never heard on a similar subject, although we are losing $70,000,000 a year on that matter.

Mr. CUMMINS. May I ask another question of the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes.

Mr. CUMMINS. It seems to me that the two things just mentioned by the Senator from Georgia have nothing to do with each other; that is, the wisdom——

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not yield to the Senator for an argument, but for a question.

Mr. CUMMINS. The wisdom of adding to first-class postage or the wisdom of adding to second-class can not have anything to do with the equity or the justice of the compensation which we ought to pay to those who render this service.

Mr. HARDWICK. I am sorry the Senator does not see it that way, but, according to the opinion of the Senator from Georgia, there is a direct and close relation between the two subjects. Of course, I can not explain it——

Mr. CUMMINS. Everybody understands, I suppose, that the increase in compensation grows out of the acknowledged fact that the cost of living has advanced. We all know that the cost of living has advanced 50 per cent and probably more. If that be true, does the Senator from Georgia have any reason to anticipate that the next year the increases which we propose to make will adequately compensate the employees for the increased cost of living?

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator, of course, is anticipating my argument, although, to start with, he did not perceive the connection of it.

Now, let us go back just a minute. I say these subjects are related. We have demanded of the people increased postal revenues. We did it on the ground that we wanted the money to wage war with. Yet the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] with some justice suggests that we are going to take most of this money that we raise for the professed purpose of waging the war and devote it to paying higher salaries to postal clerks.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask the Senator if the postal rate had remained just as it was, and if the conditions had remained just as they were before the war, would it not have been just on the part of the Government to increase the pay of the rural carriers?

Mr. HARDWICK. Undoubtedly. The Senator did not hear my speech. I said if there had been no war at all that is one thing no man who is acquainted with the facts would dispute.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Georgia, of course, will not advocate the proposition that we must take money to prosecute the war that is necessary in order to maintain our employees if there are other sources from which the money can be secured which will impose less hardship upon the people.

Mr. HARDWICK. Not at all. If the Senator from Georgia thought that, he would never have agreed to this report. The Senator knows that.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Georgia will remember that the Senator from Colorado mentioned an increase in taxes last year of something like $3,500,000,000 that are about to be taken from the people; but I remind the Senator from Georgia of the fact that probably not more than 5 per cent of the hundred million people of the United States will contribute any part of the $3,500,000,000, and those who do contribute it contribute out of an income which after payment of the taxes leaves an abundance for their own maintenance and the maintenance of their families.

Mr. THOMAS. May I suggest that I agree to that statement, provided it is limited to certain schedules of the bill; that is to say, incomes and excess profits.

Mr. CUMMINS. I was disassociating that from the increase in letter postage and postage on second-class mail matter.

Mr. HARDWICK. Unless that had been true the committee would not have been justified in reporting any increase; but, at the same time, there is a middle ground between these two positions, and that ground the committee has sought to occupy. We have finally recommended to the Senate increased compensation for all postal employees at exactly the same rate carried by the House bill, but we have disagreed with the position of the House that this ought to be done as a matter of permanent legislation. We know very well that we are not doing it with any careful or any very full or any very accurate examination of the great questions of fact that are involved. We are granting this increase in most cases and with reference to most classes because we believe that the abnormal times produced by the great war in which we are participating and the tremendously increased cost of living have borne so heavily upon all the people that they ought to have, if possible, some additional resources given them to meet the additional burdens.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia mentioned certain increases granted to other Government employees which had not heretofore been granted to the postal employees. Were those other increases made permanent by statute?

Mr. HARDWICK. No; they were temporary only and for the fiscal year we were dealing with at the time. The Senator's suggestion brings me right down to the branch of the argument at which I am again arriving.

The Senate committee did not think, in these abnormal and disjointed times, when everything is changing almost every moment, that it was right to enact permanent legislation that would impose forever upon the backs of the taxpayers of this country a burden of $40,000,000 a year additional in the administration of postal affairs. We thought we would be doing well enough if we could meet each fiscal year the burden as we came to it. We could not tell accurately enough and were not prophets enough to know what we ought to do the next year. It may be, too, that within the fiscal year that is covered by this bill these abnormal conditions will no longer prevail. On the other hand, they may be greatly accentuated and conditions may be worse. Who can tell? Not your Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads. It claims no such prophetic vision. So we thought we had better do just what had been done in every one of the other executive departments—legislate for the fiscal year and for the fiscal year only. Hard cases make bad laws. Abnormal times make dangerous precedents. It is probably easier for me on the surface of things to give these people these increases permanently as a matter of general legislation applicable throughout the future unless some future Congress should repeal it or amend it. It might be easier, although I am not certain that it would be, for every other Senator to adopt that view. But after all, Mr. President, I am not so sure even about that. Under the system of indirect taxation that has so long prevailed in this country and from which the bulk of its revenues have been raised—and I am not trying to excite a partisan controversy by making this statement; I think every Republican Senator will agree to it as readily as every Democratic Senator—one result has been that the taxpayer hardly realized what he was paying when he was paying it nor why he was paying it. That sort of a system may have its blessings, but it also has its disadvantages. The taxpayer does not realize how he is paying his money, and therefore he cares less about how his money is being spent. But when you change that system for the system of direct taxation and have your Federal tax collector come and do what your State and county tax collector is doing in your State and county, lay his hands upon the shoulder of the individual taxpayer and saying to that individual, Give us so many dollars, or so many hundred dollars, or so many thousand dollars for your Federal taxes, I imagine the people of this country are going to pay a little more attention, under such a system, to the way their money is being spent. But I imagine that in the end it is going to work somewhat of a substantial revolution in this body and in the other House of Congress.

Mr. CUMMINS rose.

Mr. HARDWICK. Pardon me for just a moment, until I finish this sentence and thought, and then I will yield to the Senator.

The time has been when there was a more or less healthy—unhealthy, I will say—rivalry between Members of the two Houses of Congress as to what appropriations they could secure for their respective States and for their respective districts. The time has been—and it is not so far distant in the past—when Members of both Houses of Congress were rated as of probable worth to their constituencies according to the amount of money they could grab out of the Federal Treasury, possibly to improve some creek that had not run since the Revolution, or possibly to erect some public building in a deserted village like that about which Oliver Goldsmith wrote; but I imagine that when this direct-taxation system gets in its work to the extent that it must get in its work, when a statesman of that type goes home and faces his constituents and brags about having dug out dry creeks or about having erected a public building in some unimportant village, where a dry-goods box would have done for a post office, his indignant constituents will meet him with a brickbat instead of with a bouquet. Now I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. I suppose that the taxpayers are more numerous than our Federal employees.

Mr. HARDWICK. Possibly they will be, and they will know it, too.

Mr. CUMMINS. They always have been.

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes; but they have not known it.

Mr. CUMMINS. Yes; they have known it, in my opinion. However, that does not touch the question of dealing fairly with Federal employees. Even if they have not so many votes as those who pay taxes, they are still entitled to justice and nothing more. They ought not to have a penny more.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator from Iowa will let me conclude my remarks, I had rather he would make his speech in his own time.

Mr. CUMMINS. I was about to ask a question.

Mr. HARDWICK. Very well; if the Senator desires to ask a question, I yield.

Mr. CUMMINS. Those employees are entitled to fair treatment.

Mr. HARDWICK. Nobody thinks that more than I do.

Mr. CUMMINS. Everybody is in favor of giving them fair treatment; but both the Senator from Georgia and myself have made a mistake here in one thing. We have used the word "permanent" in connection with the proposed legislation for salaries. Even if those salaries were provided for as in the so-called Madden bill, they are in no sense permanent; they are indefinite.

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not understand the Senator's language; he says they are in no sense what?

Mr. CUMMINS. They are in no sense permanent; they are indefinite.

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not agree with the Senator from Iowa about that.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Georgia knows that Congress has as complete power to decrease as it has to increase.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator will permit me, he knows just as well as I do that it is permanent authority of law; that is the trouble.

Mr. CUMMINS. I hope the Senate and the House of Representatives also will finally reach the state of mind in which they will be willing to do what is right, whether it shall require an increase or a decrease in salaries.

Mr. HARDWICK. But the trouble about it is that this is no time to do it. If the Senator wants my opinion—and I have studied this postal question, and I am interested in it as much as any other Senator—I do not think we have the information which would justify us in giving these increases permanently. I do not believe such information has been furnished by anybody. Possibly I think a case has been made out for the rural carriers, but the Senator from Iowa knows just as well as I do the value of general legislation which is permanent authority for appropriations. In that way all the great increases have permanently come to this Government; they have come because there the statute stands permanently—I have not used the word "indefinitely" according to my understanding of it—on the statute books unless it is repealed by Congress. The increase has the authority of law for each and every appropriation committee to act upon and on which to make the appropriations up to the limit allowed by law.

The Senator from Iowa can not possibly believe, I think, that this subject has had that consideration to which it is entitled, if we are going to reclassify all these employees. I do not see how any Senator can contend that this is a good time to do that, unless that Senator can carry the burden of showing that the present salaries are wrong and are inadequate in normal conditions and in normal times. I say to the Senator from Iowa very frankly that I doubt, on the whole, whether the postal salaries are inadequate in normal times, and I do not think that abnormal conditions and disjointed times like those which now confront us ought to be made the excuse for enacting permanent legislation on this subject. I can not see why it should be done in the Postal Department when we have not done it in any one of the other nine executive departments of the Government. I can, however, see why it would be dangerous, unnecessary, and unwise to do it in any of them. "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." Sufficient unto the day is also the burden thereof, and I paraphrase that quotation. I do not think that under circumstances like these, with only the amount of investigation we have had, with the abnormal price of everything pressing on everybody to urge and beg and plead for these increases, we ought to do more than act from one fiscal year to another. In that respect I am perfectly willing to take my stand against the position of the House of Representatives with regard to this matter.

If next year I shall think these people, under the facts and under the circumstances and under the conditions that then confront us, are entitled to even a greater increase of salaries than I believe they are entitled to now, I shall unhesitatingly vote for that. If, on the other hand, by next year times have become normal and I shall be convinced that these increases or any part of them are too great, I shall unhesitatingly vote to reduce them. I do not want a permanent statute placed on the books as authority of law for an unending appropriation of this magnitude.

I think we have gone a good way when we consent to put a burden of $40,000,000 on the people of the country for the benefit of these employees, even though we think they are now entitled to it. For the present I think we have gone a long way. I repeat, when we do that. I am not willing, so far as I am concerned, to go any further. I think it was with that view that the Post Office Committee felt that it had better treat these employees just as the employees of the other executive departments have been treated, and make whatever increases are made for them for the period of the fiscal year only with which we are dealing.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Indiana or the Senator from Georgia referred to a 25 per cent increase for the railway employees.

Mr. HARDWICK. It was the Senator from Indiana who made reference to that.

Mr. CUMMINS. That was not for a year; that was indefinite.

Mr. HARDWICK. It has not been made at all, has it?

Mr. CUMMINS. I think it has been recommended by the commission.

Mr. HARDWICK. But it has not been acted on?

Mr. CUMMINS. I think it has been recommended by the commission which considered this subject. Whether or not the Director General has approved the recommendation of the commission, I do not know; but my point is, that a railway company, or any other organization, that would propose under existing circumstances to increase wages 20 per cent for a period of six months or for a year, with the inference that at the end of that time the former scale was to be resumed, would be regarded as little less than a subject for a lunatic asylum.

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes; but it seems to me as though the point is not at all apposite, because these commissions are not operating under the same rules and laws and practices under which the Congress of the United States is operating; neither are the business institutions to which the Senator refers. The permanent laws that we make are the basis for future appropriations, and beyond their limits our committees may not go, although the two Houses of Congress themselves can at any time remove or enlarge or suspend those limits.

Mr. CUMMINS. I want to say that I entirely approve of the view of the Senator from Georgia that such general legislation has no proper place upon an appropriation bill; I do not doubt that; and my wonder was that the committee did not report an independent bill.

Mr. HARDWICK. That was because we thought it was just about as much as we could do, if the Senator please, to attend to this proposition from year to year, as the situation develops, and as these changing conditions confront us. It is the same policy, the same plan, and the same procedure that has been adopted with respect to every one of the other executive departments and their employees. That is the case as nearly as I can state it.

If the committee's action shall commend itself to the Senate, we hope the Senate will adopt it as we present it. If the Senate, however, in its judgment, wants to make permanent legislation with respect to this $40,000,000 increase, of course the committee, as its servant, will carry out its will; but this is our judgment about it. We think that we have gone just as far as justice to the Treasury and to the general interest of the public will allow with respect to this matter.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the amendment of the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 27, line 11, after the word "miles," it is proposed to insert "or major fraction thereof, based on actual mileage."

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I think that is a very proper amendment, and I have no objection to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment is agreed to, without objection.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I do not hope to add anything of value to this discussion. The proposed amendments have been both thoroughly and very ably discussed, and I rise for the purpose of voicing my approval of most of what has been said. I think it is true that, even in time of peace, it would be perfectly legitimate and would be only doing justice to a deserving class who are working for the Government to increase the pay of the rural carriers. That question is not a new one; it has been before this body for many years; long before the war the question of increased pay to rural carriers had been before this and the other body.

Those of us who live in the Western States, where the rural routes are necessarily very long, can appreciate the effect on and the benefit to the rural carriers, especially with reference to the first amendment. The Senator from Georgia has very ably discussed that question, and I wish to assure the Senate that I agree with him. It is only doing full justice to this class of employees to use the same yardstick with reference to the miles above a standard route that is used with reference to the miles below a standard route. In my State there are many routes that are more han 30 miles in length; there are many routes that are 32 and 33 miles, and yet the carriers on such routes are practically only paid for a route of 24 miles. That is an injustice; it was an injustice before the war, and it is an injustice now.

I think there is a good deal of force in the argument made by the Senator from Georgia in favor of not making permanent the proposed law with reference to the increase in the pay of all postal employees. I am in favor of paying all postal employees higher salaries than they receive at present. I do not believe that any of these employees who are working for the Government are getting adequate pay; but I know that even in times of peace, even in normal times, when the cost of living is much less than it is to-day, the rural carrier is hardly able to live on the pay received for carrying the mail. As has been so ably stated, the rural carrier has to make a large investment, and, if he were to figure the interest on his investment, there would be practically nothing left.

Mr. President, I have on my desk many statements from rural carriers in my State. I shall not take the time of the Senate to read any of them, but I must have as many as perhaps 50 such statements, which show that, after paying all expenses, there is left to the carrier all the way from $100 a year up, but in no case more than $600 a year. Anyone can see that that is an injustice.

With the statement of the able Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], that we ought to begin to economize I agree; but I think it is a well-established fact that the people of the country want to continue their mail service on a high plane of efficiency. We know that the rural system can not be abolished; we know that the country would not agree to that; we know that the people living in the country are as much entitled to a continuance of that service as the people living in the cities are entitled to their delivery service. I shall gladly vote for an increase of pay to city mail carriers, for I believe that the mail carriers of the cities are getting too small pay at the present time.

But, Mr. President, there is another matter to which I wish to call attention. The rural mail carrier is required to make daily regular trips if he carries mail over a route where a daily trip is required, and for any day that he does not carry the mail or for any trip which he does not make he is penalized very heavily; in fact, a deduction is made which really amounts to more than the pay he would get for that particular trip. In the western section of the country, where the climate is very rigorous, there are many times when the rural carrier is unable to make the trips, due to the inclemency of the weather. So, Mr. President, the least that we can do is to make this yardstick what it ought to be. If the rural route is 25 miles, the carrier ought to be paid for one additional mile; if it is 30 miles, he ought to be paid for six additional miles.

I am also in favor of the amendment offered by the chairman of the committee to give these men 20 per cent increase. I should like to see that apply to all those employed in the Postal Service, I do not care in what branch of the department they may be employed.

I also favor increased pay to fourth-class postmasters. In most cases the fourth-class postmasters are very much underpaid. I hope the amendment to increase their pay will prevail.

Mr. President, this is all that I care to say. I hope that the first amendment in section 1 providing for a standardization will be agreed to; and then I hope that the amendment proposed giving these men an increase will also be adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk to the amendment of the committee inserting section 2.

The SECRETARY. In lieu of the amendment proposed by the committee, on page 37, line 20, inserting section 2, it is proposed to insert the following:

That hereafter the compensation of postal employees shall be as follows:

That each carrier in the Rural Free Delivery Service now receiving a compensation of $1,200 or less per annum, exclusive of mileage allowance, shall receive, in addition thereto, 20 per cent of the amount of such compensation: Provided, That those who are performing service as motor carriers shall receive a 10 per cent increase of salary on the amount they are now receiving.

That after the passage of this act clerks in first and second class post offices and letter carriers in the City Delivery Service shall be divided into six grades, as follows: First grade, salary $1,000; second grade, salary $1,100; third grade, salary $1,200; fourth grade, salary $1,300; fifth grade, salary $1,400; sixth grade, salary $1,500. Clerks and carriers shall be promoted successively to the sixth grade: Provided, That upon the passage of this act clerks in first and second class post offices and letter carriers in the City Delivery Service who are in grades 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6, under the act of March 2, 1907, as amended, shall pass automatically from such grades and the salaries they receive thereunder to the new grades 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5, respectively, with the salaries provided for such grades in this act: Provided further, That all promotions of both clerks and carriers shall be made at the beginning of the quarter following the expiration of one year's service in the next lower grade.

That hereafter the salaries of railway postal clerks shall be graded as follows: Grade 1 at $1,100; grade 2 at $1,200; grade 3 at $1,300; grade 4 at $1,400; grade 5 at $1,500; grade 6 at $1,600; grade 7 at $1,700; grade 8 at $1,800; grade 9 at $1,900; grade 10 at $2,000.

The Postmaster General shall classify and fix the salaries of railway postal clerks, under such regulations as he may prescribe, in the grades provided by law; and for the purpose of organization and of establishing maximum grades to which promotions may be made successively, as hereinafter provided, he shall classify railway post offices, terminal railway post offices, and transfer offices with reference to their character and importance in three classes, with salary grades as follows: Class A, $1,100 to $1,400; class B, $1,100 to $1,500; and Class C, $1,100 to $1,700. He may assign to the offices of division superintendents and chief clerks such railway postal clerks as may be necessary, and fix their salaries within the grades provided by law without regard to the classification of railway post offices: Provided, That upon the passage of this act railway postal clerks shall pass automatically from the grades they are in and the salaries they receive under the act of August 24, 1912, to the corresponding grade, with salaries provided for in this act

That assistant postmasters in first and second class post offices and post-office clerks, laborers, watchmen, printers, chauffeurs, messengers, charwomen, janitors in post offices and per diem employees, and all other postal employees, including allowances for clerk hire at third-class post offices, not enumerated in section 1, whose rate of compensation is $800 or less per annum shall receive 20 per cent increase in their compensation; those whose rate of compensation is in excess of $800 and not more than $1,200 per annum shall receive 15 per cent increase in their compensation; and those receiving salaries from $1,200 to and including $1,800 shall receive an increase of 10 per cent: Provided, That substitute letter carriers and substitute clerks shall receive as their compensation 40 cents per hour.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, on March 21 last——

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, I do not remember exactly what the practice is in regard to the matter; but I wish to reserve the point of order on the amendment if it is necessary to reserve it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not think it will be too late when the Senator from Tennessee makes his statement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has never been held by the present occupant of the chair, although it has been by a former occupant of the chair, that after the Senate has considered an amendment it is too late to raise a point of order. The Chair does not believe that is a correct interpretation of the rules. In the opinion of the Chair, a point of order may be raised at any time.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If that is the ruling of the present occupant of the chair, I wish to make the point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not the opinion of the present occupant of the chair that the point of order must be made immediately. The rules provide that a point of order may be made at any time.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Then I should like to have the Senator from Tennessee make his statement, and after that I will make the point of order if the Chair thinks that I can do so then.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has no doubt about the right to make a point of order later.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Very well.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I have no disposition to discuss an amendment that may go out on a point of order, at least where the point is to be made; and if it is to be done I want it to be made before much time is consumed in the discussion. I will state the amendment briefly.

On March 21 last, while the Post Office appropriation bill was still pending in the committee, I offered an amendment providing for a flat increase in the salaries of post-office employees of 20 per cent, but that amendment was not approved by the committee. When the bill was reported to the Senate it contained a provision for an increase of 15 per cent. In the meantime what is known as the Moon-Madden bill, providing for a reclassification of postal employees and the increase of their compensation, was considered in the House, and finally passed by a vote of 343 to 9, and came to the Senate. That, however, was after the bill we are now considering had been reported to the Senate. I then, on April 5, offered this amendment as a substitute for section 2 of the appropriation bill providing for an increase of salaries of postal employees. It is practically the Moon-Madden bill passed by the House.

I find printed this morning an amendment that was offered yesterday by the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, through the chairman, the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], which provides for an increase of compensation for all employees—not just in the language and in the method but practically the same in amounts as provided in the Moon-Madden bill and the amendment I had offered. This amendment, while presented yesterday, has not been offered for consideration in the Senate. So, practically, we have two amendments, or will have two—the one I offered and the one to be offered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] and to be considered if this is not adopted—which provide for the same increase of salaries of the same employees. The only difference between the two is that the amendment I have offered, which is the Moon-Madden bill, provides for permanent increase, while the Bankhead amendment only provides for an increase for the fiscal year 1919.

The term "permanent legislation," by which the provisions of my amendment are described, is hardly an apt one, for there is no legislation that is permanent. If the amendment I have offered, which was approved by the House by such a large majority, is adopted by the Senate, and becomes law, and it is found inequitable, either to the employees or to the Government, next year it can be repealed or amended just as easily as the Bankhead amendment can be modified or be continued for another year. The objection upon this ground is without merit, and should not be allowed to sustain.

I prefer this amendment to a flat increase because it does contain legislation classifying these employees and providing for their promotion, so that they may have some knowledge of the employment they are accepting. When they accept these positions they can look to the future and know what to expect if they are efficient and make good. They would have some assurance of more than just one year's work.

I am not going into this matter fully, Mr. President, because three Senators have expressed the opinion that this legislation, so far as the provisions for classification and promotion are concerned, is general legislation, and therefore, under the rule, it can not be put as a rider on an appropriation bill. The legislation is so meritorious that I hope this question will not be raised; but if it is to be, perhaps it had better be done right now, and we will economize time by having a ruling now, if it should be adverse. I will not argue the point, but submit it to the Chair.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I make the point of order against the amendment that it is general legislation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Now, Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk. This amendment was offered two or three days ago, and printed in the RECORD. Since then we have had a reprint, and I offer it as amended.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In lieu of the committee amendment on page 27, known as section 2, it is proposed to insert the following:

SEC. 2. That during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, the annual salaries fixed by law for clerks in first and second class post offices and letter carriers in the city delivery service, railway postal clerks of grade 1 to grade 10, inclusive, shall be increased $200 per annum; and also supervisory and other employees of the postal service whose compensation is in excess of $1,500 per annum shall be increased $200 per annum: Provided, That the salaries of such other employees fixed by law or paid from lump-sum appropriations provided for in this act who receive $800 per annum or less shall be increased 20 per cent per annum; those who receive in excess of $800 and not more than $1,500 shall be increased 15 per cent per annum. The compensation for rural carriers assigned to horse-drawn vehicle routes shall be increased 20 per cent per annum, and carriers who perform service as motor carriers on routes 50 miles and more in length shall receive an increase of 10 per cent per annum. Such increases shall not apply to the special assistant to the Attorney General appropriated for in this act and to postmasters at offices of the first, second, and third classes: Provided, further, That postmasters of the fourth class shall receive the same compensation as provided by law prior to the passage of the act of Congress entitled "An act to provide revenue to defray war expenses, and for other purposes," approved October 3, 1917, except that they shall receive 100 per cent of the cancellations on the first $100 or less per quarter instead of on the first $50 or less per quarter: And provided, further, That hereafter substitute, temporary, or auxiliary clerks and letter carriers at first and second class offices shall be paid at the rate of 40 cents an hour: And provided further, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to employees who receive a part of their pay from any outside sources under cooperative arrangements with the Post Office Department, or to employees who serve voluntarily or receive only a nominal compensation: And provided further, That the increased compensation, at the rate of 5 per cent and 10 per cent for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, shall not be computed as salary in construing this section. So much as may be necessary for the increases provided for in this act is hereby appropriated.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I propose an amendment to the amendment, to be inserted after the word "quarter," on line 21 of page 2. I want to say that the amendment provides for additional compensation to 21,000 servants of the Government, fourth-class postmasters, who will get no additional compensation under this bill unless the amendment is adopted.

Mr. LEWIS. Does the Senator wish to have the amendment read?

Mr. VARDAMAN. It is very short, and I will ask that the Secretary read it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the words "per quarter," on page 2, line 21, it is proposed to insert:

Provided further, That if the compensation does not exceed $50 for any one quarter, fourth-class postmasters shall be allowed an increase of 20 per cent of the compensation allowed under existing law.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I think that is a very proper amendment, and I have no objection to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARDWICK obtained the floor.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, may I address an inquiry to the Senator from Alabama to secure a little information?

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. LEWIS. May I at this point, lest the subject shall be forgotten, address an inquiry to the chairman of the committee and invite the attention of the Senator from Tennessee? Is there not pending before the Post Office Committee of the House a bill that embodies the provisions of the amendment tendered by the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. BANKHEAD. It was pending there, but it was passed, and this amendment is exactly that provision.

Mr. LEWIS. I was rather under the impression that, therefore, the position taken by the Senator from Tennessee was made unnecessary by legislation that we had previously passed. Am I right about that? Such is my view.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I should like to answer the question, if I may be permitted.

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. SHIELDS. The Senator is in error. The House of Representatives, as I stated in my explanation of the amendment I offered a while ago, has passed a bill, known as the Moon-Madden bill, which provides for an increase of compensation as well as a permanent classification of these regular employees; but that bill, having been passed by the House, is now with the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads of the Senate; and if they are opposed to the amendment putting its effective and operative parts on this bill it is not apt to see daylight at this session from that committee.

Mr. LEWIS. As I understand, however, the ruling on this matter is merely a parliamentary one, that upon this bill, being an appropriation bill, this general legislation would not apply; but it is not intended to be a decision against the merits of the measure that is now pending before the committee, is it? I ask because I have so many petitions upon the subject from constituents.

Mr. HARDWICK. I am not able to answer that question, except in the following way: The Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads has recommended a proposition, which has just been reported, offered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], which carries all the rates of the Madden or Moon bill in the House of Representatives, but which does not propose to enact it as general or permanent legislation, but merely as an appropriation for the fiscal year covered by the bill, that being the extent of the committee's authority in connection with the Post Office appropriation bill. But the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, I think, as well as I can judge of its temper from the discussions it has had, does not think that any permanent legislation of that character ought to be enacted at all, but that we ought to deal with the matter in these abnormal times from year to year. That has been done with reference to every other executive department.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS. I want to ask the Senator, if this amendment is adopted, what the amount will be in addition to the appropriations provided for already?

Mr. HARDWICK. The Post Office Department estimates that it will cost about $40,000,000.

Mr. THOMAS. That is, $40,000,000 more?

Mr. HARDWICK. No; $40,000,000 more than was paid out for these salaries last year.

Mr. THOMAS. I mean by that to inquire whether this is $40,000,000 in addition to the $40.000,000 required by the amendment that has just been agreed to?

Mr. HARDWICK. Oh, no. no. The amendment just agreed to, which was about the 24-mile routes, involves only a very small amount of money. That is included in the $40,000,000.

Mr. THOMAS. That is included?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes.

Now, Mr. President, I rose to offer an amendment. On page 2, line 10, of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] I move to strike out the word "ten" and to substitute in lieu thereof the word "twenty." The effect of that amendment would be to make the amendment read in this way, if it were agreed to:

> The compensation for rural carriers assigned to horse-drawn vehicle routes shall be increased 20 per cent per annum, and carriers who perform service as motor carriers on routes 50 miles and more in length shall receive an increase of 20 per cent per annum.

In other words, the proposition as introduced gives one of them an increase of 20 per cent and the other one an increase of 10 per cent. I can not see the reason or justice in that. Their salaries are all fixed and apportioned by law now in accordance with the service that they are supposed to perform. I can see no reason why one salary should be increased 20 per cent and the other one 10 per cent. At any rate, I suggest the amendment to the amendment, and I hope my colleague on the committee will be in favor of it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have no objection to the amendment, Mr. President. I think it is quite a proper one and ought to be adopted.

Mr. HARDWICK. That is all I care to say.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, may I ask the chairman of the committee a question? What is meant by the expression here, "50 miles and more in length"? There is no route today that I know of that is 50 miles in length. There may be round trips of that length.

Mr. BANKHEAD. There are many routes where the distance covered by motor cars is more than 50 miles in length—quite a large number of them, something over 800—and some of them make, perhaps, 75 miles.

Mr. GRONNA. Is it not possible that it is an injustice to those who have routes of a less distance than 50 miles?

Mr. BANKHEAD. They do not get any increase up to 50 miles, but when they go beyond 50 miles they increase rapidly.

Mr. HARDWICK. This does not affect anybody else. It merely applies to them the same scale that is applied to other people.

Mr. GRONNA. In order to get the increased pay where motor cars are being used, the distance would necessarily have to be more than 50 miles.

Mr. HARDWICK. Let me say to the Senator that there are two classes of routes recognized by law. One class is called horse-drawn routes, although in many of those cases motor cars are employed; that is, routes the standard length of which is 24 miles, but which by law under exceptional circumstances may extend up to 36 miles. Those are the routes the Senator has in mind. They get this 20 per cent just the same. This does not affect them at all. But these are the routes officially and legally known as motor routes—most of them are in the South, by the way—where they are more than 50 miles, from that on up.

Mr. GRONNA. This is a separate service from the regular rural route?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes; and it is proposed to give them the same increase.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I should like to ask a question. These amendments which have been offered and accepted make a uniform increase of 20 per cent that seems enquitable and right and meets with my hearty approval.

Mr. HARDWICK. Exactly.

Mr. SHAFROTH. No more and no less?

Mr. HARDWICK. Exactly. They are all put on the same basis.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Georgia to the amendment of the Senator from Alabama.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I believe the committee has now offered all the amendments it desires to offer; and if any Member of the Senate has an amendment he would like to offer, I hope he will do so to-morrow.

I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, May 16, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, May 15, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Oh Thou great Spirit, who hast ever been the inspiration of men to high and noble achievements, help us to realize that it is not what a man gets out of the world, but what he puts into it, that makes for the good of mankind.

Give to us, we pray Thee, great thoughts, and help us to noble achievements, that we may leave behind us a record worthy of the great opportunities ever presenting themselves for solution; that when we shall have passed on men shall rise up and call us blessed.

So inspire, guide, and direct us, in His name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MEMORIAL SUNDAY.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Joint resolution to set aside May 26, 1918, as memorial Sunday to commemorate the memory of the soldiers who have died since the breaking out of the present war.
> Whereas many American soldiers have died from sickness or have fallen in battle and are buried in France, far from their homes; and
> Whereas it will be impossible for their relatives to visit or decorate their graves: Therefore, be it
> Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States of America issue his proclamation setting aside Sunday, May 26, 1918, as memorial Sunday to commemorate the memory of the brave American soldiers and sailors who have died for the cause of liberty since the declaration of war against Germany.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which the Clerk has reported. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to inquire if this is going to be discussed?

Mr. EMERSON. I did not know that it was necessary to discuss it. I did not think anyone would object to it.

Mr. KITCHIN. Why not let that go to the Committee on Rules?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think the phraseology of the resolution would have to be corrected somewhat.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes; and I think the grammar needs correction a little bit.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I suggest the gentleman withdraw it.

Mr. EMERSON. No; I shall not withdraw it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It has a very high purpose, of course.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I shall have to object for the present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina objects.

G. D. ELLIS.

Mr. PARK. Mr. Speaker, I present the following privileged resolution from the Committee on Accounts, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 325 (H. Rept. No. 566).

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House $1,200 to G. D. Ellis for extra and expert services rendered in the office of the Clerk of the House of Representatives during the first and second sessions of the Sixty-fifth Congress as employee detailed from the Government Printing Office.

Mr. PARK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the statement accompanying the resolution be read.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Statement to accompany House resolution 325.

APRIL 27, 1918.

Mr. Ellis was engaged in compiling copy and revising proofs for the House portion of the Official Register for 1917; compiling and indexing the annual report of the Clerk of the House of Representatives; compiling a list of the reports to be made to Congress by public officials; compiling the vest-pocket directory, telephone directory, and directory of Members; and has rendered much other and valuable extra and expert service, much of which has been of a technical character, to the House of Representatives.

Respectfully submitted.

SOUTH TRIMBLE, Clerk.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARK. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understand it, the person named in this resolution seeks additional compensation, amounting to $1,200, to that which he receives now on the rolls of the Government Printing Office, having been detailed to the office of the Clerk of the House?

Mr. PARK. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the gentleman examined to ascertain whether this practice has been in vogue in prior Congresses?

Mr. PARK. It has been since the Sixty-second Congress.

Mr. STAFFORD. Appropriating a sum of money for the work that this gentleman does for one Congress?

Mr. PARK. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. And this, as I understand it, is an honorarium by Congress to be paid to this gentleman?

Mr. PARK. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARK. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. What compensation does this gentleman receive from the Government Printing Office?

Mr. PARK. He gets something like $5 a day, or a little over now. He is designated by the Public Printer to prepare these various matters for the use of the House.

Mr. WALSH. What does he get the $5 a day for?

Mr. PARK. He is on the rolls for that amount.

Mr. WALSH. He gets $5 a day, being on the rolls, and then we pay him $1,200 for doing this work?

Mr. PARK. This is by reason of the fact that he is an expert. It requires an expert to do this work.

Mr. WALSH. To prepare a list of Members, with their telephone numbers and room numbers, requires the services of an expert?

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARK. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. Is it not also a fact that this gentleman is on the rolls as a laborer in the Printing Office, and that these matters the gentleman speaks of are performed by him outside of the hours of this labor, and the work is of a technical character?

Mr. PARK. I understand that he is frequently engaged until late in the night, with his family, reading over this matter.

Mr. WALSH. He does this in addition to his regular work?

Mr. PARK. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. I did not so understand it.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, do I understand that while he is at work on this expert work he still performs his regular duty at the Government Printing Office?

Mr. PARK. No; I do not think so.

Mr. BLACK. If he does not perform those regular duties, he still draws the pay for them?

Mr. PARK. Yes; but he does this expert work at night.

Mr. BLACK. Does the gentleman think he ought to draw his pay at the Government Printing Office when he is not at work there and then be paid this additional compensation?

Mr. PARK. He is working for the Government Printing Office in preparing these matters for the Clerk and assisting the Clerk, for the use of the House. He works during the eight hours that he would work there, and in addition he works late into the night.

Mr. DUPRÉ. This compensation of $5 a day which he gets is inadequate as remuneration for the services that he renders, and therefore this amount is to supplement it?

Mr. PARK. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. I want to know this: In determining this compensation for this extra work is the fact that he already draws $5 a day from the Government Printing Office taken into consideration?

Mr. PARK. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. That is taken into consideration?

Mr. PARK. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. PARK, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the Overman bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the Overman bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

JOHN A. TRAVIS.

Mr. PARK. Mr. Speaker, I call up another privileged resolution from the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 327 (H. Rept. No. 567).

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay out of the contingent fund of the House, to Amy S. Travis, widow of John A. Travis, late a messenger on the soldiers' roll of the House, a sum equal to six months of his compensation as such employee, and an additional amount, not exceeding $250, to defray funeral expenses of said John A. Travis.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. PARK, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

LIEUT. COL. BENNETT CLARK.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Tennessee rise?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I have authentic information that my friend, the late parliamentary clerk of this House but now lieutenant colonel of the One hundred and fortieth Infantry Regiment, has landed at a foreign port and is "somewhere in France." I am sure that this House, to every Member of which, I think I may safely say, Col. Bennett Clark was endeared, will appreciate knowing of his safe arrival there, and that each and all of us will feel the profoundest interest, as we shall have the profoundest confidence, in his career. [Applause.] Those of us who knew him well here, who knew his kindness, his politeness, and, above all, knew his fine courage and dauntless spirit, have no doubt that he will be true to the best traditions of the great Commonwealth of Missouri, and therefore true to the best traditions of chivalry and manhood of the American Army, worthy, indeed, of the rich, clean blood that courses through his veins. [Loud applause.]

RENT PROFITEERING IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I call up Senate joint resolution 152 for consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the joint resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 152) to prevent rent profiteering in the District of Columbia.

Whereas by reason of the existence of a state of war it is essential to the national security and defense and for the successful prosecution of the war to establish governmental control and assure adequate regulation of real estate in the District of Columbia for and during the period hereinafter set forth: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That until the adjournment sine die of the present session of the Congress no judicial order for the recovery of possession of any real estate now or hereafter held or acquired by oral agreement or written lease for one month or any longer period, or for the ejectment or dispossession of a tenant therefrom, shall be made, and all leases thereof shall continue so long as the tenant continues to pay rent at the agreed rate and performs the other conditions of the tenancy, except on the ground that the tenant has failed to take reasonable care of the premises, or has committed waste, or has been guilty of conduct which is a nuisance or amounts to a disturbance of the peace of adjoining or neighboring occupiers or a violation of law, or that the premises are reasonably required by a landlord or bona fide purchaser for occupation by himself or his family while in the employ of or officially connected with the Government, or where the property has been disposed of to a bona fide purchaser for his own occupancy; and where such order has been made but not executed before the passage of this resolution, the court by which the order was made may, if it is of the opinion that the order would not have been made if this resolution had been in force at the date of the making of the order, rescind or modify the order in such manner as the court may deem proper for the purpose of giving effect to this resolution: Provided, That all judicial remedies of the lessor based on any provision in any oral agreement or written lease that the same shall be determined or forfeited if the premises shall be sold are hereby suspended while this resolution shall be in force, and every purchaser shall take the conveyance of any premises subject to the rights of all tenants in possession thereof under the provisions of this resolution.

The committee amendments were read, as follows:

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky is recognized for an hour.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, in my opinion the most patriotic service which can be rendered in this hour of our Nation's need is that performed by the soldier in the trenches. The next most patriotic thing which a man may do for his country is to support and maintain the boys who are "over there" in the trenches; and the next, or equal to that, is to prevent the financial glutton from taking the means here at home which should go to the support of the boys in the trenches, or the work which goes to support their actions across the seas. We are here to-day undertaking a piece of patriotic work. I regret that it is not more patriotic than it is. I seriously regret that in another place than in this Chamber a bill looking to complete reform, a bill which has passed this House by 121 majority, every provision of which has been ignored and repudiated elsewhere, and every provision looking to the need or to the avaricious wants or desires of the profiteers have been more than complied with. I fully appreciate the extent to which, under the rules of the House, I may be permitted to go in referring to legislation not before this body, and I shall observe those rules. However, I wish they were not in existence, so that this matter might be discussed with the openness, the frankness, and fearlessness with which it ought to be discussed. For convenience's sake, in my remarks I shall refer to a gentleman not in this Chamber as "Maryland," to another as "Ohio," to another as "New Hampshire." In referring to "Maryland," we should remember that that State is the mother of the only real religious liberty that this country has ever had, and this Nation is the greatest Republic that has ever been built upon the foundation of freedom. "Maryland" has not only sought but has succeeded in defeating the aims of this House to prevent extortion and profiteering in its most hideous form. "Ohio," coming from a State of a war President, the martyred McKinley, stands in the way more conspicuously than does anybody else to-day in all the Union toward stopping this profiteering.

I might go a little further and say that "Illinois," the adopted home of Abraham Lincoln, another war President, has done more to help stop profiteering in the District of Columbia, through his feeble efforts—feeble not because of a lack of ability but because of his surroundings—than has any other person not within this Chamber. If Abraham Lincoln were alive to-day, or if McKinley were alive, I believe that out of their almost unlimited milk of human kindness there would be something done toward stopping this thing, even if that kindness and charity and mercy to-morrow morning at sunrise had to put somebody against a wall in front of a firing squad.

And in referring to both McKinley and Lincoln, I wish to say that I regard them as among the most merciful men who have lived in this generation or any other. I recall the day when but a child, on a beautiful April morning, my father came into the front hall of our colonial home in Kentucky, his face beaming with excitement and gladness, and conveyed the news to my mother and to us children that Abraham Lincoln had been killed. In my childish glee I ran to the neighboring houses to tell the neighbors and the other children that "Old Abe Lincoln" was dead. When my father came with that news there was visiting our family a young lady from Nashville. She rose and clapped her hands and exclaimed, "Thank God for that." After long years had passed, when that woman had become a grandmother, she came back to my house—I still occupying the house where I was born—called me out to the road, and asked if she might come in. When she was in she said she wanted to go to the spot where she had stood and in ecstacy had welcomed the news of Abraham Lincoln's death, that she might there get down on her knees and ask God's forgiveness for it. The rest of the family joined her in that, and it has been a source of grief with our family ever since that such an incident should have occurred in our house. But during all the years that have come and gone since, at our house we have solemnly observed the day on which Abraham Lincoln died.

Another instance showing what I and all the rest of the South think of the war President is that of a man named Marschall, who designed the Stars and Bars, the Confederate flag, and who also designed the Confederate uniform while living in the State of Alabama, and who painted a portrait of Abraham Lincoln shortly after the war. That portrait represented Lincoln as hideously as talent, brush, and paint could do it. But after the days of reconstruction had come and gone, when everybody knew that Abraham Lincoln in his magnanimity would have saved the South, this same man painted another portrait of him. It now hangs in an art gallery in Louisville, Ky., and is said to be the best portrait of Abraham Lincoln in existence, because it better portrays his real character than does any other painting of him in all the world.

I regret that this profiteering has been permitted to go on unrestrained except by the efforts of this body. I regret more than I can tell that the heads of some of the departments of this Government have aided the profiteering by setting a bad example in paying inordinate, extravagant, and wasteful prices for space needed by the Government. We can illustrate by several instances. The Washington Market Co., for instance, pays $7,500 a year for 106,000 square feet of ground.

The Government is occupying, not the most valuable part of that property, but floor space on the second and third floors, and is paying $14,000 a year for it. A little way below, on Pennsylvania Avenue, the Government is renting 10,500 square feet of space, for which it is paying $10,000 a year. I am reliably informed that notice has been served upon the Treasury Department that on and after the 1st of July, $3 per square foot will be asked for the same space. That would amount to $31,500 a year, where the Government is now paying $10,000. I am also reliably informed that in that same building our ally—Great Britain—in this great struggle is paying the money which we have taken from the taxpayers and lent to that ally, $3 a square foot for space.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman from Kentucky yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have been reading the joint resolution which the gentleman has called up, particularly with a view of ascertaining whether anything could be done to save the Government paying these enormous rentals. I question whether there is anything in the resolution pertaining to the matter, and I wanted to ask the gentleman if he would explain if anything can be done to protect the Government?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The gentleman has interrupted—about which I do not complain, because I am glad to yield to him—just at a point where I would have gone on and enumerated other instances where the Government is paying an outrageous rental. But I will divert from that at this point and answer the gentleman's question by saying that I regret that there is nothing in the Senate bill which will stop it, and there is nothing in this resolution which the Senate has sent over to us that will stop it. Later along, when the other bill comes up, the gentleman will find that every ingenuity and artifice known to great minds have been adopted in order that the thing about which the gentleman from Pennsylvania asks me may not be stopped.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. My recollection is that the gentleman's bill attempted to cover that point.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The bill which the House passed by 121 majority, and which has been repudiated in toto by the Senate, would have taken care of that situation, but neither the Senate bill nor the Senate resolution reaches it at all. I was about to say——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The point is if the Government sets a bad example by paying high rentals, private owners naturally will follow and demand the highest they can get. If the Government itself is guilty of profiteering or conniving at it, how are we going to prevent individuals doing the same thing?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The Government is doing no profiteering by being the profiter. The Government is submitting to be profiteered upon.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It submits to the imposition?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It submits to the imposition that is being set by the greedy profiteer.

I was about to say that I am confronted by conflicting opinions of my own as to whether or not this resolution ought to be passed.

Upon the face of it it ought to pass without a dissenting voice, provided the amendments which the House District Committee have put on it are adopted. But behind it is something sinister. There is an ulterior motive behind this resolution, if the newspapers have been correct in reporting it, and I fear they have been. The suspicion is that this resolution is intended to be passed for the purpose of choking off the other legislation. There comes my fear. I hate to vote for the thing; I hate to bring it here because of that anticipation.

But what are we to do? While I dislike to vote for it, even if the House District Committee amendments should be adopted, I shall do so, but with some reluctance. Practically notice has been served upon this House from another body that a long drawn-out contest confronts you relative to stopping profiteering. In the name of God, why should it be? Why should it be? Why should any legislative body in this or any other country ignore the propositions that come from the legislative body which is nearest to the people—ignore them in toto—and then accept, without qualification, every proposition made by the profiteers themselves?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I do.

Mr. WALSH. Is the gentleman prepared to answer a question with reference to one of the provisions of the bill at this point or will he prefer to wait?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will undertake to answer it now, if I can.

Mr. WALSH. This resolution provides that leases——

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Where is the gentleman reading?

Mr. WALSH. Lines 4 and 5 and 6, page 2. Leases which are now in existence and which terminate in the near future shall continue as long as the tenant pays the rent, thereby preventing an owner from making a new lease with somebody for a higher rental. Has the gentleman given any consideration to the question as to whether this Congress can by legislation continue the leases which by their own terms expire on a certain day?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I am of the opinion, after having given the subject much study, that that can be done, and particularly that it can be done as a war measure. But I have no doubt as to the authority of Congress to interfere with or impair the obligation of contracts, particularly in the District of Columbia, which is not a State.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question or interruption?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman state whether or not his answer will cover this case—leases for property in Washington, which run, I think, until October 30?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. They run from the 1st day of October until the 30th day of September; usual annual leases do, at least.

Mr. DYER. I understand that real estate operators have notified the tenants of rented houses and apartment houses, in cases where leases do not expire until September 30, that they must come in within 10 days after they receive the notice and renew the lease; and they are compelled to sign it, if they do sign, at a greatly increased price. In this case, will those contracts that run for another year, or probably two years in some cases, be valid and legal so far as any law we can pass is concerned?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will not go into any discussion of that; but profiteers must think that that lease will carry them on in the future at a higher rental than they are now getting, otherwise they would not want to coerce or compel the execution of those leases at this time.

Mr. DYER. I call the gentleman's attention to that for the purpose of saying that if anything is going to be accomplished by Congress it must be done pretty soon; otherwise, being forewarned, there is nothing that we can pass that would affect them.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman thinks that we can continue these present leases beyond the expiration of the present rental? If the gentleman thinks the Government can do that with reference to contracts with individuals, would not the Congress have the authority to pass a resolution which would continue its own leases? For instance, as to the Munsey Building, could we not by resolution passed provide that the lease that the Government has of 10,000 feet should be continued at the present rental?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I think this resolution would cover that situation.

Mr. WALSH. You think it includes property which is leased to the Government?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes; I do; and to make it perfectly clear, the committee has added an amendment at the end of page 3. You will notice that, as the first words of line 1 of page 2 the expression "real estate" is used. Then the committee added an amendment on page 3 defining what "real estate" is, and it was done with a view of meeting the very situation of which the gentleman from Massachusetts speaks.

Mr. DILL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. DILL. What will be the effect of this resolution upon subleases that might be made?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The tenants now occupying the premises when the President signs this bill will be permitted to remain.

Mr. DILL. But suppose the tenant should sublet for a period of time. Would there be any way for the tenant to get this sublessee out?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. No; I am very glad to say. I invite the attention of the House to page 1, lines 3 and 4. The Senate sent this resolution over to the House containing the provision that it should be in effect only "until the adjournment sine die of the present session of Congress." If the hope of this membership is realized, Congress will adjourn about the 1st of July. If so that provision of the resolution would permit the occupancy of these various rooms and departments and places of business only about 60 or 70 days.

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to which this resolution was referred, struck out that language and inserted in lieu thereof, "until the expiration of one year after a treaty of peace shall have been definitely concluded between the United States and the Imperial German Government." Now, if this resolution passes, with that original language in it, it will turn the profiteers loose upon this community in greater violence immediately the Congress adjourns and walks out of town, and no longer can reach them until next December. The new language, however, will hold the profiteers bound until the end of the war and one year thereafter, not in the full and ample way that it should, but it will protect the tenant who is already in, and will let him remain in the premises until one year after the close of the war at the rent he is paying when this resolution goes into effect. With that language in it, it is worth something; but without it, it is not worth the paper on which it is written.

Mr. SWITZER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Kentucky yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I yield.

Mr. SWITZER. Was not this resolution passed by the Senate as a temporary matter, pending the proposed passage of the bill that passed the House in amended form?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I regret to say that that is true. It is intended to be quite temporary, while they anticipate, and so state to the papers, that an agreement upon the bill itself will be long drawn out; so that at the expiration of this session of Congress we will have neither resolution nor bill.

Mr. SWITZER. Right there, what would be the situation should we pass this resolution in its amended form, as the gentleman suggests, and the bill enacted by the Senate be passed in amended form?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. If the House should amend the Senate bill, which Gods knows it ought to do, or kill it deader than a doornail, then the substance of the resolution would be in that bill. Then we would have both. Both propositions concerning the substance of this resolution would be the same in effect. But if we do not get the bill, we will have this resolution until one year after the war is over. I did not intend to go into a discussion of the bill at this time; but let us take one feature of it. The Senate bill imposes a fine of $1,000 upon the profiteer. If he profiteers to the extent of $5 or $10, or any other insignificant sum, he is to be fined not exceeding $1,000; but if he profiteers to the extent of $31,500, he pays his $1,000 fine and is left his $30,500 profiteer profit. Everybody knows that is not right. Should not the punishment be made to fit the crime? If it is to be a fine, should not the punishment be at least equal to the extortion practiced? But before he is fined he must be indicted and tried by a jury of his peers; and if you can ever find a jury of 12 men in the District of Columbia to try a profiteer who has not got his peer on it to hang that jury, I will be willing to jump into the Potomac River through the ice.

To what extent do the profiteers in house rents exist in the District of Columbia? I say you can not get a jury without getting one or more or nearly all of them on a jury. Capt. Peyser was before our committee the other day to represent Maj. Z. L. Potter, chief of the housing and health division of the War Department for the District of Columbia. I want this membership to listen to an astounding statement he made, taken from the statistics in that office. He says that during each week of last month there came into the District of Columbia to do Government work 1,882 persons, and that out of that number of 1,882 persons who came here 761 each week had to leave because they could not find a place to live in. Yet there is a disposition elsewhere than in this Chamber to stand idle, to get what they want for the profiteer or do nothing, while war work must suffer in consequence of that; and if this work suffers, then the boys in the trenches must suffer. Patriotism! That is a mockery. I could use language that would better express what I think about it, but I will refrain from doing so.

Mr. BESHLIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. BESHLIN. I should like to ask the gentleman if he is satisfied that profiteering now exists in the leasing of property in the District of Columbia?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Why, it is running rampant.

Mr. BESHLIN. Then, if that is true, would we not by the passage of this resolution set the seal of our approval upon such acts by the continuation of leases in which there is profiteering?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Oh, no; plenty of people here have leases that were made at 50 per cent of what they could get them now.

Mr. BESHLIN. But I understand the gentleman to say that leases have been made and are now in existence under which profiteering is being carried on.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. BESHLIN. Does it not necessarily follow, if these leases are to be continued by the passage of this resolution, that we will put the seal of our approval upon such leases?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. No; the seal of our approval will be put upon leases that have been made at a figure that the Government clerk can pay, and not beyond that. If the clerk can not pay, he will get out. That is his option; but the landlord can not put him out. I am glad to say that according to the information I have received, at least one of the local judges, discountenancing the ouster proceedings that are going on, has shown a patriotic spirit. I was told that the other day a Government clerk was haled before a court here to be ousted from his apartment. The judge asked him from the bench if he had really made bona fide effort to get a house into which to move, and he said he had; but he said, "Your honor, I am not going to move out of my apartment until the United States marshal puts me out, or until I have got another house into which I can go and take my little family." The judge said, "Very well. This case is taken under advisement until you find a house." I wish to heavens they would all do that, without legislation to compel it.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I do.

Mr. WALSH. Along the line of the inquiry of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BESHLIN], is it not a fact that many leases have been made since the career of the profiteer began; for instance, within the last six months?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. There have been leases of that kind.

Mr. WALSH. Now, under the provisions of this resolution those leases would continue in force.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. They will continue in force if the tenant wishes them to so continue. The tenant can remain and thereby compel the continuance of the lease, but the landlord can not put the tenant out.

Mr. WALSH. If the conditions exist which the gentleman has just stated, certainly the tenant will not vacate the premises.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I take it for granted that he will get out if he can find a better or cheaper place.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman has just stated that these better and cheaper places do not exist.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. That is my opinion.

Mr. WALSH. Is not the tenant obliged to stay there, and as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BESHLIN] has stated, will we not in a way be approving the profiteer leases that have been entered into?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. That may or may not be so; but I wish the gentleman would bear in mind that I said in the beginning that I was confronted with conflicting opinions of my own as to what I ought to do about this resolution. But I think there is less harm in it than there is good. It is possible for some good to come out of it.

The fight that I make here for these propositions is a patriotic one, and I am proud of it. I take up these measures without any sort of hesitancy and pursue them as vigorously as I can. But my pursuit of them brings unpleasant things to me.

I received a letter yesterday morning which is but one sample of thousands I have received since I have been chairman of the District Committee. This is an infamous, dirty thing; but nevertheless I will read it to the House. After reading it let me ask the question, What prompts it? Is it because I have not been active on behalf of the masses of the people, or is it because I have been active against the profiteers? Something has provoked this letter. I have received hundreds almost as villainous. What provoked it? You gentlemen did not get them because you were not chairman of the committee, which compels you by that fact to take the lead in this legislation, and I got them because of that fact. This is the letter:

Every time I hear the name Johnson I am reminded of a Son of a bich.

E. L. SUESN.

What do you think of that? Is he a tenant for whom I am laboring here to-day? Common sense tells you he is not. I do not know him, I never saw him, and perhaps I never will, but I want to assure you of one thing, that if ever I do I will mark him so that I will know him the next time I see him. [Laughter and applause.] His name is not in the city directory.

Mr. FORDNEY. If the gentleman will yield, I will tell him what I would do; I would bring the man to justice, for I think that is a plain violation of the postal laws.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will not do that; I have suffered these things for several years. Only a few years ago a reputable man in this town went into the office of Speaker CLARK, and there told him that on the day before, about 10 o'clock, on a street car on Pennsylvania Avenue, he heard one man tell another that he came very near getting an opportunity to kill me on the night before as I left this Chamber between 11 and 12 o'clock after a Democratic caucus. The gentleman who gave that information to the Speaker reduced it to writing, swore to it, gave the name, street, number, and address of the man who said it. I did not bother him about any law, and I will not bother this fellow with any, but I would just like to see the color of the hair of either of these scoundrels. [Applause.]

These are but samples of what a man has to bear when he stands up against this crowd. They are the most unpatriotic bunch in existence on the earth. They are worse than kaiserism itself, if God Almighty ever made anything that is worse than that. [Applause.]

And yet we find that elsewhere than in this Chamber is a bill ignoring what this House has done by an overwhelming majority and offering the full and complete desires of the landlords of the District of Columbia instead.

Mr. Speaker, I sincerely trust that these amendments will be adopted, one by one, when they are reached, and that the resolution will be passed within the hour that has been allotted. If any gentleman wishes to discuss it I will yield a part of the time I have remaining, otherwise I will ask for a vote.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. BRITTEN. I have one particular case of profiteering in mind.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Only one; where has the gentleman been?

Mr. BRITTEN. I have one particularly in mind. On Sixteenth Street a large new building, recently erected, for a single room and bath charged $40 to $45 a month. Some of the rooms have since been furnished with a meager amount of furniture, and the price to-day is $30 a week. Will the gentleman's bill cover a case of that kind and prevent it?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The bill which I wrote and which passed this House would reach that very situation, but elsewhere than in this Chamber it has been disapproved and the desires of the profiteers have been listened to instead. This resolution is not my resolution; we are not undertaking to pass the bill, but the resolution. This resolution, I am sorry to say, does not reach it. I regret still further to say that if we undertook to write into this resolution a clause which would reach the situation described by the gentleman from Illinois, it is my opinion that it would meet the same fate elsewhere that the bill passed by this House did.

Mr. BRITTEN. Then what is the use of passing the resolution if it is entirely inadequate?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. There are many people in the District of Columbia that have leases made some time back that are not so outrageously extortionate, and under this resolution they can keep those premises at the rent they originally agreed to pay.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I have not had an opportunity to examine the resolution carefully, but it would not affect a lease which actually runs out during the war?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. No matter when the lease runs out, if the amendments of the House committee are written into it, the tenant would not have to get out until one year after the war is over, if he pays the rent.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Under the terms of the former lease, if I understand it, the most of the leases run out on the 30th day of September.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. If the gentleman will pardon me, I will say that the Senate substituted for the House bill the date of October 1 instead of September 30, and so by one day they give the landlords great advantages.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The tenant can remain on the premises under the same terms, provided he pays the rent?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. And provided he does not commit waste or any unlawful offense on the premises.

Mr. DEWALT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. DEWALT. Will the passage of this resolution add to or impair the effect of the Johnson bill, which passed the House? If it adds to it, I want to vote for it, but if it detracts from it, I will vote against it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. As I just said a moment ago, I believe there is more good in it than there is harm.

Mr. DEWALT. That does not answer my question.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I know it does not. I hope to answer the gentleman further by saying that I am inclined to be of the opinion that it will not impair it; but if it should impair it we have nothing left of the House bill except the enacting clause.

Mr. DEWALT. I understood from the gentleman's argument in regard to the resolution that this is rather a makeshift, and possibly an impediment to the passage of the legislation we passed in the House.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I am inclined to believe it is a makeshift, but it may not prove to be an impediment.

Mr. MAGEE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. MAGEE. If I read the provisions of the resolution correctly, it continues existing rates now paid either under oral or written leases.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It does.

Mr. MAGEE. So that where rates have been recently raised, as suggested by the gentleman from Illinois, it would not give in such a case any relief.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It would not; but there will not be any relief without this, and he will be put in no worse position by the passage of it. It will help some people, but not all of them.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. ROBBINS. What penalty is contained in this resolution to enforce its provisions? I fail to see any penalty here.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I do not think a penalty is needed, for the reason that the court would refuse to eject. That is the penalty.

Mr. ROBBINS. That is the only penalty there seems to be in it?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. That is all that is necessary here.

Mr. ROBBINS. This resolution evidently is inadequate, according to its own reading and the gentleman's explanation of it. Why not remove certain agencies and departments of this Government to a more convenient place—for instance, the Food Administration to Chicago and the Fuel Administration to Pittsburgh?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. That would not suit the local profiteers, and it seems that they are able to defeat it if we were to put it on this resolution.

Mr. ROBBINS. If that is the ground on which the gentleman bases the reason, all right.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me for five minutes? I would like to talk about this matter.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes; but before I do that I want first to yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], whom I see on his feet.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, may I preface my question with the remark that I have no patience with the so-called profiteer in the District of Columbia or anywhere else; but do I understand the gentleman to say that if a lease was made from year to year or from month to month five years ago under then existing conditions it would then be optional with the tenant in possession to remain in possession at that rate until the close of the war and a year afterwards?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. That is what the resolution means to do.

Mr. CANNON. Everything else has gone up in price. We are passing legislation providing for an increased pay all along the line, and while I hold no brief for the landlords, yet in working out an equitable result it seems to me we do not want to oppress the landlord while seeking to take care of profiteers.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The Congress will have to take its choice between permitting a landlord to oppress the tenant or, in some remote instances, oppressing the landlord; and I do not hesitate for the hundredth part of a moment to state where I stand. I am in favor of taking care of the little fellow.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. WHEELER. If this profiteering bill passed by the House and the Senate should become a law, it would not be necessary to consider a resolution of this kind.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The gentleman has just explained that it does not cover it at all.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I do not hesitate to say that it would have been infinitely better if the Senate had given some sort of consideration to the views of the House instead of ignoring them, and accepting propositions which came from another quarter.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, I would suggest to the chairman of the committee that his hour is nearly up. There are several gentlemen on this side who would like to have some time to discuss this resolution, and I will be glad to take the floor and yield to them.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I would like to get 10 or 15 minutes.

Mr. HAUGEN. Where property is transferred, in the event of sale, does this deprive the purchaser of possession?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It does unless he wants it for his wife, his children, or dependents.

Mr. HAUGEN. And in that event it gives possession?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes. Before yielding the floor there is one thing I would like to say in passing, which has just occurred to me in connection with the ugly letter which I just read, and others that I have received. I am informed that on last Friday and Saturday a subcommittee of three from the landlords of the District of Columbia went down in Kentucky hunting for some one to make the race against me for the Democratic nomination for Congress. I hope they find him. I am willing to measure swords with him by representing the boys in the trenches, representing the taxpayers and Government clerks on the one side, while their candidate takes the other side of the proposition. This is not a new venture with them. Only a few years ago when I was undertaking to get some legislation through this body for the benefit of the taxpayers of the country, the auditor of the Washington Evening Star went to the State of Kentucky and into my district, and at Campbellsville, Ky., in Taylor County, he asked a Christian preacher to help him find a candidate against me, but the preacher told him he would not do it, that he was for me. I have an affidavit of those facts. [Applause.]

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, it will be remembered that some time ago the House passed what is known as the Johnson rent profiteering bill. That bill went to the Senate and was pending in the Senate for some little time. The Senate committee reported, as the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] has said, an entirely different bill from that which passed the House, and, as has happened in that body at different times, the Senate struck out all after the enacting clause of the House bill and substituted therefor the Senate's own bill.

This resolution which we are now considering was introduced in the Senate and passed that body without a roll call. My understanding is that the purpose of it is to prevent the ouster of tenants within the District of Columbia temporarily until the differences between the two Houses on the rent-profiteering bill can be adjusted. It simply provides that no tenant can be ousted while he pays his rent, the rent agreed upon, unless the owner sells the place to some one who is engaged in Government work, and who desires to actually occupy the premises. That, I believe, is the only exception, unless the tenant commits a nuisance or something of that nature. If he lives up to the terms of his tenancy he can not be ousted. Capt. Peyser, representing the Housing and Health Division of the War Department, came before the committee on this resolution and said that he deemed it or something similar to it absolutely essential, and he called attention to the number of people who are being notified weekly or daily to leave the premises which they occupy or purchase them. He called attention, for instance, to the fact that 50 employees, I believe it was, in the navy yard were notified on one day that they would have to vacate the premises which they occupied or pay a greatly increased rent. As a result a great many of them quit their jobs. Every Member of the House, I think, knows that it is the prevailing custom within the District of Columbia at present to notify tenants that they must vacate at the end of their tenancy or buy the premises which they occupy, sometimes at greatly advanced prices over what the same premises have been on the market for for the last number of years. Capt. Peyser stated that 1,100 complaints were received in one week in this bureau in which he is employed from tenants who had been told to vacate or to buy the premises, or that their rent would be increased from 33⅓ per cent up, and it is to relieve that condition that this resolution is presented. As the gentleman from Kentucky has said, if his bill were enacted into law there would not be much necessity for this joint resolution, but without a law of that kind it is necessary to have something like this resolution in order to cover the situation which exists here in the District. That, in brief, Mr. Speaker, is the purpose of this resolution. I do not care to discuss it further unless there are some questions, but I do want to yield to two or three Members on this side. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] 15 minutes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I have had tenants speak to me about the wrongs being done to them here in the District, and I have also had lessors tell me of the wrongs that legislation proposed in Congress would, if enacted into law, inflict upon them. I have tried to be impartial in weighing the evidence thus submitted to me, and am convinced beyond doubt that there is, and for at least two years has been, generally prevalent in this District the practice of making and enforcing extortionate demands upon helpless tenants. It is possible, as suggested by the gentleman from Kentucky a moment ago, that the pending resolution, if it becomes a law, might do some injury, but the aggregate of injuries which it could by any possibility inflict would be very small, indeed, when compared with what is daily being perpetrated in this District upon helpless persons, some of whom are women and children, even invalids, by men who think more of money than they do of human rights. To thousands of tenants here, including great numbers of Government employees, the situation has become serious—indeed, desperate. To help us to understand it and to understand our duty at this time, and in order that future generations may have knowledge of present conditions in Washington, I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read in my time a series of articles which recently appeared in the Washington Times.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ALEXANDER). The Clerk will read in the gentleman's time.

The Clerk read as follows:

"BUY THE HOUSE OR MOVE."

A "MONEY-OR-YOUR-LIFE" PROPOSITION THAT OUGHT TO BE STAMPED OUT IMMEDIATELY.

[By Earl Godwin.]

"If the United States Government does not step in now to relieve the housing situation in Washington, human nature in this city is likely to run amuck to an extent that will make a high-water mark in the history of war profiteering.

"Having become ashamed of war profiteering, or perhaps afraid, in the matter of boosting rents, many owners of real estate have now reached the point where they tell their tenants to buy the house or be thrown into the streets.

"Knowing that it is impossible to find other homes, the tenant is forced to choose between paying an excessive price for the property or leaving. There is no other place to go and thousands of families have no means at present to buy property at inflated prices.

"The first news story depicting this situation was printed in this newspaper several weeks ago, and since then the money lust on the part of property owners seems to have increased in fury rather than decreased.

"This form of profiteering, to my mind, is the cruelest, the dirtiest, the most abandoned. It is just as cruel as charging a dying man in a desert $10 a drop for a drink of water.

"I hear on all sides conservative gentlemen who tell me there is no profiteering in Washington, and then I go into the homes of the people and witness the daily struggle with the cost of living and have seen a hatful of letters from landlords to tenants telling the tenants to buy the place or leave. The price is generally a heavy advance over the real worth of the property.

"Now, for heaven's sake, let's have an end to this grinding policy! I believe if it continues a curse will fall on this city which will blight it for years to come. The idea that a war is sent to earth for the benefit of business smells of the lowest pit of hell.

"I'm no lawyer, and can say but little as to the merits of the proposal to change the landlord-and-tenant law so as to prevent evictions of rent-paying tenants for the period of the war, but it sounds good to me.

"I also call attention to the fact that there is enough vacant land in this city to house a million people, and the War Department could set up houses, temporary or permanent, on some of these broad expanses of vacant land."

PRINT THE NAMES AND PICTURES OF PROFITEERS.

THEY KEEP A PHOTOGRAPHIC RECORD AT POLICE HEADQUARTERS. WHY NOT ADD TO IT?

[By Earl Godwin.]

"Publicity is always pleasing to the person involved until some brave newspaper prints the names and pictures of men involved in nefarious enterprises.

"Many well-known men in Washington have swelled with pride when the news columns announced their appointment to this or that committee engaged in one activity or another of benefit to the community.

"How would it be if the Government officials printed the names of men who have served 'Buy the house or move' notices on tenants?

"If this kind of business is reputable, would it hurt anyone's feelings or reputation to have his picture printed alongside of a picture of the helpless family he is evicting, so that he can take a war-time profit at the expense of some one else who is left helpless?

"Personally I believe that parallel to the liberty-loan roll of honor for Washington there should be a roll of profiteers, naming the men who have evicted tenants for war-time profits, as well as those who have put the screws on to the extent of making tenants buy houses at outrageously increased values.

"The names of these men should live in memory, like the names of the crooked sutlers who vampired on their fellow men in the Civil War and the names of the thieves who got rich on embalmed beef in the Spanish War.

"A few money-mad men and women are smearing Washington with mud because they have at this moment the opportunity to make a few dirty dollars. To make these dirty dollars they are taking advantage of the most awful war the world has ever known and are backing whole families against a wall, pointing a pistol at them, saying:

"'You poor fools, there is no other place in the world for you to live, so here is where I get mine, and get it big. You pay me a quadrupled profit on this house or get out into the street.'

"The Government ought to take war-time steps to prevent this war-time crime."

LOOK OUT FOR THE AFTERMATH.

MEN WHO CHARGE EXTORTIONATE RENTS AND MAKE TENANTS BUY HOUSES AT WAR-PROFIT PRICES WILL BE IN A BAD WAY AFTER THE WAR.

[By Earl Godwin.]

"Sam Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, has uttered a sentence which I believe should be raised as high as the golden rule.

"He bids labor not to take any action now or to enter any movement now that it 'can not defend after the boys come home from the trenches.'

"This is one of the most solemn warnings ever uttered, and I believe every man in Washington engaged in trade, real estate, or any other money-getting profession should read it over and over.

"It applies with lightning force not only to labor but to those owners of real estate in Washington to-day who are taking the opportunity of a world war to squeeze more money from the pockets of helpless tenants.

"It is wrong to sell water at a dollar a drop to men dying of thirst. It is just as fiendish to ascertain that there is no place to live except in your houses and then tell the tenants to pay a higher rent, buy the house, or go out in the street with your wife and children to shift for yourself.

"When we are in war we expect to be hurt, but do not expect to be hurt by our own people.

"If the German Army was in Washington some of us might expect to be evicted, but this present money-lusting campaign of evictions purports to be the movement of our friends.

"However, there is no practical difference to a family whether it be put into the street by a German soldier or a money-mad landlord.

"The Government has gathered a hundred thousand extra people here to help carry on the war against Germany, and by so doing makes Washington the main war shop.

"Until proper arrangements can be made to house this great extra force there is a shortage of living space, and this shortage is taken by certain landlords here to be an opportunity to extort money from war workers, Government clerks, and others who happen to live here.

"I have exactly the same respect for a highwayman with a pistol operating in a dark street as I have for the gentlemen who operate with a notice of eviction.

"They will get what is coming to them some day, so, therefore, I bid them read over the utterance by Sam Gompers and refrain from action which they can not defend after the boys come home from the trenches."

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman yield for a question before he sits down?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I will.

Mr. GARD. In view of the series of remarkable articles by Mr. Godwin, whom, I understand, is a Washington man and a newspaper man——

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Born in this city.

Mr. GARD. Born in this city and a newspaper man of great ability, I wish to ask the gentleman whether he has any information as to any efforts being made by the so-called commercial or civic or realty organizations within the District of Columbia to correct these abuses?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the question of the gentleman from Ohio, I have to say that in so far as my knowledge goes none of these organizations has made an effort of any kind respecting this subject, except an effort to prevent any legislation at all. And if the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES] will pardon me a moment, I wish, before concluding, to say that a few days ago a lifelong resident of Washington, a man of high character, told me that recently in a conversation with a well-known local profiteer, he protested to that gentleman against the grave abuse being practiced upon helpless people in this District and said to him, "You fellows had better be careful, because otherwise when this war is over something may happen to you," and he said that the profiteer replied, "Oh, well, if the war lasts as long as we now think it is going to, I do not care what happens when it is over, for I will have all the money I want."

With men like him it is not a question of what is just, not a question of human rights, nor even of ordinary decency, but a question only of how much money can greed wring from its victims. This is, of course, not true of all who lease property. Not all of these should be placed in that class. Some lessors in this District are trying to do only what is right. They are high-minded and honorable. But there are many, far too many, of the other kind here, beings destitute of anything like compassion, creatures whom the sight of human misery does not affect—mere cold, merciless, two-footed beasts of prey. This is only the truth. There are many of them right here in the District of Columbia, and the pending resolution, if enacted into law, will, I trust, do something—not much, I fear, but still something—to curb the rapacity of these profiteers. [Applause.]

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I know that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] has given a great deal of thought and study to this question. I have watched him carefully since he has been a Member of this House, and appreciate the conscientious work he does. Sometimes I think he overdoes it, but that does not affect the seriousness of his work or his good intentions.

I did not vote for his original profiteering bill, because it seemed to me it was too involved in the machinery he planned to obtain the end desired. I questioned whether it would effectuate the proposal he had in mind.

I agree with him thoroughly, however, inasmuch as his bill seems to have been buried in another body, that the resolution now before us does not go to the marrow of the matter. This resolution is a relief measure to a limited extent. It proposes merely to protect the lessee against being distressed during the period of the war. As I read it, that is about all there is to it. The landlord can not dispossess the tenant during the war if the tenant keeps his rent paid and keeps up with the other obligations made in his lease. And so far, so good. But it does not relieve the landlord who might be unjustly treated under these conditions. Taxes might be increased during the period of the war. In certain cities taxes are being increased. Overhead charges might be increased and charged up against the landlord, and if the landlord is held down and tied absolutely to the conditions of the lease made prior to the war he may be giving his property away in the end, which, of course, would not be fair to the landlord.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Just there I wish to say that the rate of taxation here is fixed by a congressional statute and only Congress can change it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If that is so——

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. There has been no bill introduced since 1902 that I have ever heard of touching it, and there is none pending now.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Well, there may be conditions in the lease, apart from taxes, which would weigh very heavily upon the landlord—the matter of repairs, wastage, wear and tear, and things of that kind—during the war, particularly if the war lasted for a long time, all of which would inure to the benefit of the tenant as against the landlord, and leave the latter with a bad investment on his hands. That would not be fair. And I would say now——

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Would his investment be any worse than that of a mother who has given her son to the trenches over yonder?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I assume the landlord would give his son to the trenches in the same manner, so far as that is concerned. It is an equal chance.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I do not believe he would if it cost him anything.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If he did not do it, then he would be in the slacker class, and that, of course, would brand him at once.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. He does not care how much you brand him if he gets the dollar.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Take my city, and it is a home-owning city. A man strives to own his own home and to own the house next door; and if he owns the house next door, it represents his savings and his thrift, the result of his care and hard labor. I think he ought to be protected in the possession of that property, because it is only another form of holding a liberty bond; he pays taxes to the Government in one way or another, and his son may be in the trenches also. I have no sympathy with the man who is a rent slacker, because he ought to pay his rent as quickly as he pays his grocery bill.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. I would like to ask the gentleman if he thinks there is anything in this resolution that would compel the owner of property to make repairs?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Nothing in this resolution; but there might be something in the lease.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five minutes more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES] controls the time.

Mr. MAPES. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania five additional minutes.

Mr. McKENZIE. I desire to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if he believes that under this resolution the tenant might refuse to pay rent, or, in other words, recoup himself for the failure of the landlord to make what he—the tenant—might deem to be necessary improvements?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think the tenant would have the advantage under this resolution, and I will tell the gentleman why: If the tenant leases a house for $10 a month, that would be $120 a year. Say the landlord's charges were $80 a year, taxes and overhead improvements, and some plumbing got out of order, or the front pavement had to be fixed under a notice from the department, or something got the matter with the sewer, for which the landlord had to pay, and he found that his cost for those repairs made during the war was twice as much as it would have been in ordinary times, the landlord would suffer, because, while everything was going up against him, the tenant would go on at the same old rent, despite the fact that his lease had expired.

Mr. CARY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield. I am not arguing for the landlord except to give him a fair show in this matter.

Mr. CARY. I will state that the other day a lady handed me a list of about 15 families in, I think it was, the Dorchester. The landlord raised the rent on each family $2 a room, and several of them asked if he intended to paint or repaper and do some improvements, and he said, "No; not by a long shot."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman in his statement presents a true state of facts, a landlord may be subject to criticism. But I am speaking only for the good landlord.

Mr. CARY. She also stated that it was very insanitary, and that the health department ought to be notified.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The health department should take cognizance of a matter of that kind. I am not speaking for the bad landlord. I am speaking for fair play to both sides.

There is another question, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] touched upon briefly and to which I now ask his attention. The gentleman from Kentucky practically admitted that there was no way by which the Government itself could be controlled for setting the pace for these high rentals in the District of Columbia. I contend that if there is profiteering in the District in the matter of rentals, the Government of the United States itself is primarily responsible for that profiteering. Why? If excess rentals are paid down there in the Munsey Building, for example, they are paid because we have given some bureau or department a lump sum of money, and without question it has gone out and paid the highest price for the premises; that establishes the price for the premises next door.

The gentleman has referred also to the market down here and the high price that the Government is paying for such floors in that market building as are occupied by it. That may be true. It is reprehensible, if true, perhaps. But who is to blame? Is it some individual landlord on the outskirts who owns a house and is renting it to his neighbor? No. It is the Government, to which we have given lump-sum appropriations and which, going down to the market, has said to the owners of the market, "We want your place. There is no question about the price. We will pay the highest price." Under such circumstances the man next door says, "Very well, Mr. Government; if you can afford to pay that rental for that building over there, I am going to charge a good high rent for my premises across the street." That is done all over the city. The Government goes to Sixth and G Streets or to Seventeenth and G Streets or seizes any other piece of property and pays whatever rental is asked. That is the example that the Government is setting. This same question has confronted the business man ever since this war started.

Here is a sample this morning, over in my own city, of the manner in which the Government encourages profiteering.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the gentleman yield me three minutes, to finish this statement.

Mr. MAPES. I yield three additional minutes to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is recognized for three minutes more.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Members of Congress know the difficulty some of us have had in retaining help since this war began. Why? Because the Government says, "We want your stenographer; we want your clerk." The Government has also said to every newspaper office in town: "We want your reporter; we want your editor; we do not care what he gets in your establishment; we want him. We will take him. We will pay him more than you do." The Government gives him the highest price. Members of Congress suffer in consequence just as the newspaper offices and the business houses suffer.

It has been a serious matter to the business establishments and the manufacturing industries of this country. The best mechanics have been taken out of private establishments and out of manufacturing industries. They have been taken by the Government and paid higher wages than private institutions could pay. The Government now has those men and pays them from the appropriations that we have made.

Over in my city we have a lesson this morning. Mr. Schwab did a wise thing, in my judgment, when he lifted the Emergency Fleet Corporation out of the tangle of red tape in Washington and landed it plumb over in the city of Philadelphia. But that momentarily disturbs conditions over there. Why? Because the Government is reported as ready to pay more money to its help than a private manufacturer or a private enterprise can pay. Here is Admiral Bowles this morning issuing a denial that the Government is going to pay its stenographers $2,000 per annum. A report to that effect, issued day before yesterday, has made trouble for many business men in the city of Philadelphia. Their stenographers are after that $2,000. If the Government is going to pay $2,000 to stenographers, I hope they will get it; but Admiral Bowles denies that any such sum is to be paid, and for the present allays the disturbance. But the incident illustrates the point I am making.

Mr. friend from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON], the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, has a pretty big job to tackle when he takes up this question of profiteering. The responsibility rests largely with the Government of the United States, because the pace is set by the Government. These high prices in rentals are being paid by the Government, and naturally individuals and private owners are going to follow suit.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The bill that the House passed would take care of the Government in the matter of profiteering. The Government could not be profiteered against under that bill. Even if the Government made a bad trade, the beneficiary of that bad trade would have to turn the proceeds in as an income tax.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman has admitted, reluctantly, I believe, that his bill is buried in the Senate.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It is not buried unless another body is willing to take the odium which goes with this burial, and I doubt if the majority of that body will be willing to take it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania may have three minutes more. I want to ask him a question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania may have three minutes more. Is there objection?

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I yielded?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has consumed 30 minutes.

Mr. MAPES. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is a disposition on the part of any Member of this House to do any injustice to any landlord or real estate owner in the city of Washington. I wish, however, that every Member of this House were fully alive to the outrage that is going on daily in this city, committed by those who have leaseholds and who are trying to sublet them.

When this war broke out every department of the United States Government sent out word all over the country for the young men and young women to come in here and help relieve the congested condition of the work in these various departments. They have come here from every district in the United States. As soon as they come they are confronted with the problem of finding a room or an apartment. They were perfectly content to pay a reasonable increase upon the prices that had obtained prior to the commencement of this war, but they were not prepared and are not willing to pay the outrageous demands that are exacted in almost every instance. There are concrete examples here without number where people occupying apartments are subletting one room for more than the entire apartment costs them. There are concrete examples here without number where people who rented these apartments before the war began have moved out, or else are occupying one room, and subletting the apartment for three times, and sometimes four times, the amount that they were paying for it. I know of one example where an apartment of six rooms was renting at $40 a month prior to the commencement of this war. It is located in one of the fine apartment buildings. Now the people who own the building are asking $125 a month for a duplicate of the same apartment.

We are told by the press—and I suppose it is true—that when the schools throughout the country adjourn in the month of June 15,000 young men and young women who have taken the civil-service examinations are to come here to fill positions, and they are invited to come here. Advertisements in the county papers and in the city papers throughout the country have invited these people to come here, holding out to them statements of the attractive wages that they will get. Now, what is going to happen? With the condition that we are in here now, how are these people to be provided with places to live? It has been suggested that hundreds of the people who come here every week are compelled to go away again because of the fact that they can not find places to stay. They are placing three and four girls in one room and exacting $20 apiece from them; making $80 a month for a single room that would not have rented for $15 before this war commenced. So it is not only the people who own the real estate who are profiteering. It is not only the people who own the houses and apartments who are profiteering, but it honeycombs this city from one end to the other, and it obtains almost universally. I wish every Member of this House could have had the same experience that I have had in the last three or four weeks. The Representatives from the State of Indiana and their wives have been trying to find some remedy for this evil, have been trying to help the people who have come here, who have been invited by this Government of ours to come here, to save them from the outrageous imposition to which they are being subjected. I believe that if every Member of this House had had the same experiences that many of us have had you would voice your indignation so as to arouse the press of this country, so that it would awaken to a sense of its duty in the matter. I believe it is due to the people of the District of Columbia and of the United States that the press of the city of Washington should awaken to its duty that it owes, not only to this fair city but to the people of the United States, to expose what is going on here so that the sentiment of indignation that would be created would find response, and these people made to conform to common decency.

It has been suggested that this resolution will afford some relief. It will afford but very little relief. Many of these leases were made since this war commenced, and will be protected under this resolution, that are profiteering leases. The resolution does not furnish any relief in cases like that. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] says the tenants may go out. They can not go out, for if they go out of one place they simply go into another. It affords them no relief at all. If necessary, this town ought to be put under martial law until the people who are guilty of these practices are aroused to a sense of the duty that they owe to those who are invited here from all over this country. [Applause.] It is a crying shame and an outrage, and if every Congressman here would take a day off and go out around this town and make inquiries, as many of us have taken the pains to do, he would come back righteously indignant at the conditions. You can go down to the Union Station this very day and you will find girls sitting there, bathed in tears, waiting for the trains to take them back to their homes, because of the indignities to which they have been subjected in this town. Yet you tell me that we are living in a Christian age and among a Christian people. As has been suggested, if this Congress adjourns without something substantial having been done to put upon the statute books a remedy for this evil, the highwaymen in this country will doff their hats to the iniquitous profiteers who have carried on these nefarious practices in this city. [Applause.]

Mr. MAPES. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CARY].

Mr. CARY. Mr. Speaker, I am not going to talk long, because I have got a cold. I want to call attention to a case that I heard of this morning. An old lady, 70 years of age, named Mrs. Anderson, had been rooming in a house for a great many years, and intended to stay there all her life. She found upon her pillow the other day a note saying that she would have to vacate, because the woman who rented the room to her could get more rent. The poor old lady is having a hard time to find one little room. Some of her friends have taken her in for the time being. But as the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] has said, we members of the committee have hundreds and thousands of complaints of this kind. To print them would fill two or three issues of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. The office of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON], chairman of the committee, is filled with them. I have a good many. I think something ought to be done. If any town in the Union should be put under martial law, I think this is the town, as an example to the rest of them if they attempt the same thing. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I want to see the people of the Capital City of the United States prosperous. I am glad to see them thrive in their business and get all they are entitled to, but, Mr. Speaker, I want to see the microbe of graft absolutely eliminated from this city, and am going to do all I can while I am in Congress to help eliminate it. And graft of all kinds, petty and otherwise, has flourished here so long that far too many tradesmen and inhabitants are so deeply inoculated with it that it has got to be a chronic disease and needs heroic treatment. Every time Congress convenes the prices in Washington go up several pegs, and every inauguration they go up to "as much as the traffic will stand."

Ten years ago, when President Taft was inaugurated, the visitors here were fleeced worse than a lamb who wanders into Wall Street. The hotels, restaurants, rooming houses, autos, cabs, and every other activity were in the hands of a hungry horde of conscienceless grafters who were a disgrace to the country. Men who had come here to wade through slush and snow were charged as high as $5 for overshoes that ordinarily sold for a dollar and a quarter. Citizens of the United States who were paying half the taxes of Washington were held up from the day they hit the town to the day they left. I introduced a resolution at that time and tried to get some action that would have eliminated some of the worst features of this petty-larceny profiteering, but nothing was done, and the situation has gone on from year to year until to-day it has reached a very saturnalia of profiteering that staggers belief.

Over and over again we read in the papers that this or that part of the country is filled with disloyal traitors who are trying to hamper the Government in its great task of winning this war, but I say to you that the profiteering grafters of this town are as bad as the thieves of Hog Island or the treacherous rats who preach and practice sabotage in the munitions factories. They are doing their best to make it impossible for Government clerks, who come here to work for small salaries, to keep in good health and efficiency. They overcharge them for everything from rents to hairpins. A young lady who is knitting for the boys "over there" told me that in one store the price of a pair of small needles jumped from 10 to 35 cents in two days.

I could mention hundreds of specific cases, but it is not necessary, for everyone who has to live here knows the facts by sad and bitter experience.

Mr. Speaker, it must be stopped. You tell the farmer how much he can charge for wheat; the baker how much he can get for bread; you fix the price of coal and of numerous other commodities. Let us go right along the line and hit every profiteer that is doing his dirty work, and the best place to begin is right here in Washington, the Capital of the United States, and we will furnish a model and a lesson for the rest of the country to follow.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KREIDER].

Mr. KREIDER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I think we are all agreed and it is evident that something ought to be done to regulate the rentals charged in the District of Columbia. However, I do not believe that this resolution will accomplish what we desire to accomplish. As has been stated, rentals already have been advanced, been doubled and trebled, and in some cases have been quadrupled. This resolution as it is drawn will not affect these contracts now in existence. I believe that if Congress passes a measure it ought to rectify the evil already done, and I would like to offer an amendment. I do not know that I have the amendment in absolutely legal form, but I will read what I would like to see inserted in this resolution. I would strike out all after the word "Government," in line 6, page 1, to and including line 11, page 3, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

It shall be unlawful to rent, lease, or let real estate in the District of Columbia at a rental that is more than 20 per cent in excess of the rental charged for the real estate on January 1, 1917; on all real estate not rented on January 1, 1917, it shall be unlawful to collect a rental which will yield the owner thereof over 10 per cent on the assessed value of said real estate after taxes and necessary maintenance expenses on said real estate have been deducted.

If this amendment is adopted, it would permit a reasonable advance in the rent. In justice to the owners of real estate, I think they are entitled to some advance in rentals, because necessary maintenance expenses and repairs which they are obliged to make must be made at an increased cost, and every tax which they pay will not be less but may be more. If they could get an increase of 20 per cent, it would enable them to pay such increased cost and yet would not work a hardship on the renter. It would be equitable, and it would not only take care of present conditions but past and future conditions. That is to say, it would rectify and reduce present abnormal rents to normal.

In regard to buildings not rented prior to January 1, 1917, I think a revenue of 10 per cent should be entirely satisfactory to real estate owners. I also think it would be sufficient to stimulate the building of homes. If this amendment is accepted, it will not be a hardship for the tenant, and at the same time yield the owner a reasonable return on the investment.

Mr. BROWNE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KREIDER. I will.

Mr. BROWNE. Does not the gentleman think that the Johnson bill, now in the Senate, will really do what he wants this resolution to do? I think the purpose of this resolution is simply an emergency resolution to take care of a certain phase of the situation, and that the real legislation is in the bill which the House passed and which is now in the Senate.

Mr. KREIDER. If my memory serves me right, the bill we passed in the House does not permit an advance of 20 per cent in rental.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It makes provision for an increased rental up to 10 per cent.

Mr. KREIDER. I doubt whether that is a sufficient increase. In fact, I am sure it is not, and is therefore not fair to the real estate owner. In all legislation we should be fair. While there are some real estate owners that will profiteer and rob the people, there are others who will not, and it is in fairness to those who do not profiteer and have not profiteered that we should give the privilege to increase rents and rates sufficiently to cover the increased cost of maintenance expense caused by the present abnormal prices of labor and materials.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, before the amendment is formally offered I want to reserve a point of order on it.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, there is no further request for time on this side.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. In that event I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman withhold that motion for me to offer an amendment?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will. I will yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania to offer an amendment before I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Kentucky wish the committee amendments acted upon now?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I do.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the first amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 4, strike out the words "adjournment sine die of the present session of Congress" and insert the words "expiration of one year after a treaty of peace shall have been definitely concluded between the United States and the Imperial German Government."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 7, at the beginning of the line strike out "decree or judgment."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 16, strike out the word "family" and insert the words "wife, children, or dependent."

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee a question. The word "he," which it is proposed to insert as a committee amendment in line 16, refers to whom—the tenant or the landlard or owner?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I am not the author of the resolution, and I am not absolutely certain what the author intended to write, but as I read it when it was before the committee, and as I read it now, the word "himself," which is in lines 15 and 16, refers to the word "purchaser," in line 15, and the proposed amendment "he" refers to the word "himself."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is, the purchaser or tenant.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Then, the word "purchaser" and the word "landlord" are synonymous, and therefore no landlord or purchaser can get back his property unless he is officially connected with the Government, as provided in the bill?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I did not read it that way.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I may be mistaken. I am just submitting that with all modesty; that is the grammatical construction.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is what it means.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I hope the gentleman has read it correctly, although I did not read it that way myself; but it makes it that much better.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It is rather in favor of the Government employee.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. He is the fellow that I am trying to protect.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I was not speaking of the merits of the proposition at all.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I very greatly trust the gentleman is right in his construction of it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 16, strike out the word "family" and insert the words "wife, children, or dependents."

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

"That the term 'real estate' as herein used shall be construed to include any and all land, any building, any part of any building, house, or dwelling, any apartment, room, suite of rooms, and every other improvement or structure whatsoever on land situated and being in the District of Columbia."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KREIDER. Mr. Speaker, I have an amendment which I desire to offer.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] has an amendment which he has sent to the desk, and which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 11 after the word "resolution," insert the following:

"Provided, That it shall be lawful for the owners of premises leased under the terms of this resolution to add to the rental thereof during the period of this resolution such taxes or lawful charges only as may be levied against such premises in excess of the taxes and lawful charges theretofore prevailing."

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, against that I make the point of order.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It seems to me that the amendment is entirely germane. I suppose that is the point the gentleman makes?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Well, if a resolution is enacted which places a limitation upon one of two parties to an agreement, it seems entirely germane to offer an amendment that would place a limitation upon the other.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I am in doubt whether the point of order should be sustained or not, and I therefore withdraw it; and in withdrawing it I wish to say, in my opinion, the amendment is worse than the proposition that the Senate has offered. The amendment would enable the landlord to get 10 per cent net, and in order for him to get 10 per cent net the tenant would have to pay taxes, insurance, assessments of streets and sidewalks, sewers, water mains, account for depreciation, for vacancies, and so forth, and I believe it is infinitely worse than the 7 per cent amendment offered by the Senate.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I am glad the gentleman has made that statement in advance of the few words I wanted to say in support of the amendment, because I think he clearly misconstrues the language and the purpose of the amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Is the gentleman speaking of his own amendment or of the amendment of the other gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The one I offered.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I was speaking of the amendment offered by the other gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I want the gentleman to be sure and wish he would read the amendment——

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I was speaking to the amendment offered by the other gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then the gentleman misunderstands the amendment. He was not speaking to mine.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment for the information of the House.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman pleases, that means simply this: If an agreement is entered into between a landlord and a tenant prior to the war which runs along during the period of this resolution and taxes are increased on the landlord or the charges are increased on him, as war charges, material cost, or labor generally do, he may have the benefit in rental of these excess charges and taxes over and above what they were when the agreement was made.

Mr. DEWALT. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DEWALT. How does the gentleman construe the phraseology "taxes and legal charges"?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Well, not being a lawyer, I meant by that to say those things which were provided for in the lease; which were provided for in the contract made between the landlord and the tenant.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The resolution as it is now written requires the tenant to comply with all the terms of the lease.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But the rent is fixed, is stationary throughout the term. I tried to explain a little while ago to the gentleman from Wisconsin that if I entered the house of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DEWALT] and paid him $10 a month, merely using those figures for easy calculation, it would be $120 a year to him, and if he were put to an extra expense during the war and the lease expired, and he was prevented from getting another tenant at a higher rental because of this resolution, then the extra charges and extra taxes he had to pay to keep the property in repair for the $10 a month tenant by virtue of the war, then he might be compensated for those extra charges that he had been forced to pay.

Mr. DEWALT. Will the gentleman yield for an interruption?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. DEWALT. I do not want to be presumptious at all in trying to define the gentleman's intent of the words "lawful charges," but in law they would be held anything which was permitted or exacted by law, and they would cover exactly the things suggested by the chairman of the committee—sewers, streets, sidewalks, paving contracts, water mains, and so forth—and I think there is that objection to the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Kentucky, has already indicated that taxes can not be raised except by act of Congress. If that is so, then I presume the amendment would be innoxious unless the other excess charges were included.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The District has got more money now than it could expend, and in the next fiscal year it will have $5,000,000 more than it can spend.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. We have these general charges of profiteering; charges that the landlord is taking an unfair advantage of the tenant, and in some instances he undoubtedly is. That we should hold every good landlord responsible for the acts of a bad landlord, however, does not seem fair. There will be numerous instances of a small landlord, who owns one property in addition to that in which he lives, or who owns two or three small properties in which his savings are invested, who may not deserve the harsh treatment contemplated. Under this resolution it is also probable that some houses may have to be closed for the summer because the owners will not want to rent for a short term, fearing they can not get their homes back if they do.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, in my judgment this amendment would serve no purpose except to open the floodgates through which the landlord could drown the tenant with additional increases. Therefore I renew my motion for the previous question on the bill and all amendments to final passage.

The SPEAKER. The only amendment was the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. If the question is put it will bring that to a direct vote.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I do not want to take advantage of the indulgence of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON], who permitted me to offer this amendment in advance of his motion for the previous question; but, as a parliamentary proposition, amendments having been offered and debated, with the amendment pending, can that motion foreclose action on the amendment?

The SPEAKER. You can vote on the amendment as soon as the previous question is ordered.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The only way to pass an amendment is to vote on the motion for the previous question?

The SPEAKER. Oh, no. As soon as the previous question is ordered, then the Chair will ask for a vote on the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. KREIDER. Mr. Speaker, what has become of the amendment that I have sent to the Clerk's desk? Will that be voted on?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. As the present occupant of the chair was not in, I wish to state that this amendment will be in the same position as the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

Mr. STAFFORD. I beg the gentleman's pardon. The amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KREIDER] is not reported. It was read by the gentleman, but it was not reported at the desk.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I am willing to have it read.

Mr. STAFFORD. I understand the gentleman is willing to have the amendment considered as pending.

The SPEAKER. With that understanding, the question is on the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is, first, on the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the amendment be reported.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will report it.

The amendment was again reported.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KREIDER], which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the word "Government," line 6, page 1, to and including line 11, page 3, and insert in lieu thereof:

"It shall be unlawful to rent, lease, or let real estate in the District of Columbia at a rental that is more than 20 per cent in excess of the rental paid for the real estate on January 1, 1917. On all real estate not rented on January 1, 1917, it shall be unlawful to collect a rental which will yield the owner thereof over 10 per cent upon the assessed valuation of said real estate after necessary expenses on such real estate have been deducted."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate joint resolution.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Have the amendments been agreed to?

The SPEAKER. Yes. The question is on the passage of the Senate joint resolution.

The Senate joint resolution was passed.

On motion of Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate joint resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following:

SALISBURY, MD., May 15, 1918.

Hon. CHAMP CLARK,
Speaker of the House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.:

Please have me excused for 10 days on important business.

JESSE D. PRICE.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the leave of absence will be granted.

There was no objection.

ACTS AND RESOLUTIONS OF NINTH LEGISLATURE OF PORTO RICO (S. DOC. NO. 225.)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying documents, ordered printed and referred to the Committee on Insular Affairs:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

As required by section 23 of the act of Congress approved March 2, 1917, entitled "An act to provide a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes," I transmit herewith copies of the acts and resolutions enacted by the Ninth Legislature of Porto Rico during its special session (Feb. 6 to Feb. 16, 1918, inclusive).

These acts and resolutions have not previously been transmitted to Congress, and none of them has been printed.

(Signed) WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, 15 May, 1918.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY].

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for indefinite leave of absence for Hon. P. H. KELLEY and Hon. GILBERT CURRIE, my colleagues, because of important business.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent for an indefinite leave of absence for Mr. KELLEY and Mr. CURRIE, his colleagues from Michigan. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

LEAVE TO FILE MINORITY VIEWS.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. BLANTON. As a member of the Committee on Claims I ask unanimous consent to file minority views on the bill H. R. 3820 (H. Rept. No. 553, pt. 2).

The SPEAKER. For how long?

Mr. BLANTON. One day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to file minority views on the bill H. R. 3820. Is there objection?

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is that the bill for the relief of Charles A. Carey?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. ROGERS. Did the gentleman in the Committee on Claims reserve the right to file minority views?

Mr. BLANTON. I objected to the bill, and so stated in the committee, but the clerk did not so understand it, and the committee report was printed before my minority views were presented to the clerk, and under those conditions the clerk misunderstood that I was to file any.

Mr. ROGERS. That happens to be the bill that I introduced; and while I have no personal objection, I understand there were some feeling in the committee to the effect that the gentleman's rights had been lost. I think it is an extremely meritorious bill, and I am rather sorry that the gentleman feels it necessary to file minority views.

Mr. BLANTON. I objected to it in the committee, and made a fight against the bill at that time.

Mr. ROGERS. I shall not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

DWELLINGS IN ALLEYS.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the bill H. R. 11628.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky calls up the bill H. R. 11628, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11628) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide, in the interest of public health, comfort, morals, and safety, for the discontinuance of the use as dwellings of buildings situated in the alleys of the District of Columbia," approved September 25, 1914.

Be it enacted, etc., That the operation of the second paragraph of section 1 (relating to the use or occupation of alley buildings as dwellings), of the act of Congress approved September 25, 1914, entitled "An act to provide, in the interest of public health, comfort, morals, and safety, for the discontinuance of the use as dwellings of buildings situated in the alleys in the District of Columbia," be, and the same hereby is, postponed until the expiration of one year following the date of the proclamation by the President of the exchange of ratifications of the treaty of peace between the United States and the Imperial German Government.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky is recognized for an hour.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, four years ago Congress passed a bill forbidding certain alley houses after the 1st day of July, 1918, to be occupied as residences. That time is now close at hand. Inasmuch as houses of every description are needed so badly, it is deemed not only wise and prudent, but absolutely necessary that the date when that bill shall go into effect shall be postponed.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Kentucky yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I want to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman states that this bill was enacted four years ago?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will look and see.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I understood the gentleman to state that four years ago the movement to clean out the alleys in Washington was inaugurated.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. This bill repeals a certain provision of the act of Congress approved September 25, 1914, entitled "An act to provide, in the interest of public health, comfort, morals, and safety, for the discontinuance of the use as dwellings of buildings situated in the alleys of the District of Columbia."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I would like the gentleman to be in good humor before I ask him the next question. If we pass this legislation, will we clean out everything in Washington four years hence?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I do not know the full purport of the gentleman's question. I take it for granted that it is facetious, and I would rather he would give the answer to it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That will come in due course. We will not press it now.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, that is all there is to the bill; it extends the time for the occupancy of the alley houses until after the war is over, and so far as I have heard, this measure is approved from the White House clear down to the alleys, including the owners of the buildings and the occupants of them.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I do.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the gentleman any information whether, in anticipation of this law taking effect, the owners of dwelling houses in the alleys of the District have razed the buildings or changed them, so that they could not use them for habitation purposes?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. My information is that the owners of the buildings have permitted them to go down in repairs in anticipation of the law going into effect on the first day of July, and if this bill passes now, between this period and the 1st of July, repairs will be made so as to make them really habitable.

Mr. STAFFORD. No buildings have been vacated as habitable quarters by reason of the approach of the time that the bill would be effective?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. According to my information, a considerable number have been vacated; it is my opinion that some have been vacated, but not on that account.

If there is no desire for discussion of the bill, Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RAYBURN). The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MEDICAL SOCIETY OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I next wish to call up the bill H. R. 5786, to incorporate the Medical Society of the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I raise the question of consideration.

Mr. STAFFORD. Let it be reported first.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts raises the question of consideration. The Clerk will report it firs

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5786) to incorporate the Medical Society of the District of Columbia.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I renew the question of consideration, the title having been read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Drs. George Wythe Cook, Frank Leech, J. W. Chappell, E. G. Seibert, P. S. Roy, R. T. Holden, W. M. Barton, E. Y. Davidson, J. B. Nichols, A. L. Stavely, C. W. Franzoni, H. C. Macatee, D. S. Lamb, A. W. Boswell, and J. Lawn Thompson, and such other persons as they may associate with themselves, and their successors, are hereby incorporated under the name and title of the Medical Society of the District of Columbia, for the purpose of promoting and disseminating medical and surgical knowledge, and for no other purpose.

SEC. 2. That the Medical Society of the District of Columbia be, and it is hereby, empowered to own, mortgage, and convey such property as may be necessary for its purposes, and to make such rules and regulations as it may require, and which may not be repugnant to the Constitution and laws of the United States.

SEC. 3. That Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act of incorporation of said society.

With committee amendments, as follows:

Page 2, line 5, strike out the comma after the word "mortgage."

Page 2, line 7, strike out the word "and" and after the word "which" strike out the word "may" and insert the word "shall."

Page 2, line 8, after the word "Constitution," strike out the word "and" and insert the word "or."

Page 2, line 10, strike out the comma after the word "amend."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I raise the question of consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is, Shall the House consider this bill?

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. A division, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A division is demanded.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 18, noes 12.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House decides to consider the bill. The gentleman from Kentucky is recognized.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I move that the bill be read for consideration.

Mr. ROGERS. It has just been read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendments.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to oppose the passage of this bill. Of course the vote just taken indicates the intense interest there is in this measure, from the large number voting on each side of the question. I understand the gentleman has an hour in which to debate the merits of the measure.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time, and the gentleman from Massachusetts may be recognized.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the measure. The report on the bill H. R. 5786 is very illuminating, giving the House the information that "The committee has had under consideration this measure, and reports it back with certain amendments with the recommendation that the bill pass."

This provides that the Congress of the United States, in these troublous times, upon meager information, shall confer a national charter upon certain doctors, all of whom, I assume, are eminent in their profession.

It is a little unusual to incorporate a medical society with a national charter; that is to say, it is not an everyday happening. In the first place, I doubt whether or not the District of Columbia Committee under the rules is vested with jurisdiction to report a bill of this sort, but I assume the time has passed for raising that point. National charters should not be conferred except upon the most urgent reasons.

We have recently had up the question of preserving the medical profession from extinction by the operation of the selective draft law, and have provided that young men who are studying in medical schools—as I understand the latest agreement of the conferees—medical students who are now engaged in that study shall be exempt from the operations of the draft law. This measure also provides that this society can own, mortgage, and convey such property as may be necessary for its purposes.

I do not know whether they intend to conduct a medical school here or not. It may also make such rules and regulations as it may require. There are no safeguards for the public, or the prospective or present patients of these gentlemen who desire to have conferred upon them this unique distinction.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. I will gladly yield. I seem to have plenty of time.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I have understood that doctors were the only people who had the special privilege of burying their mistakes. This is a time when a great many mistakes are being made, and it may be that they are possibly incorporating for the purpose of disposing of the many mistakes that have been made, to get them out of the way.

Mr. WALSH. As far as any information concerned in the report, that may be true; but I think it would be more appropriate if, instead of conferring upon them that privilege, we should bury this bill, which seeks to confer this national charter upon these medical gentlemen.

Mr. McKENZIE. I will ask the gentleman if this is not a bill in the interest of the public health?

Mr. WALSH. No; it is not so nominated in the bond. It is to incorporate the Medical Society of the District of Columbia, and we are without information on the point the gentleman mentions.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. As a matter of fact, is not the bill aimed against certain men who practice medicine who are not within the charmed circle, that is against the osteopaths, the Christian science practitioners, and so forth?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. And veterinarians. [Laughter.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. And veterinarians?

Mr. WALSH. I have no doubt that those gentlemen, together with many other competent practitioners, would have great difficulty in associating themselves with this galaxy of medical talent so as to be admitted into this society.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. As a matter of fact, are not these societies organized in every city?

Mr. WALSH. I can not say as to that; but certainly not by a charter from the Congress.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. This is to create a corporation of the District of Columbia. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts know of any reason why they can not incorporate under the general laws of the District?

Mr. WALSH. No; I know of none; but the gentleman will understand that this bill confers a national charter.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I do not understand that it confers a charter independent of the District of Columbia. Does it not say that they shall be created a body corporate of the District of Columbia; in other words, giving them a local status?

Mr. WALSH. It says that they shall be incorporated under the name and title of the Medical Society of the District of Columbia. That is its title, but the incorporation is not confined to the District.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will it be agreeable to the gentleman to yield to me to make a motion?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I move to strike out the enacting clause of the bill.

Mr. CANNON. Why should not they incorporate? They do everywhere else throughout the States.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. They do not have to come to Congress to do it under the laws of the District of Columbia.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Can the gentleman from Tennessee cite the House to the provision of the general law under which they can incorporate?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I have not the Code of the District of Columbia before me, but frequently in the past I have had occasion to investigate these matters. The Code of Laws of the District of Columbia provides specifically the method by which persons can organize corporations as District corporations. There is no necessity for a special act in any case, unless it is desired to go beyond the general law that applies to the District.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Under the general law could the purposes of the incorporation be broader than those that are provided for in this bill? Gentlemen will see that this bill proposes to create a corporation "for the purpose of promoting and disseminating medical and surgical knowledge, and for no other purpose." That language very strictly limits the purpose.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The terms of the general act authorizing corporation in the District of Columbia are broad.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes; but are they so broad that if these gentlemen should incorporate under that act the corporation would have broader powers than are proposed to be given by the pending bill?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I do not think so.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That is the gist of this controversy.

Mr. MONTAGUE. If the gentleman will permit me, I desire to suggest that the powers to be exercised under this charter are not to be confined to the District of Columbia. They may be exercised anywhere in the United States.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That is often done.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I am not speaking of the merits or demerits of the bill, but I am trying to get before the House the scope of this charter. This is not a District of Columbia corporation. It could exercise powers beyond the District of Columbia.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. If the interpretation of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MONTAGUE] is correct, I am much more in favor of striking out the enacting clause.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I fear that my interpretation is correct.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. But all that this proposed corporation could do would be to promote and disseminate medical and surgical knowledge. By the terms of this bill the corporation could do nothing beyond that. The dissemination of knowledge from the city of Washington into the State of Maryland would not work any very great harm in the State of Maryland. Useful knowledge, legitimately disseminated, does not hurt anybody. But would the corporation, if created under the general law, have broader powers than that?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman from Wisconsin, of course, understands very well the distinction in law between a corporation of the District of Columbia and a Federal corporation. My first impression of the bill was that this was a special act that would create this society a corporation of the District of Columbia. Therefore it did not seem to be necessary, because the general District Code would authorize their incorporation. But the gentleman from Virginia thinks I am mistaken about that, and that this act will create not a corporation of the District of Columbia but a Federal corporation, without having a situs anywhere, without being responsible in the State courts, and so forth.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. If the gentleman will permit me, I see that the bill proposes to authorize the society to own, mortgage, and convey property, and that such property need not be in the District. That provision is too broad. I think the gentleman's point is well taken.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I move to strike out the enacting clause.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that in the House when a House bill is being considered, and after it has been read and the committee amendments have been read, the motion to strike out the enacting clause is not in order. That is a proper motion in Committee of the Whole House, but I suggest to the gentleman that in the House the proper motion is to lay on the table.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move to lay the bill on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RAYBURN). The gentleman from Tennessee moves to lay the bill on the table.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FESS. When a bill is being discussed and the gentleman has an hour and yields to some one else to make a motion to table, the motion to table naturally cuts off all debate. Can one who holds the floor for the purpose of debate yield to another for the purpose of making a motion to cut off debate?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts did not claim the remainder of his time.

Mr. FESS. The gentleman from Tennessee had time in his own right?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts yielded the floor to the gentleman from Tennessee to make a motion. The gentleman from Tennessee made the motion and then changed it to another motion.

Mr. FESS. And the motion that he made cut off all debate.

Mr. WALSH. I could have cut off debate myself.

Mr. FESS. If the House sustained it.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman from Massachusetts could yield the floor to offer any kind of a motion or amendment he saw fit. The gentleman from Massachusetts yielded the floor to the gentleman from Tennessee for the purpose of making the motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks that if the gentleman from Massachusetts had insisted on his right to the floor, or had asked the gentleman from Tennessee what motion he intended to make, he might do so; but he did not do that. The gentleman from Tennessee made the motion to lay the bill on the table.

Mr. FESS. In other words, if the gentleman from Kentucky had reserved his time and the gentleman from Massachusetts had taken the floor in his own time, the gentleman from Massachusetts could make a motion that would result in cutting off all debate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Yes; if the House was not in favor of the motion it could have rejected it.

PODIATRY.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (S. 2123) to regulate the practice of podiatry in the District of Columbia.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage of this act it shall be unlawful for any person, for compensation, to practice podiatry in the District of Columbia without first successfully having passed such examination concerning his fitness as the health officer of the District of Columbia may prescribe. The health officer aforesaid shall conduct the examination.

No person shall be permitted to take the examination without first paying a fee of $10 to the District of Columbia. None of the provisions of this act shall apply to regular practicing physicians or surgeons. Neither shall they apply to podiatrists who have been practicing podiatry in the District of Columbia for one year next preceding the approval of this act.

Podiatry (or chiropody) is hereby defined to be the surgical, medical, or mechanical treatment of any ailment of the human foot, except the amputation of the foot or any of the toes; and, also, except the use of an anesthetic other than a local one.

Whoever violates any of the provisions of this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be fined not less than $50 nor more than $100, or imprisoned not less than 30 days nor more than 100 days, or both so fined and imprisoned.

With the following committee amendments.

Page 1, line 6, strike out the words "health officer" and insert the words "Health Officer." In line 8, page 1, strike out the words "health officer" and insert "Health Officer."

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the report may be read for the information of the House; it is highly illuminating.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the report be read. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. THOMAS. I desire to know if this bill does not relate to corn doctors.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks the report will show.

Mr. THOMAS. Why did not the gentleman who drew it talk English and say "corn doctors"?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the report.

The Clerk read the report (by Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky), as follows:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill S. 2123, entitled "An act to regulate the practice of podiatry in the District of Columbia," having had the same under consideration, report it back to the House with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I am informed that a number of States have a law similar to this. The committee has yielded to repeated requests of a number of corn doctors around town to report the bill with the expression of opinion that it ought to pass. With these remarks I yield the floor.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I regret that the gentleman from Kentucky has not given the House a fuller explanation of this bill. It raises a number of very important considerations. In the first place, it is a question whether the particular medical practice proposed to be licensed here should be called "podiatry," which is a term not found in the dictionary, or "chiropody," the term which is generally applied to the treatment of the foot. May I ask the gentleman from Kentucky, in my time, whether there was any expert testimony before the committee as to the use of the word "podiatry"?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. A corn doctor in town, Dr. Rice, appeared before the committee, and he said that chiropody applied to the hand and the foot, while podiatry applied only to the foot. Like the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I could not find it in the dictionary, but I accepted the meaning of the term which he gave. He informed the committee that the medical dictionary contained the word.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The term is not found in the dictionary to which a few Members of the House are obliged to go once in a while.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I went to the dictionary, and I asked Dr. Rice about it, and he said it was in the medical dictionary.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I suspect the use of the new term may indicate an increase in the charges that are to be made. The old-fashioned chiropodists have fixed charges in the various cities and States where they are organized and licensed by law, and this new highfaluting name may have some hidden meaning. That is another question I thought the gentleman from Kentucky might——

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I know nothing about this bill nor who is sponsor for it——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I was trying to get the gentleman some information. I thought the gentleman would want to know something about it, and that is one of the reasons I took the floor. [Laughter.]

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I did not rise in the hope of getting any information from the gentleman from Pennsylvania. [Laughter.] If so, it would have been one of the surprises of my life.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman is so well versed in podiatry that I presume he knows all about it.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman ought to remember that the accent is on the other syllable.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. With the gentleman from Wisconsin the accent is on the pedal extremities. [Laughter.]

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. If the gentleman will go back to the original Hottentot from which this was derived——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. From whom we all sprung?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. He will find the proper accent.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And it will be a pretty hot accent, I have no doubt.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I wish the gentleman would not object to this bill unless he has some good reason for not having it enacted into law. A gentleman of prominence in this town—a professional man—told me of a man who came here and begun to practice chiropody, or podiatry, in this city, and very soon after he came—within four or five days—he operated upon the foot of a young man, and blood poisoning set in that resulted eventually in crippling the patient for life. This professional man told me that any quack or humbug could come here now who knew nothing about the science of the business, or anything about cleanliness, and cared less, and practice that profession; that blood poisoning sets in more frequently than people think, and that people have been crippled. He mentioned this case and told me who the man is.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Ordinarily the gentleman has a fine sense of humor, as I have observed on certain occasions in the House and elsewhere, therefore I thought he would appreciate the vein that was developed by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON], who is ordinarily well versed in corns, whether of lowly or Bourbon origin, when he flung this bill at us with so scant an explanation. But the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] in this particular instance has failed to rise to the real joyousness of the situation. In matters of human sympathy, kinship with the human race, and things like that, the gentleman is always there with both feet, but on this occasion he comes to the rescue of the podiatrists with very little information, although he has stated that the gentleman from Pennsylvania would be unable to do better.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I did want to explain the bill, but I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I want to ask if the gentleman from Wisconsin has trodden on the corns of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Not at all. If he had, he would have heard from "the gentleman from Pennsylvania," seeing the heft of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. May I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if he understood the statement or argument of the gentleman from Wisconsin, as I did, that the passage of this bill would probably prevent cases of blood poisoning?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I understood the gentleman from Wisconsin to say that he had been told by one expert in the practice of chiropody, before we discovered podiatry, of a case of blood poisoning which resulted from incompetency on the part of some one who attempted to treat a man's foot. I thoroughly agree with the gentleman so far as his sympathy in that case is concerned, and I am assured there are similar cases. There ought to be some legislation of this kind, and it was in order to further this bill, if it is in proper form, that I rose to take the place of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON], who ordinarily explains his bills so thoroughly and well. I am going to yield now to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THOMAS], who desires five minutes.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Speaker, I think this bill is very important, and I suggest that there is not a quorum present. I think we ought to have a quorum present.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I know my friend from New Jersey does not mean to make that point.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RAYBURN). He seems to have made it, however.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman merely suggested it. He did not make it.

Mr. BROWNING. I really thought we ought to have a full House here, but I withdraw the point.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If my good friend from New Jersey does not appreciate the pleasantries of the last three minutes, I shall proceed seriously to discuss this bill, although I have promised to yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I notice in this bill, on page 2—and I am speaking seriously about the bill—that any person practicing podiatry for one year preceding the enactment of this law is not included within its provisions, and I notice that the health officer is not only to prescribe what the examination is to be, but is to hold the examination. Does not that give the health officer the right to make absolutely a monopoly of this practice?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the health officer were so inclined, but the health officer of this District very fortunately is a capable man and of excellent standing in his profession. I do not believe he would do anything of that kind.

Mr. LINTHICUM. But he may not always live and hold that position.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I say to the gentleman frankly, and I thought the gentleman from Kentucky would give us some information on that line, that there ought to be some board to which the applicant for license should go and before whom he, or she, should present his or her qualifications. The only person to whom the applicant is to go now is the health officer of the District, and I suppose that is the best that the committee could do; at least, that is all that it has presented in the bill. It means registration more than anything else.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey, providing his colleague does not make a point of no quorum.

Mr. LEHLBACH. In similar acts which have come to my notice it is not only placed in the hands of a board, but they must prescribe general rules and regulations which are applicable in every case, and not only is this in the hands of an individual, but he need not operate it under a set of general rules and regulations.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. There ought to be rules and regulations; yes. I will say to the gentleman from New Jersey that this applies only to male applicants, as I understand it. There are quite a number of women practicing chiropody who are doing as well, if not better, than men, and I think they ought to have an opportunity to come in under this bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. This bill is not limited in that particular; it applies to both sexes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In line 6, referring to examinations, "his" is used.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to direct the gentleman's attention to page 1, line 10, "no person shall be permitted to take the examination," and so forth, and then in line 4 it refers to "person," referring both to male and female. The word "his" under the section of the general statute applies also to "her."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. HELM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield first to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. HELM].

Mr. HELM. Is the gentleman in position to inform the House whether this is a war measure? [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is another question I thought the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] would discuss, but he did not. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this bill. I believe we are passing too many things, too many bills, to regulate matters generally. I believe if we keep on we will be passing bills to regulate the length of feathers on women's hats throughout the country. Now, this bill, as I understand it, is what is properly termed a "corn-doctor's" bill. [Laughter.] They have got the word "podiatry" in there. [Laughter.] I do not know where they got it. I do not believe they got it out of Webster's Dictionary, because I do not believe it is there, though it may be. I guess probably it is a word they coined. I would be in favor of a bill to deport every corn doctor out of Washington. I believe they call themselves podiatrists—I do not know—but because of my experience with them in the city of Washington I would willingly vote to deport every corn doctor now in the city out of it [laughter], and put them, not as captains, not as majors, not as generals, but in the front line in the trenches in France, where just as many of them could get killed as quickly as possible. [Laughter.] I say they are a set of fakers. I say that from experience [laughter], because I have one corn—on one foot, of course; not one corn on two feet—and I have had a dozen corn doctors in this town working on that corn, and it gets bigger all the time. [Laughter.] Why, I believe I am a better corn doctor myself than any of them. All they can do in the world is to take a knife and whittle off the top of the corn and rub some grease on it, that they call ointment, and then look at you as wise as a tree full of owls and say, "It don't hurt now, does it?" [Laughter.] Now, gentlemen, the only way and the proper way to take a corn off of your foot is to take it off all in one piece. A man who understands his business can do that, and you will not feel it. There is not a one in this town I have visited who knows anything about taking a corn out in one piece. [Laughter.] Now, they want to be examined. If they were to stand an examination and do not know any more about corns than they have practiced on me, they could not pass any sort of an examination. Why, I understand—I do not know whether it is true or not—that the corn doctors in the city of Washington are going to have introduced or have had introduced a bill to commission them as officers in the Army. Now, if you would turn loose the corn doctors in Washington on the soldiers, the American soldiers in Europe, in the front ranks, in the trenches, and let them work upon their feet a while, those soldiers will whip anything in the world, because when the corn doctors get through with them they would not be able to retreat, but would have to fight. [Laughter.] Now, Mr. Speaker, the man who has got a corn in the city of Washington is in a bad fix. [Laughter.] It reminds me of a fellow who went on a protracted drunk down in JOE BYRNS's district in Tennessee, which adjoins my district. He had been drunk a long time, and he was in bed one night, and he had a shotgun sitting by his side. There was a monkey in the house in a cage. The monkey sometime during the night escaped from the cage and got upon the foot of the bed of this man. He waked and he saw the monkey. He looked at it, he reached around and he got his gun, he took a rest, he took aim, and he said, "If you are a monkey, you are in a devil of a fix." He said, "If you are not a monkey, I am in a devil of a fix." [Laughter.] And it is that way with a man with a corn in Washington. He is in a bad fix if he has a corn, and gets in a worse fix if he goes to a corn doctor in Washington to tinker with it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I am sorry not to agree in all things with my friend from Kentucky [Mr. THOMAS]. It seems to me this bill is a good bill so far as it goes. There ought to be an official alignment of those who practice chiropody in the District of Columbia, as is being done elsewhere.

Other States have checked up these practitioners, and they have attained quite a prominence for useful service. I know myself of certain offices in Philadelphia where a large business is done by these practitioners, men and women. Personally, I would prefer to see this bill amended so as to include women, although the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] thinks they would be covered by the bill anyhow.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will say to the gentleman that one of the first sections of the code of laws of the District of Columbia provides that where one gender is used it includes the other.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the gentlemen of the committee are satisfied, I shall not argue that point further.

But I can not agree with my friend from Kentucky [Mr. THOMAS] that these chiropodists are a barnacle upon the community. On the other hand, their profession and their practice is to remove from the human foot barnacles that are very undesirable. It frequently happens that a physician who undertakes to treat the human foot is entirely at sea as to what should be done. I have known of physicians undertaking the treatment of ingrowing toenails, for instance, who have bungled and compelled the sufferers to undergo treatment in hospitals. If such patients had gone direct to some skilled chiropodist, much time, expense, and pain would have been saved. Chiropody is really a profession in itself. It seems to me the committee is wise in attempting to regulate the practice, to require registration, as it were. The payment of a $10 fee is immaterial so long as the practitioner is registered and can not fool the public. It is really our business to protect the legitimate practitioner against the fraud or incompetent. I am therefore in favor of the bill. Unless some gentleman would like to have time, I will not pursue the argument further.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RAYBURN). The Clerk will report the committee amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 1, lines 6 and 7, strike out "health officer" and insert "Health Officer."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk reported the next committee amendment, as follows:

Page 1, line 8, strike out the words "health officer" and insert the words "Health Officer."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next committee amendment, as follows:

Page 2, line 7, after the word "medical," strike out the comma.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas and Mr. WINGO demanded a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 83, noes 5.

So the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PROTECTION OF BIRDS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the bill H. R. 12083.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky calls up the bill H. R. 12083, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12083) to prohibit the killing, trapping, netting, ensnaring, hunting, having in possession, and sale of certain wild birds in the District of Columbia.

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful, within the District of Columbia, for any person at any time to buy, sell, or expose for sale, or to have in possession for the purpose of selling, any game bird. For the purpose of this act the following shall be considered game birds: The anatidae, or waterfowl, including brant, wild ducks, geese, and swan; gruidae, or cranes, including little brown, sandhill, and whooping cranes; rallidae, or rails, including coots, gallinules, and sora, or other rails; limicolae, or shore birds, including avocets, curlew, dowitchers, godwits, knots, oyster catchers, phalaropes, plover, sandpipers, snipes, stilts, surf birds, turnstones, willet, woodcock, and yellow legs; columbidae, or pigeons, including doves and wild pigeons; gallinae, or grouse, including wild turkey, pinnated grouse, ruffed grouse, or any kind of grouse, and quail; reed birds, or rice birds; marsh black birds.

SEC. 2. That nothing herein contained shall prevent the right of any person to take or kill any of the wild fowls or birds in section 1 of this act mentioned, when the same shall be so taken or killed by virtue of the authority of a license duly issued by the proper authorities of said District of Columbia for scientific purposes.

That every person who shall violate any of the provisions of this act shall be fined not less than $25 nor more than $100, or be imprisoned for not more than one month, or be both so fined and imprisoned: Provided, That each bird mentioned in this act, so had in possession, bought, sold, exposed for sale, or had in possession for the purpose of sale, shall constitute a separate offense.

SEC. 3. That nothing in this act shall prevent the sale at any time of Hungarian dark-necked pheasants, ring-necked pheasants, Mongolian pheasants, or mallard ducks when the same shall have been raised in captivity; or the sale of said game birds alive for propagating purposes: Provided, That the same is done under such requirements as may be prescribed by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 4. That all acts or parts of acts in conflict herewith are hereby repealed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOULD].

Mr. GOULD. Mr. Speaker, this legislation was introduced by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM]. The Committee on the District of Columbia held a very extensive hearing, before which appeared representatives of the various societies, both National and State, which are interested in hunting and in the protection of game. The form of the legislation is based on recommendations which those interested in the preservation of game thoroughly approve, and the majority of the States of the Union have similar legislation on their statute books. I do not know whether the gentlemen of the House are familiar with the slaughter of game birds in and around the District of Columbia or not. The testimony as brought out at our hearings revealed a bad situation. The question of the raising of certain kinds and types of game birds in captivity for sale, the same as chickens or any other fowl might be raised, is taken care of, permitted, and provided for in the bill. The committee made a unanimous report, and it feels that the legislation should be passed.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOULD. I will.

Mr. STAFFORD. Do I understand this bill will absolutely prohibit the sale by a commission merchant, or any other dealer in poultry, of wild ducks or geese?

Mr. GOULD. Yes, sir.

Mr. STAFFORD. So that if wild ducks or geese are shipped to a commission merchant it would actually be a penal offense for him to sell them to any hotel or restaurant?

Mr. GOULD. Yes, sir.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is there any law of the States that prevents the sale of wild ducks when properly killed to hotel proprietors or to restaurant keepers?

Mr. GOULD. Yes, sir.

Mr. STAFFORD. When killed in the open season?

Mr. GOULD. Yes, sir.

Mr. STAFFORD. I was not aware that the law went to that extent.

Mr. GOULD. The New York State law, Mr. Speaker, provides for that.

Mr. KREIDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOULD. I will.

Mr. KREIDER. I notice in the reading of line 8, page 1, it says: "Wild ducks, geese, and swan." Are we to interpret that as meaning wild ducks, wild geese, and wild swans?

Mr. GOULD. Yes, sir.

Mr. KREIDER. Then, should not the bill so state?

Mr. GOULD. It might be more definite.

Mr. KREIDER. It says "geese," which may apply to wild or tame geese.

Mr. MCKENZIE. Is not the distinction well defined between game birds and fowls and domestic fowls, and that the reference to those game birds means wild birds?

Mr. GOULD. Wild game birds; yes, sir.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Will the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOULD] yield five minutes to me?

Mr. GOULD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM].

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to explain one thing that was referred to by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD]. I have made a very careful examination of the game laws of the various States, and have found the following to be the situation:

The sale of water fowl, ducks, and geese is permitted only in 19 States of the Union. The sale of quail is not permitted in any State. The sale of reed birds is only permitted in 6 States, and of marsh blackbirds in no State. Shore birds can be sold in 11 States; while this is true, every one of them is permitted to be sold in the District. They are not permitted to be sold, for instance, in Maryland or in Virginia, and yet they sell them here, and the consequence is that these Virginia and Maryland gentlemen tell me—Members of Congress from those States, State game commissioners, and others interested—that poachers kill these birds illegally in the States I have mentioned and bring them in here and sell them.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have not inspected the game laws very closely, but my impression was that the sale of the game was forbidden only in the breeding season. I know as far as the game laws of Wisconsin are concerned there is a closed season during the entire year as to pheasants and other rare birds, snipe, and the like, but I did not think it went so far as to forbid the sale of wild ducks in the open season.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. The State laws do go that far. Ducks can not be sold in Wisconsin, I will say to the gentleman. Now I shall be glad to answer any questions. This is a bill that evidently ought to pass.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. Will this stop the slaughter of birds anywhere?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. It will help in this respect: It will stop the slaughter of them and bringing them into the District for sale here.

Mr. WINGO. Will it stop the slaughter of them and the bringing of them into the District? This bill provides only against the selling. It does not prohibit the killing, the use of them, or giving them away.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. There is another law, I will say to the gentleman, that prohibits the killing of them in the District during certain seasons of the year.

Mr. WINGO. I do not suppose they will kill wild ducks in the parks of Washington. What is the practical benefit of the gentleman's bill except to restrict the use of this game to persons who will still be able to get them other than at the open markets? The man who has to depend on the ordinary market will not get them. It occurs to me that this will simply prohibit the selling of them, but it will not prohibit me, if I want a wild duck, from going out and getting it. I can get it very easily.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. If you can go to some place where you can shoot a wild duck legally you can bring it into the District.

Mr. WINGO. You can shoot them, but you can not sell them. But you can shoot them elsewhere.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Most of the States—including my own State, for instance—permit the killing of a certain number of ducks, and the person killing them, who has a State license, can ship them to his home.

Mr. WINGO. It is my idea that there is a limitation in some of these States in reference to the seasons. Then in other States there is a closed season, except to a person going out and killing a certain number. Certain States restrict them to the man killing them, but he can give them to his friends. By unlawful means they can get here in that way. If a man wants a wild duck for dinner he will have no trouble in getting it.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I do not know how I would get it unless I went out to my own State, or to some other State, and got a license and killed it myself.

Mr. WINGO. How do they do it now?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. They go out into Maryland and over into Virginia and kill them illegally in the closed season, and bring them in here and sell them. Nobody knows where they come from. Most of the pothunters who send this game here are fellows of inferior class who have no particular abiding place, and many of them are foreigners. I have seen in the markets bunches of quail as big around as a half bushel measure.

Mr. WINGO. You say they kill them now in violation of State laws. Now, you will simply prohibit it in the District of Columbia. But when a man wants game he can get it.

Mr. CARY. We found in Wisconsin that there was only one way to prevent the sale of them. If there is a wild duck on the hotel dinner table the proprietor of that hotel is brought into court. I think the fine is $100. If they can find the man who sold it to him I think he would be fined $200. In that way we prevent the slaughter of ducks.

Mr. WINGO. I suspect that men do get ducks on the dinner table in Wisconsin. They get them as "hens." There is one State where they serve deer as "veal." I know of one State where, in violation of the law, deer is served as "veal."

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Let me suggest to the gentleman that if you prevent the market man from buying this stuff and selling it, and take away the profit part of it, it will practically eliminate this business.

Mr. WINGO. My original intention in rising was to find wherein this was a war measure.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. It is not a war measure. I did not say it was a war measure, and it could not be so considered unless it was considered an agricultural proposition in the nature of a conservation measure.

Mr. WINGO. Here is the embarrassing situation with respect to bills like this: Many Members of Congress, like myself, have taken Congress at its word and have told their constituents that bills other than war measures would not be considered. Most of the committees now are refusing to consider bills that are not war measures. Now, to-day we have had under consideration a corn doctor bill, and now this bill is brought up in violation of the rule that only war bills shall be reported.

Mr. MADDEN. The answer to that is that this is purely municipal legislation.

Mr. WINGO. I realize that we are sitting as a city council when we consider this and other District of Columbia bills.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I have an amendment that I want to offer.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York has control of the time.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman from New York [Mr. GOULD] has control of the time.

Mr. GOULD. Mr. Speaker, there is one point that I think has not been made quite clear. That is that, according to my understanding of this legislation, an individual is not prevented from going out and killing game birds for his own consumption. That, I think, will answer the point raised by the gentleman from Arkansas.

I now move the previous question on the bill and all amendments to the final passage.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment, and if the gentleman insists on his motion for the previous question I shall make the point that there is no quorum present.

Mr. GOULD. I withdraw my motion for the previous question to allow the gentleman to offer his amendment.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maryland offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report:

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LINTHICUM: Page 2, line 6, after the words "black birds," strike out the period and add "and robins."

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to take up the time of the House, but from my own personal experience I know that the robin is one of the birds that is killed by boys and sold more frequently perhaps than almost any of the others. I think of all the birds we ought to protect, certainly the robin is among the most worthy of protection. So I have offered this amendment.

Mr. GOULD. I accept the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. GOULD, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills:

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 49 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, May 16, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, May 16, 1918.

Rev. J. L. Kibler, of the city of Washington, offered the following prayer:

We thank Thee, O God, for the opportunities of this, another day. Help us to perform our tasks in Thy fear and favor, and as we consider our needs and seek to defend our honor and independence, help us to remember that only the law of the Lord is perfect; that only the statutes of the Lord are right; and that only in the execution of Thy plans are we safe. Help us, therefore, O God, to abide under the shadow of the Almighty and to seek the Divine program in all the unfolding of our national life and in all our dealings with other nations. O God, save our honor and our country and our men, and bring speedy victory to our cause. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

COMMERCIAL BRIBERY (H. DOC. NO. 1107).

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Federal Trade Commission, transmitting, pursuant to law, a special report dealing with the subject of commercial bribery. The communication and accompanying paper will be inserted in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The communication is as follows:

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION,
Washington, May 15, 1918.

To the SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES.

SIR: Pursuant to paragraph (f) of section 6 of the act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, creating the Federal Trade Commission, there is transmitted herewith to Congress a special report dealing with the subject of commercial bribery.

Respectfully,

WILLIAM B. COLVER, Chairman.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION,
Washington.

To the Congress of the United States:

Pursuant to the provisions of paragraph (f), section 6, of the Federal Trade Commission act, the Federal Trade Commission submits the following to Congress for its consideration:

The commission has made considerable investigation of bribery of employees of customers as a method of securing trade.

The commission has found that commercial bribery of employees is a prevalent and common practice in many industries. These bribes take the form of commissions for alleged services, of money and gratuities, and entertainments of various sorts, and of loans—all intended to influence such employees in the choice of materials.

It is evident that this inexcusable added cost is finally passed on to the consumer.

Bribery is criminal per se. The Federal Trade Commission has no criminal jurisdiction. It treats the practice as an unfair method of competition. In dealing with commercial bribery as an unfair method of competition the commission is entirely limited to dealing with one side, to wit, the giving side, and has no power to reach the receiver, who is also guilty.

The practice is one which has been condemned alike by business men, legislatures, and courts, including among the business men those who have finally resorted to it in self-defense in competing with less scrupulous rivals or in selling to concerns whose employees have extorted commissions under threats to destroy or disapprove goods submitted to them for test.

How prevalent the practice is and how great the need of legislation seems to be is illustrated by the statement of one man of prominence in an industry who welcomed the proceedings of the commission destined to destroy the practice with this statement:

> From an experience of 30 years in the industry I don't believe that there is a single house in it that has not had to pay bribes to hold old business or to obtain new business. Bribery is inherently dishonest and tends to dishonesty and is unfair to competitors and customers, and I don't believe it ever will be stopped until made a crime by the United States Government.

How thoroughly insidious this practice has become may be illustrated by two experiences of representatives of the commission. In one case an employee frankly stated that he was "entitled to 10 per cent, and anyone who demands more is a grafter." Another was so fully imbued with the justice of his claim that he desired the representative of the commission to assist him in enforcing the collection of an unpaid so-called "commission."

Corrupt employees having the power to spoil and disapprove materials have been able to bid one salesman against another until in many cases they have extorted secret commissions, so called, as large as 20 per cent of the value of the goods sold.

Fourteen States have statutes striking at the practice, and yet it tends to grow. When competition crosses State lines State statutes with respect to trade practices are not actively enforced.

Justice Lurton, when on the Circuit Court of Appeals, aptly referred to the conflict created by this practice between duty and interest as "utterly vicious, unspeakably pernicious, and an unmixed evil." Lord Russell of Killowen, who was largely responsible for the passage of English legislation prohibiting this practice, expressed the opinion that "these corrupt bargains were malignant cankers," and that "it was a system dishonest to the fair trader" and "dishonest to the fair employer."

The commission feels that the stamping out of commercial bribery is one necessary step to the preservation of free, open, and fair competition, and to that end respectfully urges that new legislation should prohibit not only the giving and offering, but the acceptance and solicitation of any gift or other consideration by an employee as an inducement or reward for doing any act in relation to his employer's affairs or business, or for showing or forbearing to show favor or disfavor to any person in relation to his principal's or employer's affairs or business.

In order to prevent a resort to a common method of corruption, it is recommended that the law should also prohibit the giving of any such gifts or other considerations to members of the agent's or employee's family, or to any other person for his use or benefit, direct or indirect.

The facts disclosed by the commission's investigation lead to the conclusion that present laws are not fully effective. While the practice is clearly per se an unfair method of competition, and while the commission is acting and proposes to continue to act under the Federal Trade Commission act as to cases brought to its attention, yet, because of the secret nature of the conspiracies which are for the mutual advantage of all the parties engaging in it, it is believed that a strong Federal enactment against the practice, striking at each person participating, both givers and recipients, coupled perhaps with immunity to the first informant, may aid greatly in stamping out the vicious practice.

For the reasons stated and others the need for action by Congress seems apparent. It seems also that Congress has sufficient power to strike at the entire practice, inasmuch as Congress has power not only to prohibit such transactions in interstate commerce but, under the Minnesota rate and Shreveport cases, has power to remove any obstruction which may prevent or hamper shipments in interstate commerce. To illustrate, if a company doing business solely within one State resorts through its agents to this vicious method of competition, it will surely hamper, if not make it impossible, for a manufacturer of another State seeking to compete honestly to make any sales in such State except by resorting to like vicious and unfair practices. Congress undoubtedly has the power to remove such obstruction from the path of the interstate competitor.

It is useless to discuss the origin of the practice. It is sufficient to know that it exists generally and appears to be spreading. The mere suggestion shows that it must engulf even those honestly inclined if they desire to maintain their commercial life in any industry where such practices prevail. It should also be noted that the practice appears to have been most general on the part of concerns in introducing the goods and wares of German firms. Among such concerns and their salesmen the evidence is that the practice is recognized as a legitimate method of competition.

The commission, therefore, respectfully recommends that Congress consider the enactment in the public interest as an aid to the preservation of fair and free competition, a sufficient law striking at the unjustifiable and vicious practices of commercial bribery; and that such law be so comprehensive as to strike at each person participating in any such transactions.

Respectfully submitted.

WILLIAM B. COLVER,
JOHN FRANKLIN FORT,
VICTOR MURDOCK,
Commissioners.

USE OF WAR FILMS.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I send to the desk a telegram which I yesterday received from the governor of Michigan, which I desire to have read.

There being no objection, the telegram was read, as follows:

LANSING, MICH., May 14, 1918.

Senator CHARLES E. TOWNSEND,
Washington, D. C.:

In January Division of Films Committee on Public Information made an agreement with Michigan War Preparedness Board granting rights for all official war moving pictures for this State to that board. In violation of this agreement, the division is now preparing for an exhibition of films in Detroit next week and, as we understand, expects to route them through the State through film agencies. We are now showing reels the Committee on Public Information sold us under agreement throughout the State, and have booked their appearance for the entire State. California, we understand, is in same boat, and we hear Representatives of that State in Congress will to-day publicly take the committee to task for their action. Will you please see that Michigan's rights are protected and that Congress is told the situation in this State? The original idea of the pictures was a propaganda scheme. As this new plan violating our agreement appears it is a commercial proposition fostered by the moving-picture agencies in New York. Proceeds of our exhibitions go to fund for relief of dependents of Michigan soldiers and sailors. Detroit showing is announced as an even split with the theater owner, the balance going somewhere in Washington, but not for any announced charitable object.

MICHIGAN WAR PREPAREDNESS BOARD,
ALBERT E. SLEEPER,
Governor and Chairman.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, upon receipt of that telegram yesterday I thought it wise to call the attention of the Bureau of Information to it before I brought it to the Senate. I was unable to get into communication with the Chief of the Division of Films or with his assistant. I tried again to-day. I found that these officials were out of the city, or at least out of the office, and were reported by a clerk as being probably out of the city for the day. I was unable to obtain any specific information, as the young man in charge of the office thought that he ought not to express an opinion relative to the matter.

I did learn, however, that these films are certain war films which the war board of Michigan had purchased from the Information Bureau to be exhibited in the interest of patriotism, but that said bureau had nevertheless entered into an arrangement with certain theater companies in Michigan to exhibit these war films in Detroit and elsewhere in the State, and that the proceeds are to be divided equally between these theater companies and the Bureau of Information.

To what purpose the Bureau of Information is to devote its share of this fund I was unable to learn. I have written to the chief of the bureau and have sent him a copy of this telegram, with a request that he answer the statements made by our governor, who is the chairman of the war preparedness board. When I receive that answer I shall present it also to the Senate.

I am impressed with what the governor has said and believe that something has been done and is being done that is contrary to an agreement that has been made between the Bureau of Information and the Michigan war board. It can not be successfully claimed that the Michigan war board has been derelict in any duty that has been assigned to it. It has been at the very front in every undertaking for the proper preparation for war. It has exceeded every demand made upon it. Its plans are complete for spreading the information carried by these films. If it is true that the Bureau of Information, after having made a disposition of these films to the Michigan board, is now exhibiting them on a percentage basis, a part of the proceeds to go to a privileged theater company and another portion is to be turned over to the Information Bureau, it will be interesting to know what is to be done with this money paid to the bureau, and by what right it makes contracts, and why it breaks them after they are made. I want to know whether a report is to be made to Congress of these transactions. I trust it will not be considered a case of lese majeste if I inquire as to what is done with funds which are being secured by a Government agency without any direction of law. Possibly there is a proper explanation of this situation; and if so, I want to have it.

I shall, as I said, again bring this matter to the Senate when I receive an answer from the Bureau of Information.

AIRCRAFT PRODUCTION.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate whether that committee is going to report to-day the resolution which was introduced some days ago by me and which was referred to that committee?

Mr. THOMPSON. The committee has acted on the resolution and has directed a report to be made by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] who has the resolution.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. So the committee is ready to report?

Mr. THOMPSON. It will when that Senator is here.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That is all right. I merely wanted to know the status of it.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. NEW:

A bill (S. 4544) to amend an act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WALSH:

A bill (S. 4545) granting a pension to Charles Weitfle (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. JONES of Washington:

A bill (S. 4546) granting an increase of pension to Samuel Renshaw, alias Charles Dean (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 4547) granting an increase of pension to Halvor Anderson (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. TRAMMELL:

A bill (S. 4548) to protect the lives and health and morals of women and minor workers in the District of Columbia, and to establish a minimum-wage board, and define its powers and duties, and to provide for the fixing of minimum wages for such workers, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. BORAH:

A bill (S. 4549) granting an increase of pension to Charles H. Jewett (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CALDER:

A bill (S. 4550) for the relief of the heirs of Benjamin S. Roberts; to the Committee on Claims.

AMENDMENT TO NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CUMMINS submitted an amendment providing that the dental officers authorized for service in the Naval Reserve Force and in the Naval Dental Corps shall be entitled to equal grades of rank with the dental officers authorized for service in the respective corresponding branches of the Army, and so forth, intended to be proposed by him to the Naval appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

STATUE OF FREDERICK THE GREAT.

Mr. GALLINGER. I offer the following resolution, for which I ask immediate consideration.

The resolution (S. Res. 245) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs is hereby directed to inquire into and report on the advisability of melting the statue of Frederick the Great, recently removed from the grounds of the War College, and converting the metal into munitions of war.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution. Is there objection?

Mr. KING. I ask that it may go over.

Mr. BORAH. May I ask to have the resolution again read?

The resolution was again read.

Mr. BORAH. I suppose the Military Affairs Committee can advise us——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the resolution?

Mr. KING. I objected to its consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

Mr. GALLINGER. Of course, it will go over under the rule. I shall ask that it be considered to-morrow.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. May I suggest to the Senator from New Hampshire that there is no lack of precedent in reference to that proposition? The statue of George III was melted and made into bullets.

Mr. GALLINGER. I had that in view when I wrote the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie over and be printed.

CALLING OF THE ROLL.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. KING. I wish to announce that the Senator from Nevada [Mr. HENDERSON] is detained on official business.

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM], the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], and the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] are detained on business of the Senate. I desire also to announce that the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] is absent on account of illness.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-two Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

ARTICLE BY MAYO DUDLEY.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I submit a very interesting article entitled "The War Told in Medals," by Mayo Dudley. It was published in the Munsey Magazine for April, 1917. I regard it as of very great historic value. I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Printing with a view of having it published as a public document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be so referred.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 12083. An act to prohibit the killing, trapping, netting, ensnaring, hunting, having in possession, and sale of certain wild birds in the District of Columbia was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

PODIATRY IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NEW in the chair) laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2123) to regulate the practice of podiatry in the District of Columbia, which were, on page 1, lines 6 and 7, to strike out "health officer" and insert "Health Officer"; on page 1, lines 7 and 8, to strike out "health officer" and insert "Health Officer"; and on page 2, line 2, after "medical," strike out the comma.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. The only difference between the bill as amended by the House and the bill as passed by the Senate is the House has made some of the letters capital letters instead of otherwise. I move that the amendments of the House of Representatives be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to.

ALLEY HOUSES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

H. R. 11628. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to provide, in the interest of public health, comfort, morals, and safety, for the discontinuance of the use as dwellings of buildings situated in the alleys of the District of Columbia," approved September 25, 1914, was read twice by its title.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, that is identical with the bill passed by the Senate on April 30, 1918. It seems that, instead of accepting the Senate bill, the House has passed a bill which is identical with the bill passed by the Senate. I have read it carefully. It relates to alley houses in the District of Columbia. I ask the Senate to accept and pass the bill from the House.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, does the Senator know why action was not taken on the Senate bill?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I can not state as to that. The House bill was introduced by Mr. JOHNSON and is in every particular exactly like the bill passed by the Senate on April 30. I presume that he preferred to have the House bill passed.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The bill that passed the Senate was not even reported by the committee in the House?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. That I do not know; but the House bill, as I have said—and I have had it gone through—is precisely the same as the bill passed by the Senate. So far as I am concerned, I am inclined to accept the House bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The only difference between the two bills, then, I take it, is that one has a House number and the other a Senate number.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. The bill which has been laid before the Senate has a House number, having been introduced by one of the Members of the other House.

Mr. JONES of Washington. In the interest of having legislation along the line proposed in the measure, which seems to be very desirable, I will not object to the request of the Senator from Maryland.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

POWER AND RESOURCES OF THE COUNTRY.

Mr. CUMMINS. I desire to call up the resolution which I offered yesterday.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution coming over from a preceding day.

The Secretary read Senate resolution 243, submitted yesterday by Mr. CUMMINS, as follows:

Whereas it is the settled conviction of the people of the United States that for their own safety and for the permanent peace of the world the military power of Germany must be completely overthrown and the criminal designs of her ruling classes finally destroyed; and

Whereas to assist most effectively in accomplishing these righteous purposes it is necessary to increase our Army, strengthen our Navy, and to direct intelligently all the energy and resources of the country; and

Whereas it has become the immediate and highest duty of the Nation not only to raise, equip, transport, and maintain a sufficient Army and construct and man an adequate Navy, but to furnish continuously an immense volume of supplies to our allies; and

Whereas the number of men who can be withdrawn from industrial pursuits and assigned to the war forces and the mobilization and organization of those who remain into efficient groups for the necessary production can be ascertained and effected only by a careful survey of the whole situation as it is now presented: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Commerce, the Secretary of Labor, and the Provost Marshal General be, and they are hereby, requested to confer together and report to the Senate as soon as practicable upon the following subjects of inquiry, to wit:

First. How many men can be withdrawn within the ensuing two years from the industrial or productive occupations for military service, leaving enough workers in the fields of necessary or essential production to supply: (a) All the requirements of our military forces, (b) all the necessities of our civil population, (c) all the imperative needs of our allies, and (d) the essential commerce of neutral and friendly countries.

Second. What occupations involving man power can be abandoned without serious detriment to the general welfare, and how can those now engaged in them be turned into necessary or useful production.

Third. How many men are there, fit for military service or for labor, not within draft age, who are now employed in hurtful, unnecessary, or nonuseful occupations, and what are these occupations.

Fourth. How many men are there, fit for military service or for labor, not within draft age, who do not work regularly in any occupation.

Fifth. What further legislation is desirable in order to utilize our maximum man power in the military service with the minimum disturbance in the field of necessary or useful production.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, it must be obvious to every thoughtful man that the time has come for a careful comprehensive, serious survey of the entire war situation as it now presents itself. Whatever may have been our former view with respect to a speedy termination of hostilities, it is now reasonably certain that we have before us a long and severe struggle, which, if it is brought to a successful end, as it must be, will demand our full strength of both men and material.

It is not enough to do no more than drive the Kaiser from power; it is not enough merely to send his brood of murderers into obscurity; it is not enough to take from his conspicuous butchers the weapons they are using in the deadly conflict. We must destroy forever the military menace of that nation and crush beyond resurrection the criminal designs and the cruel ambitions of the German people; designs and ambitions which, through 50 years of education and training, have resulted in a savage, brutal, and remorseless society—the implacable foe of Christian civilization, free institutions, and the peace of the world.

The undertaking which we have assumed has gradually developed into the most colossal task which has ever fallen upon mankind. The difficulties which attend our part in accomplishing the common object of the allied countries are tremendously magnified by one unchangeable fact—an ocean nearly 3,000 miles in width separates us from the battle fields of Europe—and the power we exert here must be extraordinary if we would strike with sufficient force in the fields of Belgium, France, and Italy.

If our problem consisted simply in raising fighting men it would be an easy one, for the patriotism, spirit, and grim determination of the people of this country to settle, once for all, the vital issue between Germany and the world would call to the ranks half the population of the Republic. There are, however, other things to be done not less important than our fighting forces. We must clothe, equip, and sustain the Army and the Navy. We must build ships, manufacture guns, cannon, and powder, and other infinite paraphernalia of war. We must transport both men and material through submarines and mines to a foreign shore. We must produce all that the Army and Navy demand for their efficiency, and all that is required for the life, health, and comfort of the men, women, and children who are not enrolled in the fighting organizations. Not only so, but we must produce enough to supply the imperative necessities of Great Britain, France, and Italy, and to continue our essential commerce with neutral and friendly nations.

It will not be disputed that to do this successfully and continuously all the energies of all the people must not only be called into action but they must be coordinated, correlated, and guided by wise, intelligent, farseeing statesmanship, both in legislation and in execution.

Patriotism we have. It is universal, enthusiastic, and enduring, but patriotism alone will not conduct us safely through the storm which is rocking the world to its very center. Patriotism will inspire and compel activity, but to it there must be added a mentality and prevision which can comprehend the questions with which we are wrestling and see the end from the beginning.

There are some truths which will not be disputed, but if we are conscious of them at all it is in a dim, vague, ineffective way. For instance, we will all agree that in this crisis every man in the United States who is capable of doing anything ought to be doing the thing which will most contribute to our strength in the war, and if he does not do that thing our hope of winning is to that extent impaired. Up to this time very little attention has been given to the imperious duty of turning idleness into work or of converting useless energy into useful effort.

Again, while all admit that there must be a safe and sane relation between the number of men who are withdrawn from industrial pursuits to enter the military forces and the men who are left to carry on the production absolutely necessary to sustain the fighting men and the civil population as well, hitherto we have not taken up the subject in any constructive form.

It is my opinion that before two years shall have passed if we do not call five millions of men into the military service we will have failed to do our part in the war and will not be able to win the kind of victory which will justify the indescribable losses we will suffer; but everybody understands that to take five millions of our men from industrial occupations in the way those already taken have been enlisted, or selected, would result in an immediate collapse of production and leave not only our Army without sustenance and equipment but the civilians of the United States, Great Britain, France, and Italy hopeless and helpless.

My proposition is that every able-bodied man in this country between the ages of 18 and 45—and I am not sure but that a few years ought to be added to the latter limit—must either work in a useful way or fight. This at least should be the policy until we can see clearly that there is a surplus of civil energy that can be permitted to go to waste in unnecessary labor or lie dormant in idleness.

I speak of these things in mere outline. They can be and they will be expanded into completeness in due time. My present purpose will be served if they are borne in mind to test the value of the further suggestions which I intend to submit.

Our Army must be very largely increased, and at the same time it is of vital importance that our naval and coast-defense program should not only be fully and quickly carried out but that it be at once greatly enlarged. It makes me shudder when I think of the partial suspension of work on warships and the almost total suspension of coast defenses because workmen and material are so much needed in other preparations. If by any chance—not probable, but possible—Germany should win in France, and America stood alone against this monster of the ages, our first and maybe our only protection from the hate and power of the enemy would be found in the strength of our Navy and the resistance of our fortifications.

At this time, however, I am considering principally the army of soldiers and the army of civilian laborers.

It is currently reported that there is to be a movement—a sort of counterpart of the Overman bill—insisting that the whole subject—that is, the increase of the Army, the manner in which it is to be increased, the adjustment of the civil population to production, and all that pertains to the problem—shall be turned over to the President to be disposed of in his discretion and at his pleasure. It is impossible for me to view any such proposal with favor. It arouses in my mind the gravest concern and forbodes irretrievable disaster. As Commander in Chief the President has nothing, should have nothing, to do with raising armies. The Constitution specifically confides this power and rests this duty in Congress. The President, as such, is simply the executor of the law that Congress enacts. It will be most unfortunate if we are led or coerced into a mistake in this regard.

I take no pleasure in either remembering or mentioning the costly, humiliating blunders which some of the executive departments of the Government have made since war was declared. I would much rather remember and mention the things which these departments have done well, and there are many of them. We can recover from these blunders if our allies can hold on; but we are face to face now with a situation in which a mistake will be fatal; and I for one am utterly unwilling to have it dealt with and its questions decided by one man, or a few men, in the secrecy and prejudice of a council of officers whose training and traditions may blind them to the most essential factors of the mighty problem.

The questions and policies involved must be considered in the open by men from every station in life. They must be illuminated by the widest observation and ripest experience. They must be debated in the hearing of the whole country by men who will view them from every standpoint to which the infinite variety of the human mind leads members of a legislative body. No one can, no one will, assert that with all the study, all the deliberation, all the care, all the publicity that the more than 500 Members of Congress can give the subject an error may not occur; but I do assert that legislation touching this matter is more certain to win the war than an Executive order.

What, then, is our duty? It is to put an army in the field that will sweep the German legions off the face of the earth, and to do it just as soon as human energy can create and sustain it.

We must give to the American people this rule of life until victory is assured: Work or fight; work for the war or fight in the war. There must be no idle men. There must be no men following hurtful or useless occupations. Production or employment that ministers only to pleasure or convenience must be abandoned until the ranks of the soldier and the producer of necessaries are full.

Thus, and thus alone, can we successfully meet the sword which the insane sacrilege of the German Empire has drawn against the world.

It must not be understood that I am advocating or that I favor drafting men for civil pursuits. The constitutionality of a measure of that kind may well be doubted, but entirely aside from the legal aspects of the matter it would be in the highest degree unwise and impractical. The object can be attained through voluntary selection, with the proper organization and leadership. The age of conscription for military service can be advanced to any point, and the idle man, or the man whose employment contributes nothing to the welfare of the Nation, can be denied the privilege of exemption, and a judicious classification will complete the plan. Under such a restriction every capable man would be either in the Army or Navy or working directly or indirectly for the Army or Navy. Every able-bodied citizen would be either fighting for humanity or working for humanity, and thus organized for efficiency we can perform the task to which we have set our hands, win the final victory, and establish a just and enduring peace.

It is for the Congress to do these things, and its judgment must not only be patriotic but must be an informed, intelligent judgment, based upon the facts as they exist, and can only be expressed after the maturest deliberation and the most exhaustive inquiry. It is to aid in our preparation for the discharge of this duty and for the exercise of this fundamental power that I have introduced the resolution now before the Senate.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. McCUMBER. I merely wish to ask the Senator a question, but I will wait until he is through, if he so desires.

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McCUMBER. I notice in the Senator's resolution that while he calls for information concerning very many vital and important topics, and in his argument he has stated what has been stated many times, that we ought to have not less than 5,000,000 fighting men on the battle front, yet nothing is said in his resolution with reference to information concerning the shipping that may be necessary to support those men or the amount of shipping tonnage that can be produced by any possibility in the United States during the two years. I hope the Senator, before the resolution is referred to the committee, will insert that subject among the many others to be investigated.

Mr. CUMMINS. I shall have no possible objection to the modification of the resolution in the way suggested by the Senator from North Dakota, but, in my opinion, it already clearly and inevitably includes the subject mentioned by the Senator. We can not get an army of 5,000,000 men, with the proper proportion of them in France, without adequate shipping facilities. Ships are as much a part of the military strength of the United States as the wheat that grows in North Dakota or the corn produced in Iowa.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I notice that the Senator's resolution places the burden of collecting the information that is called for by it upon certain Cabinet officers.

Mr. CUMMINS. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. I am not at all criticizing that part of it, but I have wondered how much thought the Senator had given to that part of the resolution.

The resolution calls for information that the country ought to possess and that Congress ought to have in order to legislate intelligently. It seems to me it is very exhaustive and statesmanlike, and it certainly would be wise, if we should have a survey of resources such as is called for in the resolution. I not only think it wise, but it seems to me the Senator is right when he says that it is necessary for safety's sake. But I have wondered if the power to gather this information, which, of course, will be useless unless it is carefully gathered and properly gathered, should not be delegated to some other source, perhaps some source provided for in the resolution. Does not the Senator think it would be well, at least, to give consideration to the thought that the resolution itself should designate and bring into being a commission of men who have peculiar knowledge along the lines of information called for by the resolution?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I have no disposition to close any field of information, and I do not want it to be assumed, because I have named certain officers of the Government in the resolution and asked from them the facts in their possession or which they may gather, that there ought not to be an inquiry made by other permanent or temporary officers of the Government or of Congress.

Mr. NORRIS. I hope the Senator will not get the idea that I am asking this question in a critical sense. It may be, upon discussion and debate, that I will conclude that the very persons named there would be the proper ones to give us this information, but at first blush it seems to me that that is a subject, at least, that ought to be given very careful consideration before the adoption of the resolution, as it occurs to me that the fact that these particular heads of departments are already overburdened with duties that will break down anyone if he attempts to give them personal attention would perhaps make it desirable that this information should be brought about by men who have nothing else to have charge of, so that they can give the matter their exclusive attention and all of their time.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I was about to state why, in my opinion, the men named in the resolution ought to be called to the aid of Congress at this time, but I can easily see that Congress may desire to conduct an investigation in another way. It will not be bound by the information given by those who are named in the resolution. It will consider and weigh the facts, and the facts are already collected. I am not asking these men to ascertain these things from original sources. That would be the work of years. The facts which are pertinent and relevant to the questions I have been discussing are already gathered in various forms, but they have not been brought together so as to bear directly upon the immediate point I have in mind.

I have asked that the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Commerce, the Secretary of Labor, and the Provost Marshal General shall confer together and make a report to Congress upon this subject. What Congress will do with that report, how far it will accept it, how far it will find the facts which may be given to us sustained, I do not know and do not anticipate; but the men whom I have just suggested are the men who are particularly concerned in the subject covered by the resolution. The Secretary of War must necessarily have given much thought to the available supply of men for the Army. The Secretary of the Navy must likewise have considered the men who can be secured for the Navy. The Secretary of Agriculture must have been constantly engaged in surveying the field of agricultural production and the number and kind of men who are required to till the soil and produce the things that are necessary for the sustenance of both our military forces and our civil population. The Secretary of Commerce, in a broad way, is constantly occupied in the study of manufactures, of production of an industrial character. The Secretary of Labor has supervision over that most vital and important field of human effort; and Gen. Crowder, the Provost Marshal General, has, I am sure, in the administration of the draft law which we have already passed, gone far into the subject which I propose.

Moreover, these men are the immediate advisers of the President. They are the men to whom he would turn, in all probability, for information upon the matter and for advice with regard to the course that he should pursue. It has therefore seemed to me that they were in every way fitted and naturally selected to give Congress part, at least, of the information that is required.

I have no possible objection to extending the inquiry and selecting other men to consider the same subject, and let them examine it from their standpoint and give us the benefit of their views and their judgment.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, my question was asked, as I said before, not in any critical sense, but more to bring out the reasons that the Senator had in mind, and I do not disagree with him in what he says about the knowledge that these various officials possess. I do think, however, that there ought not to be two investigations along this line. We ought to have one, and it ought to come from some source that would take with it the confidence not only of the Congress but of the country, so that when the information was collated and laid before Congress every individual Member would be safe in following it and in acting on it.

The Senator knows that it is human nature—we always find it in our dealings with the various departments—that the head of every department and the head of every bureau has, and probably properly so, a pride in his particular branch and in his particular line; and when they are asking for legislation it is necessary a great many times to curtail their requests, and so forth, because they are moved by an enthusiasm that would come, perhaps, to anyone who did not look beyond the immediate circle of his own particular power and influence. Now, any other commission that is going to make this investigation would, of course, obtain from these departments all the information that they possess, but it occurred to me that another commission would be acting rather in a judicial capacity, if I might use that term, in passing on the recommendations and the requests that would come from these various heads of departments, so that they would be more unbiased and unprejudiced in collating this information and in getting it in a state that in the end would be probably more reliable.

Mr. CUMMINS. May I ask the Senator from Nebraska whether he does not feel that the facts collected by these men would be very advantageous and very helpful to Congress?

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, yes; certainly. I agree with the Senator fully. I do not know that I disagree with him in any respect, so far as that is concerned.

Mr. CUMMINS. I recognize the force of the suggestion of the Senator from Nebraska, and I have no doubt that through the Military Affairs Committee or some other committee of Congress, when we come to legislate upon the subject, we will carry on a further and independent investigation. But while I have not agreed with everything that has been done by the administration, I have the very highest regard for the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretaries of Agriculture and of Commerce and of Labor, and I have particular confidence in the intelligent grasp of the Provost Marshal General, and I should like, as we approach this difficult task, to know the result of their inquiries and the result of their thought. I shall join at any time heartily in any proposal either to create a committee of the Senate or to charge an existing committee of the Senate with the duty of expanding and enlarging the investigation so that we may be in the possession of every important, every material, fact when we come to do what we must do. We must do it not only intelligently but promptly. We are every day losing the most valuable time, and I think neglecting the most obvious opportunity, in not carrying on our preparations for this war in a way commensurate with the magnitude of the task as it looms before us, and I hope that we will lose no further time in entering upon a consideration of the entire situation.

I had not expected that this resolution would be referred to a committee. It seems to me that its purpose is so clear and, as I have thought, its wisdom so obvious, that it might be adopted without reference to a committee, and in that hope I now submit it to the Senate.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I think the information which the Senator seeks to obtain would be exceedingly valuable. I should be very glad if we could get that information; but in order that it may be of value, it ought to be reasonably trustworthy information.

The scope of the resolution is very broad. It takes in all the military and naval activities of the Government and its requirements. It takes in all the activities of the civil population, the industries of the country and their requirements, both as to man power and as to output.

It not only in express terms requires the most sweeping investigation in order to get the information, but I understand from the Senator there is more than the words themselves import expected to be done under the resolution. That is to say, he expects that inquiries will be made into all things that may be embraced by implication in the general terms of his resolution. He does not specify any investigation as to shipping and our requirements in that regard, but he advises the Senator from North Dakota that the language is sufficiently broad to embrace an investigation into those requirements. If it is sufficiently broad to embrace this by implication, it is broad enough to embrace all the activities of the Government and the people.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think the Senator from North Carolina misapprehends what I said, and I think he misconstrues the scope of the resolution. It does not suggest an inquiry as to what has been done in building ships, or whether it has been done well or badly.

Mr. SIMMONS. I did not say that.

Mr. CUMMINS. It does suggest, however, the thought that we must have enough men to build the ships necessary to carry our Army to France and to supply it after the Army is there. I do not think that can be a subject of very much criticism.

Mr. SIMMONS. It necessarily involves an inquiry as to the number of men who are needed to work upon the construction of ships. It would also require an inquiry as to the number of ships that we now need and the number of ships that in all probability we shall need as the war progresses. I can not conceive of a broader and more sweeping investigation than the resolution proposes. The information that you will get through it will be valuable, as I said before; but in order that it may be worth anything as a basis of legislation it ought to be reasonably accurate information.

Mr. President, I undertake to say that in order to get this information in a form that will be of service to us, in a form in which we could reasonably act upon it as the basis of legislation, there ought to be more than a preliminary casual investigation, such as the Senator implied in his remarks could be made by the heads of departments based upon certain information that they now have.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McCUMBER. I wish to suggest to the Senator from North Carolina, in line with what he is saying, that there is nothing in the first, second, third, or fourth propositions that included anything other than the man power of the country, where it is, and how much can be obtained, and how utilized.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; and whether it is suitable for military service or suitable for domestic purposes, for employment in the industries of this country. It proposes to segregate the entire population of the United States.

Mr. McCUMBER. I wish to say if you go then to the fifth proposition, "what further legislation is desirable in order to utilize our maximum man power in the military service with the minimum disturbance in the field of necessary or useful production," if you include in that the question of what ships are necessary, how many we can build in a year, what tonnage is necessary, how much tonnage we can construct in a year, then, as the Senator has suggested, it will include everything within the range of human thought that pertains to the war.

Mr. SIMMONS. Exactly; there is nothing that connects itself with the war that is not embraced in the broad terms of the resolution if the construction placed upon it by its author is correct, and I am inclined to think that it is correct.

Mr. President, to ask the heads of these departments, upon the meager information they have touching certain phases of this investigation, to report to this body with a view of making the facts found in the report the basis of our future legislation, to my mind, would be a very hazardous and uncertain proceeding. In the first place, the heads of these great departments, as the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] has very properly said, have already devolved upon them very large and onerous duties. They have not very much time to give to matters of this sort. If we are going to have an investigation of this specific character, of this all-embracing import, I think we ought to have a commission composed of men of special qualifications, who can give their entire time to it, and who can obtain sufficient information in order to make their report of some value to Congress.

I do not wish to antagonize the resolution of the Senator from Iowa. I recognize that what he is seeking to accomplish is a good purpose. I think we need the very information that he is trying to elicit, but I suggest to the Senator that he let the resolution go to the Committee on Military Affairs and let them frame a resolution based upon the general idea here which will meet the situation better than I think this resolution meets it.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I, of course, thought that the resolution would meet persistent opposition from two sources. I anticipated that, and I am not at all disappointed or surprised in the view that has been taken. I intend to insist upon the information which I have indicated from these heads of department. I know, and the Senator from North Carolina knows, that they can give us this information, or whatever information they have or may be able to collect, within a very short time, for he knows, as we all know, that the subject has been under consideration directly or indirectly by all of them, and necessarily so.

But I realize that very shortly there will come in all probability before Congress a demand that we pass legislation transferring the general authority to raise armies to the President, and it will then be said that there is immediate necessity for action, and that we have no time to inquire, consider, investigate, or deliberate, and I have felt before and I know I shall feel then the pressure of that demand.

Nevertheless, I know that when there is real opposition to a proposal and it is suggested that it ought to be considered by a committee, it is impossible to resist the suggestion. I do not intend to resist this one, and if the Senator from North Carolina feels that it ought to be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs I shall not object.

Mr. SIMMONS. I will state very frankly to the Senator my idea with reference to such a body. Instead of constituting the heads of these departments as the investigating force I would prefer myself, if no better arrangement can be made, to provide that the heads of these various departments should appoint some representative of the department upon a commission and select the most competent man in the department to deal with it.

I think of all the departments of the Government that ought to be represented upon this board is the Treasury Department. That has dealt with the financial situation and it has dealt very largely with the situation with respect to our civil population and the industries of the country. It is in closer touch with the industries of the country than any other department of the Government.

Mr. CUMMINS. Inasmuch as the matter is to go to the committee it is not necessary for me to reply to the Senator from North Carolina. I shall be glad to do so at another time. I understand the Senator from North Carolina has moved that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. STERLING. Before the reference is made I should like to submit an amendment to the resolution to go to the committee with it.

Mr. CUMMINS. Has the order of reference been made?

Mr. SIMMONS. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. STERLING. Will the Senator permit the amendment which I have just offered to be read so that it may go with the resolution?

Mr. SIMMONS. Certainly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRANCE in the chair). Without objection, the amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, after line 18, insert:

Third. To what extent may men, fit for military service, be released from industrial occupations or employment in the Government civil service by the use or employment of the voluntary services of women in such occupations or employment?

Mr. STERLING. The amendment should follow the second paragraph on page 2, after line 18.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa a question. Is it the purpose of the Senator in this resolution to find out what information is on hand now in these departments as to the different matters inquired about, or is it the purpose to find out what the condition is in the country? If it is the latter purpose, it will take a whole year or more to do it, in my judgment, and two or three thousand men.

Mr. CUMMINS. If the resolution is adopted, these officers of the Government must give it a fair and reasonable construction. Of course, it is not intended that they shall enter upon an original investigation and take a new census of the United States. I have no such thought in my mind. The material facts are open to every man who has a mind for reasonable study and will diligently exert himself, but I think we ought to have a report from the administration, especially the administration which is concerned in these matters, immediately.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the resolution of the Senator from Iowa be referred, together with the amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota, to the Committee on Military Affairs? If there is no objection, it will be so ordered. The Chair hears none.

AIRCRAFT PRODUCTION.

Mr. McKELLAR. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I report Senate resolution 241 with certain amendments, and I submit a report (No. 442) thereon.

Mr. THOMPSON. On the part of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES] and myself, I desire to file a written minority report. I would like to have 24 hours' time in which to file it, so that it may be filed in the morning hour to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. There is no objection whatever to the filing of a minority report, but the resolution will come up to-morrow morning for discussion, and I suppose, of course, the Senator from Kansas will have his minority report ready by that time and it will not delay the consideration of the resolution to-morrow.

Mr. THOMPSON. I can not say as to when the resolution will be taken up for consideration, but I will file it in the morning hour to-morrow. I presume there will be no objection to that.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. None whatever, provided it does not interfere with the consideration of the resolution to-morrow.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator from Kansas does not file his minority report until to-morrow morning, when the Senate meets, Senators will have no opportunity to see and read that report and study it before we have to act upon the resolution, provided the resolution is taken up to-morrow.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator prepares his minority report this afternoon, he can file it at any time before adjournment to-day, or he can submit it to-morrow morning.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is the only point I was making. I think the Senator ought to file it some time this afternoon, so that it can be printed and upon the desks of Senators to-morrow.

Mr. THOMPSON. I am perfectly willing to do that if I complete it and secure a consultation with my colleague [Mr. JONES], who will join with me in the report.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, I do not think a conflagration is going to take place unless we go at a double-quick step to take up this resolution. I want to see both these reports and read them, and I want ample time for that purpose.

Indeed, I had hoped that the steps taken by the President in appointing one of the best lawyers in the Department of Justice and associating with him former Justice Hughes would satisfy every Senator that the Government proposes to make a thorough investigation of this matter. Aside from that, all I desire is ample time to see both these reports before the Senate acts on them.

Mr. LEWIS. The statement of the Senator from Georgia, a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, that these reports would come up in the morning left me with the impression that there was evidently some understanding either from the majority of the committee or from some source. As far as I am concerned, I want to have it understood that I do not think the mere filing of these reports, putting them on the desk so that they may be called to-morrow under the rule, establishes as a fact that they shall come up to-morrow. There are certain Senators absent.

Mr. MARTIN. The resolution goes to the calendar.

Mr. LEWIS. I hope there will be no understanding generally that merely because the report is filed by general consent there is a general consent to take it up. For myself I want to see the report come up only after full information concerning it and notice to all Senators interested.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I simply want to say to the Senator from Illinois that under the rule, if there is a request to take it up, it comes up to-morrow. Then, of course, it can be discussed until 2 o'clock, when, if there is unfinished business before the Senate, it automatically goes to the calendar, and it could not be considered longer than that hour, if objection is made, unless the Senate should determine to proceed with it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not understand that the resolution must necessarily come up to-morrow.

Mr. MARTIN. It goes to the calendar, of course.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has been reported and goes to the calendar.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The resolution does not go to the calendar. It goes over until to-morrow under the Senate rule.

Mr. LODGE. It is a Senate resolution, and does not go to the calendar until——

Mr. SMITH OF GEORGIA. It can be called up for consideration to-morrow. Of course, it is for the Senate then to determine whether it will consider it to-morrow or not. I wish to disclaim any suggestion of any arrangement that it should come up to-morrow. I have not conferred with anyone about the time it would be considered. I was only aware of the fact that under the rule a report of this character can be called up the day after it is made, and I suggested to the Senator from Kansas that such a course might take place to-morrow, and therefore it would be desirable that his report should be in.

Mr. McKELLAR. I desire to say that having reported the resolution every Senator who desires to be heard upon it will have the right to discuss it as fully and freely as he desires, so far as I can be of help in bringing about that result. I have no desire or arrangement of any kind with the committee or anybody else that I know of, and a full discussion of it is desired most earnestly by all members of the committee, certainly by me if I have anything to do or anything to say about it, and I think I have in the matter of calling it up. Of course, it is perfectly right that members of the committee should have the right to file a minority report, and it ought to be filed, and it will be filed this afternoon so that everybody can see just what questions are raised. For the life of me, I can not see any objection to the resolution amended, as it is amended so as to meet any and every objection that has been raised before our committee. Every objection that has been raised to it before the committee has been eliminated by amendment.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. THOMPSON. It will be my endeavor in the minority report to set out a few objections to the resolution, and it was my understanding with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], who is the author of the resolution, that I might have until to-morrow to file my report, as I expect to do to-morrow morning.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The minority members of the committee, as a matter of right, are entitled to reasonable time in which to file the views of the minority. I shall certainly make no question about it. What I did hope might be done with it, however, if the Senator from Illinois will excuse me for a moment, was that the resolution might lie on the table and be called up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that this resolution as reported by the committee goes to the calendar.

Mr. LODGE and Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Oh, no!

Mr. LODGE. Is not this a Senate resolution?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is a Senate resolution.

Mr. SMOOT. When a Senate resolution is reported from a committee and unanimous consent is asked for its consideration, it can not be considered under one objection. Then it goes over for one day. That is the case as to this resolution—it has gone over for one day.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if I may be allowed, I wish to say that a Senate resolution introduced in the Senate can go over one day under objection. Then it comes up automatically. If not then dealt with by the Senate, it goes to the calendar; but this resolution has taken another stage. It has gone to a committee, and is here on the report of a committee. As suggested, it can go to the calendar or, by request, can lie upon the table.

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to ask the Senator from Massachusetts, if he will tolerate me, Does the resolution not appear as a mere report from a standing committee, and does it not in the ordinary course of things go to the calendar, as does any other report from any other standing committee?

Mr. LODGE. That is precisely what I tried to say.

Mr. LEWIS. Then, my only interest in the matter is this: If the Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON] and his collaborator, the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES], have not had time to finish the report, the Senator from New Mexico not being present because of other engagements, I felt that we ought not to hasten the Senator from Kansas or the minority of the committee merely because of the desire on the part of any Senator to take the matter up to-morrow; but if the Senator from Kansas finds that sufficient time is not afforded between now and then, he may manifest that to the Senate, so that there may be no misunderstanding, and the minority report of the committee may be filed after full and proper time. If, however, he states that as the exact time he would need, let that be understood. I do not want him rushed, and I do not want this hearing rushed, speaking for myself.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. LEWIS. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. I was only going to say that it is usual, when a Senator makes a report and asks that it lie upon the table, to grant the request. I have never known that abused. The Senator then can subsequently call up the resolution. The only difference in sending it to the calendar is that it must be taken up on motion. It does not stop it or kill it to send it to the calendar, or it does not smother it. Nobody can possibly desire to prevent ample time within which to make a minority report. We recognize the intellectual difficulties of drawing up a minority report, and we desire to give the Senator from Kansas ample time to do anything he wishes.

Mr. LEWIS. I inquire of the Senator from Kansas what time he desires?

Mr. THOMPSON. I wish to say to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] that in considering this resolution there is no difficulty whatever in drawing a minority report. I have been unable to consult finally with my colleague, the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES], and I simply want it clearly understood as to whether or not I can file the report during the morning hour to-morrow.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, as a member of the committee, I desire to say that no haste shall be made in the beginning of the consideration of this resolution so far as I am concerned and as to the chairman of the committee filing his minority report. What I suggested in the first place was that he should file the report this afternoon, so that it would be upon the desks of Senators to-morrow. I do not think that was an usreasonable request. Of course, if the Senator from Kansas has not completed the report and can not complete it to-day, he may file it to-morrow during the morning hour or at any other time during the day.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, I wish to say that it is my intention to file the report during the morning hour to-morrow, or certainly at some time to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has the right to do so.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the resolution go to the calendar, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will go to the calendar. Is there further morning business? [A pause.] Morning business is closed.

CONSIDERATION OF UNOBJECTED BILLS.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the calendar under Rule VIII of bills to which there is no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Utah? [A pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is agreed to. The Secretary will state the first bill on the calendar.

AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL-DEFENSE ACT.

The bill (S. 1786) to amend certain sections of the act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, and for other purposes, was announced as first in order.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I ask that that bill be indefinitely postponed for the reason that another bill was substituted for it and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

BUSINESS PASSED OVER.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 39) to appropriate $3,000,000 to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to prosecute the work of eradicating the southern cattle tick was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution goes over on objection.

The bill (S. 1725) to stimulate the production of food upon private and public lands within reclamation projects, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there are certain amendments to be offered to this bill which can not be offered in the time devoted to the matter in the morning hour. I therefore ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over on the objection of the Senator from Utah.

The resolution (S. Res. 91) extending the authority of and provision for the committee appointed under S. Res. 92, Sixty-third Congress, first session, to investigate the charges of alleged attempts to influence legislation was announced as next in order.

Mr. LODGE. Let that go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution goes over.

The resolution (S. Res. 101) directing the Secretary of the Navy to furnish copies of the official dispatches upon which was based the statement of the chairman of the Committee on Public Information in regard to the encounter of the American fleet with submarines, together with other information about said Committee on Public Information, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LODGE. Let that go over, Mr. President. It seems to me that that resolution might go to the calendar under Rule IX.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the resolution going to the calendar under Rule IX? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 25) providing for the appointment of a joint committee to be known as the joint committee on the conduct of the war was announced as next in order.

Mr. NELSON. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 10) authorizing the appointment of a joint committee to investigate the causes of the recent riots in East St. Louis, Ill., and the report thereon, was announced as next in order.

Mr. HARDWICK and Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The concurrent resolution will be passed over.

REGULATION OF LAND AND NAVAL FORCES.

The bill (S. 2717) prescribing rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces during the period of the existing war with Germany was announced as next in order.

Mr. HARDWICK. I move that that bill be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 200) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States extending the right of suffrage to women was announced as next in order.

Mr. LODGE. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT OF NATURALIZATION LAWS.

The bill (S. 2854) to amend the naturalization laws was announced as next in order.

Mr. CALDER. I move that that bill be indefinitely postponed, it having been taken care of in another bill which has passed Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York moves that Senate bill 2854 be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

BUSINESS PASSED OVER.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 12) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States providing for the election of President and Vice President without the intervention of the Electoral College, establishing their term of office from the third Tuesday of January following their election, and fixing the time when the terms of Senators and Representatives shall begin, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that that joint resolution go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 385) to authorize mining for metalliferous minerals on Indian reservations was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

PUBLICATION OF OFFICIAL LAND OFFICE NOTICES.

The bill (S. 939) relating to the duties of registers of United States land offices and the publication in newspapers of official land-office notices was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Just a word about that bill, Mr. President. It has passed the Senate once, and, while I am opposed to the legislation, I am quite sure the other House will not pass the bill, and therefore I shall not object to its consideration now. If I thought that it was going to pass the House, I would object to it.

Mr. KING. I ask for the reading of the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever the law requires the register of a United States land office to publish a notice for a certain period of time in a newspaper to be designated by him, such publication may be made by publication each week, successively, in a weekly newspaper of general circulation for the prescribed period of time, or by publication once a week on Saturday of each successive week in the daily issue for each Saturday of a daily newspaper of general circulation until such prescribed period of time shall have elapsed from the first day of publication in such daily newspaper.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KING. I object.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will let me say a word. This bill has passed the Senate twice and has been thoroughly thrashed out and amended so as to suit those who made objection. It is simply to enable publication to be made in a daily paper once a week, instead of seven times a week at great cost. I hope the Senator will withdraw his objection.

Mr. KING. I withdraw the objection, Mr. President.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 950) to provide for the nonmineral entry of lands withdrawn, classified, or reported as containing coal, phosphate, nitrate, potash, oil, gas, or asphaltic minerals in Alaska, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GRONNA. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 23) granting to the State of Nevada 7,000,000 acres of land in said State for the use and benefit of the public schools of Nevada and the State University of the State of Nevada was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 93) to consolidate national forest lands was announced as next in order.

Mr. GRONNA. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 90) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, that joint resolution, of course, involves a serious change in the method of amending the Constitution of the United States, and while it has been reported by quite a considerable majority of the Committee on the Judiciary and was introduced by myself, I would not ask consideration of it with such a slim attendance of the Senate, but I should like to get unanimous consent to have the joint resolution, which is very brief, embracing only a few lines, printed in the RECORD, together with the present Article V of the Constitution, which it proposes to amend, so that it may come to the attention of the Members of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Connecticut? The Chair hears none, and the joint resolution and article of the Constitution referred to will be printed in the RECORD.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 90) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States is as follows:

"Resolved, etc., That Article V of the Constitution of the United States is hereby amended to read as follows, to wit:

"'ARTICLE V.

"'The Congress, whenever two-thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary, shall propose amendments to this Constitution, or on the application of the legislatures of two-thirds of the several States shall call a convention for proposing amendments, which, in either case, shall be valid, to all intents and purposes, as part of this Constitution when ratified within six years from the date of their proposal by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States, or by conventions in three-fourths thereof, or by the electors in three-fourths thereof, as the mode of ratification may be proposed by the Congress: Provided, That no State, without its consent, shall be deprived of its equal suffrage in the Senate.'"

Article V of the Constitution is as follows:

"ARTICLE V.

"The Congress, whenever two-thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary, shall propose amendments to this Constitution, or on the application of the legislatures of two-thirds of the several States shall call a convention for proposing amendments, which, in either case, shall be valid, to all intents and purposes, as part of this Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States or by conventions in three-fourths thereof, as the one or the other mode of ratification may be proposed by the Congress: Provided, That no amendment which may be made prior to the year 1808 shall in any manner affect the first and fourth clauses in the ninth section of the first article; and that no State, without its consent, shall be deprived of its equal suffrage in the Senate."

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 3311) to increase and expedite the supply of munitions of war was announced as next in order.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 49) authorizing the erection on the public grounds in the city of Washington, D. C., of a statue of James Buchanan, a former President of the United States, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LODGE. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1795) to relieve Congress from the adjudication of private claims against the Government was announced as next in order.

Mr. GRONNA. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

CYRENA E. YOUNG.

The bill (S. 100) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue patent for certain lands in the State of Utah to Cyrena E. Young was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I think that is the same bill that was here once before, and the Secretary of the Interior reported that the claimant had not complied with the homestead laws; but the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] has assured me that, notwithstanding that fact, it is a meritorious case and that the proposed beneficiary of the act has labored under great difficulties and is very deserving. Consequently, I do not make objection.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to cause patent to issue to Cyrena E. Young for the following-described lands in the State of Utah: The south half of the southeast quarter, section 22, west half of the northeast quarter, section 27, township 3 south, range 4 west, Uintah special meridian.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BUSINESS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 3522) to amend an act entitled "An act to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations, the neutrality, and the foreign commerce of the United States, to punish espionage, and better to enforce the criminal laws of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 15, 1917, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LODGE. I do not see the chairman of the committee present. I think that bill had better go over.

Mr. KING. I will inquire by whom that bill was introduced?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was introduced by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON].

Mr. KING. I think we have disposed of that in another measure which has been acted upon.

Mr. LODGE. I think it has been covered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was introduced by the Senator from Texas and reported from the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The resolution (S. Res. 196) to print the pamphlet entitled "An International Confederation of Democracies under a Constitution" as a Senate document was announced as next in order.

Mr. GRONNA. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3481) to authorize the logging of timber on the Red Lake Indian Forest, Minn., under the direction of the Department of the Interior, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GRONNA. I do not see the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] in the Chamber. I think that this matter has been taken care of in an appropriation bill, and I therefore ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE FOR HOMESTEAD ENTRYMEN.

The bill (S. 2552) to provide for leave of absence for homestead entrymen in one or two periods, and for longer times, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, on page 2, line 8, after the word "conditions," to strike out "or serious sickness of the claimant or his immediate family"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to provide for leave of absence for homestead entrymen in one or two periods," approved August 22, 1914, be, and hereby is, amended to read as follows:

"That the entryman mentioned in section 2291 of Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended by the act of June 6, 1912, Thirty-seventh Statutes, 123, upon filing in the local land office notice of the beginning of such absence at his option shall be entitled to a leave of absence in one or two continuous periods, not exceeding in the aggregate five months in each year after establishing residence: Provided, That the register and receiver of the local land office under rules and regulations made by the Commissioner of the General Land Office may, upon proper showing, upon application of the homesteader, and only for climatic conditions, which makes residence on the homestead for seven months in each year a hardship, reduce the term of residence to not more than six months in each year, over a period of four years, or to not more than five months each year over a period of five years, but the total residence required shall in no event exceed 25 months, not less than 5 of which shall be in each year; proof to be made within five years after entry; and upon the termination of such absence, in each period, the entryman shall file a notice of such termination in the local land office; but in case of commutation the 14 months' actual residence, as now required by law, must be shown, and the person commuting be at the time a citizen of the United States."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossd for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

VALIDATION OF HOMESTEAD ENTRIES.

The bill (S. 947) validating certain homestead entries, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I want to reserve the right to object to the consideration of this bill until I have had an explanation from the Senator from Montana, who seems to be responsible for this bill and the author of the bill. It seems to cover a very large scope.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, that is a departmental bill. It was drawn by the department and introduced at the request of the department.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if the Senator from Montana will permit me, I will say to the Senator from North Dakota that while the bill is long, it refers only to particular cases—cases affecting the 640-acre homestead law.

Mr. GRONNA. May I ask the Senator from Utah—he says that the bill refers to particular cases, and, of course, there are no particular cases mentioned—whether it in any way interferes with cases where there may be adverse claims?

Mr. SMOOT. None whatever.

Mr. GRONNA. There are, as the Senator knows, many instances where contests have been made, and, of course, if such contests should be pending against these particular claims the passage of the bill might do an injustice to those people.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that the bill does not affect that question. Any adverse claim to lands entered would not be affected in the least by this legislation.

Mr. GRONNA. Does not the Senator think it would be well to amend the bill by stating that it shall not affect such entries?

Mr. SMOOT. I think that is the general law.

Mr. GRONNA. I am not a member of the Committee on Public Lands of the Senate, but I was a member of the corresponding committee in the House for a number of years, and I know that in almost every instance where legislation of this kind was passed we stated that it should not affect cases where there might be adverse claims.

Mr. SMOOT. All that this bill provides, in substance, is this: That wherever a man has taken up a piece of land under the land laws enacted before we passed the last 640-acre law he shall have the right to take up land adjoining that land under the 640-acre law and pay the minimum price for the land and he is not required to live upon the additional land entered as he has already lived upon the land occupied before and complied with every provision of the law, and unless he has complied with every provision of the law, then, he does not get the title not only to the land that he first settled upon but the additional land that he is given the right to take up under this bill.

Mr. GRONNA. I am quite sure that the Senator from Utah knows of cases where final proof has been made and where perhaps the land might have been disposed of and perhaps it has gone into the hands of corporations at the very time when an adverse claim was pending, and now we seek here to validate such claims. I shall object to the consideration of this bill at present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made, and the bill will be passed over.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 951) to provide for the sinking of artesian wells, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ASHURST. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3783) to amend an act entitled "An act granting pensions to certain enlisted men, soldiers and officers, who served in the Civil War and the War with Mexico," approved May 11, 1912, was announced as next in order.

Mr. THOMAS. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

G. H. BECKWITH.

The bill (S. 3391) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue patent to G. H. Beckwith for certain land within the Flathead Indian Reservation, Mont., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment to insert at the end of the bill the following:

Provided further, That whatever business is conducted on this tract shall be under Government supervision as at present, and shall continue under such supervision so long as the United States Government retains control over the Flathead Indians at this point.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to convey by deed, at the appraised price, to G. H. Beckwith, two certain tracts of land in the Flathead Indian Reservation and town of St. Ignatius, Mont., lying in the southeast quarter of the southeast quarter of section 14, township 18 north, range 20 west, Montana principal meridian, separated by a public highway 60 feet wide, and described as follows: The point of beginning "A" of the first tract is south 89 degrees and 46 minutes west 403.1 feet from the 1/128 corner found in place on the east line of said section 14 and north 89 degrees and 46 minutes east 33 feet from a 1/128 corner, which in turn is north 0 degree and 22 minutes west 826.7 feet from a 1/128 corner found in place on the south line of said section 14. Thence from point of beginning "A" north 0 degree and 22 minutes west 15.8 feet to "B," thence north 56 degrees and 37 minutes west 377.6 feet to "K," thence south 0 degree and 22 minutes east 462.8 feet to "L," thence north 89 degrees and 35 minutes east 314.3 feet to "Z," thence north 0 degree and 22 minutes west 237.2 feet to the point of beginning "A," and containing 2.58 acres. The point of beginning "C" of the second tract is north 0 degree and 22 minutes west 88 feet from the point of beginning "A" of the first tract, thence north 56 degrees and 37 minutes west 298 feet to "D," thence north 31 degrees and 10 minutes west 130 feet to "F," thence north 58 degrees and 50 minutes east 96 feet to "H," thence south 45 degrees and 33 minutes east 115 feet to "J," thence south 65 degrees and 6 minutes east 264.2 feet to "E," thence south 33 degrees and 23 minutes west 160 feet to the point of beginning "C," and containing 1.20 acres: Provided, That the land in said tracts shall at no time be used for the sale of intoxicating liquors, and should it be so used the title to the same shall revert to the Government of the United States and all payments made thereon shall be forfeited: Provided further, That whatever business is conducted on this tract shall be under Government supervision as at present, and shall continue under such supervision so long as the United States Government retains control over the Flathead Indians at this point.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue a deed to G. H. Beckwith for certain land within the Flathead Indian Reservation, Mont."

OREGON & CALIFORNIA RAILROAD CO.

The bill (H. R. 5489) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to exchange for lands in private ownership lands formerly embraced in the grant to the Oregon & California Railroad Co. was announced as next in order.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Let that bill go over, Mr. President.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President——

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Washington will withdraw his objection. The Secretary of the Interior has urged the necessity of mobilizing these pieces of land, which are heavily timbered, for the purpose of protecting them from fire. The dry season in Oregon is now approaching, and I should like very much to have the measure considered to-day.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, it was for the very reason stated by the Senator from Oregon that I interposed an objection—because the bill involves large public interests. I do not know that I shall want to oppose the bill after looking into it further, but I should like to have an opportunity to do that. I may have no objection after reading it and talking it over with the Senator.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, of course that is up to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senate is familiar with these very large areas of very valuable land that are involved in this grant to the Oregon & California Railroad Co., and there has been considerable controversy over the terms of the disposition of them.

Mr. McNARY. I can say, for the information of the Senator from Washington, that this bill does not involve in any way the title to the property. It is for the purpose of assembling large blocks of timber, for protection from fire, and for the purpose of making them more salable. The Secretary of the Interior, and all those interested in the welfare of the timber interests, and the people of Oregon realize that the timber, if placed together in one large commercial unit, will be of a great deal more value and more easily protected by the execution of the bill which is now before the Senate for consideration.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I understand that the bill proposes to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to exchange these lands of the Government for lands that are owned by private citizens; and the terms and conditions of those exchanges are subject to considerable controversy and doubt in getting them adjusted upon an equitable basis. I am free to say that I do not understand how the making of exchanges affecting the title to the lands is going to affect the protection of the timber from fire. The lands and the timber, of course, are going to remain in the same place that they were before; and if the timber is valuable, whether it is on private land or on Government land, it ought to be protected from fire. I fail to see that the passage of this bill is an emergency in the sense of protecting the timber from fire.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the amount of land involved lying within Oregon and heavily timbered is about 2,500,000 acres. The Senator knows that originally the odd sections were given to the railroads to promote the construction of a transcontinental line, and the even sections were sold to private individuals. The railroads have sold a great many of these sections, so that the Government has a section lying here, and again lying there, and perhaps after the intervention of 6 or 15 miles there would be another Government section. The Secretary of the Interior wants to mobilize these lands so that he can protect them from fire and make them salable to people who are interested in sawing the timber. Secretary Lane told me a few days ago that last year over 2,500 acres of land were burned over and the timber lost in one county in Oregon on account of inability to protect the timber from fire, a danger which is now approaching again, in view of the impending summer weather.

I do not understand the position of the Senator from Washington in objecting to a situation in Oregon, which means much to the community and the Nation and the people of the State, but I appreciate that he can put on the brakes if he desires.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I should like to say, in reply to the Senator from Oregon, that these lands are not exclusively in the State of Oregon.

Mr. McNARY. No.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Some of them are in the State of Washington; and, furthermore, they belong to the people of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WATSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Washington insist on his objection?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I insist on my objection, and I will say to the Senator from Oregon that I will examine the bill. There is no doubt that the calendar will be called again in a few days.

Mr. McNARY. It means that it will go over until next year; that is all.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not know that I will insist on my objection later on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, under the rule the bill goes over.

RED LAKE INDIAN FOREST, MINN.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to return to Order of Business 222, so that it may be indefinitely postponed. That will save calling it again. The matter has already been taken care of in the Indian appropriation bill, and I ask that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas asks that Senate bill 3481, being Order of Business 222, be indefinitely postponed. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

CLAIMS OF OFFICERS AND ENLISTED MEN OF THE ARMY.

The bill (S. 3527) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the settlement of the claims of officers and enlisted men of the Army for loss of private property destroyed in the military service of the United States," approved March 3, 1885, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], who is the author of this bill, if we have not passed legislation similar to this in one of the appropriation bills?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, a provision was included in the last urgent deficiency bill covering this subject matter, but this bill was on the calendar at the time that bill passed, I think. The urgent deficiency bill was approved on the 28th of March.

Mr. SMOOT. This bill was reported to the Senate on February 11.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes. The War Department says that the provision included in the urgent deficiency bill is wholly inadequate to meet the purposes for which the original legislation was intended.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Committee on Appropriations had hearings on this particular item, and the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] was very much interested in it. As it was sent from the department to the committee, the committee did not agree to it; but they modified it, after the hearings, from the proposed bill of the department, and, I think, went just as far as we ought to go. For that reason I desire to ask that this bill go over to-day. I will say to the Senator that I will compare it with the provision that we incorporated in the urgent deficiency bill, and if there is any reason why this bill should pass I will have no objection to it; but the items that have been read which this bill covers, as far as they were read, were exactly as we had them in the urgent deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I shall be very glad to submit to the Senator a communication I have from the Judge Advocate General, in which he shows the deficiencies in the act as it passed. It is not broad enough to cover the purposes that the War Department had in view to protect the men who are losing property in this way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the bill will be passed over.

BUGLERS AND CORPORAL BUGLERS IN THE ARMY.

The bill (S. 3779) to create in the Army the grades and establish the pay of first-class bugler and corporal bugler, to increase the pay of buglers, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I ask that that bill be indefinitely postponed, because it is included in another general bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KING in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 758) to increase the productive agricultural area of the United States by the reclamation of arid and swamp lands was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

ISSUANCE OF PATENTS TO MISSIONARY OR RELIGIOUS ORGANIZATIONS.

The bill (S. 279) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue patents in certain cases to missionary or religious organizations was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to issue a patent in fee simple to the duly authorized missionary board, or other proper authority, of any religious organization engaged in mission or school work on any Indian reservation for such lands thereon as have been heretofore set apart to and are now being used and occupied by such organization for mission or school purposes.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is House bill 7237.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7237) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator from Alabama yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. ASHURST. Those Senators who were paying attention to what I happened to say will remember that the other day I was urging that the calendar be called. I hoped upon the call of the calendar a bill which I earnestly want to have passed would be reached. At that time I said although I have been here for some six and a half years, I had never asked but once unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill. I hope the calendar may be called to-morrow, because there is a bill which provides for the creation of a national park out of the Grand Canyon, which I desire considered.

The reason I want early action is because some years ago Congress appropriated $5,000 for the erection of a tablet or memorial to Maj. Powell, the great explorer. The Secretary of the Interior will be at the canyon next Monday to dedicate the memorial. I should like to ask the Senator from Alabama if we may not have an hour for the calendar to-morrow morning, and then I hope we will reach this bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. We hope to dispose of the appropriation bill this afternoon. At any rate we expect to have an adjournment, and that will give the Senator an opportunity to get his bill up.

Mr. ASHURST. I should like to get it through before Saturday.

Mr. GRONNA. Will the Senator from Alabama yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. GRONNA. I wish to state that I objected to the consideration of the bill (S. 93) to consolidate national forest lands, a bill which had been reported by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT]. I have since looked into the report. I simply want to state that I have no objection to the bill, and I wish to ask unanimous consent, with the consent of the Senator from Alabama, that the Senator from Utah may call up the bill at this time. No one can object to it.

Mr. SMOOT. If there is no objection, I should like to get it up, although I will say to the Senator it is a department bill, and I do not believe that it will hurt to let it go until the calendar comes up the next time.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I would have no objection to taking up the bill now, but I think that would be the better course to follow.

Mr. SMOOT. Very well. I thank the Senator for his kindness.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President——

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, I gave notice on last Friday that I would move to suspend the rules of the Senate so as to make in order on the pending Post Office appropriation bill an amendment, the object of which is to postpone the operations of second-class postage, as provided in the revenue law passed last October, for one year. I did not think then, nor do I think now, that this rate of postage as provided in these sections should be imposed. My judgment is and has been that because of the ever-increasing price of print paper, and because of the constant enhancing of wages, to say nothing of the scarcity of labor, these things make unfair to the press of the country the imposition of these new rates at this time.

In addition to that I am not sure that the rates are advisable even in normal times. There is much of conflict as we all know upon matters of this character. The editors came before us fresh from their national association meeting in New York City and objected to the imposition of these rates at this time. The southern editors appeared as well as the representatives of magazines and farm papers and religious publications of various kinds, all objecting to some features of the law that is to go into operation on the 1st of July.

In addition to that we are in abnormal times, and it does not appear to be wise at this time to fix rates that have anything of permanency for the future. But this is the law, and it is to go into operation, and after our committee had discussed it I violate no committee secrets when I say that a majority of the membership favored postponing the operation of the law for one year.

The question then was how best to approach it in the Senate. It is clearly obnoxious to the rule that there shall be no general legislation on an appropriation bill. Therefore I gave notice of a motion to suspend the rules that it might be in order.

Mr. President, I do not intend to press the amendment at this time. I have been assured by those who have authority to speak and those who have knowledge of the conditions, that there is a measure coming from the Finance Committee to which this can be added as an amendment, making it clearly in order, because if proposed now it might be subject to a point of order on the ground that it is unconstitutional because it seeks to raise revenue, and therefore the jurisdiction lies with the House of Representatives and not with the Senate.

But I want to say generally, if the chairman of the committee will pardon me for just a moment longer, that I believe the operation of this law should be deferred for one year, the matter to be dealt with then as the conditions existing at that time may justify, because I believe the quantity of advertising and the value of the work done by the newspapers and the press generally of the United States at this time is beyond any calculation. My own judgment is that we could not have succeeded with the Young Men's Christian Association drive, or the Red Cross drive, or any of the three liberty-loan campaigns had it not been for the patriotic and intelligent cooperation of the press of the United States.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. WATSON. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does not the Senator think that a bounty of seventy-odd million dollars a year paid by the Government to these publishers is a pretty good price for any advertising they may get?

Mr. WATSON. While we are scattering millions and billions with lavish hand on every side, so far as I am concerned, I do not want to hamper or handicap the one tremendous agency of the United States that is molding public opinion and formulating patriotic sentiment throughout all the ranks of the people of the United States.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator yield again?

Mr. WATSON. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. Why select this one particular industry to confer bounties upon? There are no others the Government confers bounties upon.

Mr. WATSON. I am selecting this one particular industry because this one particular industry is before us at this time in this measure for consideration, and unless the problem that confronts us now is to be dealt with at this time it can not be dealt with at any other time, save as the promise of future relief is given, as I have above stated.

I may say, in addition to that, that this one industry is the industry, in my judgment, that controls public opinion. I am not terrified at the word "bounty" or the word "subsidy." It never has frightened me, because as a people we have believed more or less in subsidies. I may say to my friend, the Senator from Tennessee, that all my political life I have been an advocate of ship subsidy, because I believed that to be the one sane way in which to place our flag back on the sea, where it so rightfully belongs. But that is aside from the question at issue. I believe that this legislation is demanded by the conditions which surround the newspaper business of the United States at this time, and I believe, furthermore, that it will be a piece of righteous legislation and that it will meet with the general approval of the people of the United States if this rate be postponed; and I hope that it will be brought forward when it can be done without parliamentary entanglement.

I thank the chairman of the committee.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NEW in the chair). Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS. I have received during the past two months large numbers of telegrams and letters urging me to support the proposition to postpone the operation of the increase of rates upon second-class matter for a year from the time when under the present law it is to go into effect. These communications have a very striking family resemblance to each other and indicate the existence of a widespread propaganda in favor of a postponement. They come from the proprietors of a great many business concerns, from professional men and women, from authors and those who hope to be authors—indeed, from every source which is directly or indirectly dependent upon or that feels the influence of the public press. It is an artificial propaganda designed to force the hand of Congress.

A few days after my mail became somewhat overburdened with these communications I determined to examine the question somewhat because of its apparent importance and because of additional information which I had received to the effect that the Post Office Committee would probably report an amendment such as notice was given by the Senator from Indiana that he would offer.

I shall not take up the time of the Senate to discuss the question, since it is not before the Senate, beyond asserting my conviction that instead of postponing or repealing that increased rate it ought to be extended many times. I am of the opinion that we have for years bestowed upon the publishers of the United States a privilege which has ripened into a virtual monopoly and has extended through the low rates upon second-class mail a protection that has not only been abused but which unfortunately has robbed the Government of the United States of billions of dollars, a condition whose burdens will increase as time goes on unless something is done to correct it.

In this connection I have a pamphlet entitled "Justification of Zone-System Advances in Postage Rates of Advertising Matter in Periodicals," by Mr. Charles William Burrows, who is president of the National One-Cent Letter Postage Association. It is short, and is, to my mind, conclusive upon the subject. For the information of Senators and the country I ask leave to insert it in the RECORD as a part of my remarks. It consists of only 12 pages of printed matter in large type, and the pages are very small.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

JUSTIFICATION OF ZONE-SYSTEM ADVANCES IN POSTAGE RATES OF ADVERTISING MATTER IN PERIODICALS ENACTED IN FIRST SESSION OF SIXTY-FIFTH CONGRESS.

[A précis specially prepared for Members of Congress by Mr. Charles William Burrows, president National One Cent Letter Postage Association, 1219–20 Guardian Building, Cleveland, Ohio.]

INTRODUCTION.

Many articles have appeared recently denouncing zone advances in mail rates on the advertising pages only of periodicals.

Most are clearly misleading as to what has been done, while insistently urging its undoing. An understanding, therefore, of what advances have been made and why is highly desirable.

Congress will scarcely undo the sole piece of constructive postal legislation looking toward right enacted in a generation. Magazines should not dare to ask that their "special privilege," a fraction only of which has been cut off, should be restored, while "everybody" else loyally consents to be "taxed till it hurts."

Most such articles deplore "a fine on reading" are piteous about "sectionalism," prate about "perfidy," and misrepresent generally until they forcibly remind us of Macaulay's cogent statement that "the doctrine of universal gravitation would still be disputed if a financial interest were arrayed against it."

Every contention may be convincingly answered. Those mammoth issues which harp so nobly upon "special privilege," never turn the light inward.

Let us hope that publishers may in time see a light in connection with their industry, which, conducted like all others, for profit, is the only one by law freed from paying cost of distribution of those advertising pages which are its merchandise. These latter, too, are simply circulars stitched together, and should pay third-class rates, or 8 cents a pound instead of 1.

IMPERATIVE NECESSITY FOR RECENT ADVANCES IN SECOND-CLASS MAIL RATES.

Many emphatic arguments exist for advances in the almost-free second-class rates, but one of the strongest is that higher rates will diminish the ever-increasing loss it occasions.

The volume of second-class mail—

In 1880 was only 60,000,000 pounds: Loss, about	$4,000,000
In 1890 was only 204,000,000 pounds: Loss, about	12,000,000
In 1900 was only 450,000,000 pounds: Loss, about	27,000,000
In 1910 was only 873,000,000 pounds: Loss, about	52,000,000
In 1917 was only 1,202,000,000 pounds: Loss, over	70,000,000

And 2,000,000,000 pounds, with accompanying loss of $125,000,000, was in sight within 10 years had advances not been made. This loss, which is due to the utterly insufficient rate periodicals pay, is a serious menace to the department's finances.

Second class practically doubles in volume each decade and consequent loss increases as rapidly.

Even though a surplus exists for the past year, the deficit created by second class is no less enormous, simply large profits upon letter mail permit the showing. Had each class paid its way the entire profit created by the first class would have been revealed as surplus instead of a comparatively meager sum. It would have been ninety million dollars instead of only nine.

Giving service to second class which (disregarding parcels post) is about two-thirds of the paid-for mail, for less than $11,500,000, while total expense runs $300,000,000, and requiring first class, in volume one-fifth as much and costing less, to pay $190,000,000 revenue (at prewar rates) for service costing half that, is an evident grave injustice.

Letter mail has produced $1,350,000,000 revenue in the last 10 years, while costing less than $750,000,000. On the contrary, periodicals at the almost free rate of 1 cent a pound (one-seventh cost) have within the same 10 years produced only $85,000,000 revenue, though costing about $800,000,000.

Moreover, this utterly inadequate revenue from over a billion pounds a year of periodical mail has resulted in cramped service everywhere, and here is found the main source of complaint about poor work.

In these days of war conservation in all ways, Congress absolutely can not sit quietly by and see 1,000,000,000 pounds of periodical mail grow to 2,000,000 pounds within very few years. Publishers must begin to stand, not all, but a fairer part of cost of distributing their merchandise.

Fair play by all means; but no more $70,000,000 subsidy. No mischief; no check to healthy growth; tenderness even in lopping off part of the subsidy. With this in mind, Congress did not make the law operative until July, 1918, and then the first advance is small, while all will not be effective until 1921. "Reading" matter, moreover, is exempted from some advances, which apply solely to advertising and then only if in excess of 5 per cent.

IS A ZONE SYSTEM OF ADVANCES "UNFAIR"?

Publishers often assert that postage rates for periodicals based on a zone system are "unfair." It will be seen by a little thought, however, that a step toward rather than away from "fairness" has been made.

Remember that the zone system applies solely upon high-priced advertising pages, simply circulars stitched together, which should go at third-class rate of 8 cents a pound instead of 1.

Also any reasoning about a "flat" rate based upon its being accorded to letter mail is fallacious. Handling of letters is a monopoly. You are not at liberty to send them in any way other than through the post office. Also as the rate is high, the Government gets mostly profitable hauls. The revenue from billions of such letters not only takes care of loss incurred in handling the comparatively few which get long haul and delivery in sparsely settled regions, but also provides large net profit.

With second class this is all different. The pound rate it pays, only 1 cent, is a mere fraction of cost, and its carriage neither is a monopoly nor can well be made one, so publishers give long runs and single-copy deliveries to Government and short runs and bulk lots, on which the department might make a profit, to express companies. So Government gets all losing and no profitable business. Any "flat" rate on second-class mail will be "unfair" to the department, which will get little revenue from hundreds of millions of pounds of such mail. To users of letter mail, whose excessive rate produces revenue to care for loss occasioned by inadequate charge on second class, it is also "unfair."

There are, however, several kinds of second-class mail.

That which is hauled 2,000 miles and given copy distribution may easily cost 50 or more cents a pound, though paying but 1. Packages of daily papers, however, sent in bulk to near-by newsdealers may cost little more than they pay.

Can anyone think it "fair" to make the rate for these two kinds of service the same?

Moreover, lack of candor on the publishers' part is evident when we find them characterizing as "unfair" a zone basis for handling hundreds of millions of pounds of printed advertising, their merchandise, and yet remember that a few years ago they, one and all, clamored for a zone system for parcels of other merchandise.

From the service-efficiency standpoint there is also to be found a strong argument against a "flat" rate for second class.

Of first class there are over 45 pieces in an average pound; of second class under five (4.72). Due to greater uniformity in size and lighter piece weight, a "sorter" can "throw" a tray of several thousand letters in "takes" of 20 quicker than he can "plant" one-tenth as many pieces of second class, many of which are of such awkward shape that they can not be "thrown" at all. Others are so heavy that it would damage other mail and equipment to "throw" them. They must be "placed" in bag or pigeonhole.

The above is another reason why a "flat" rate is economical for letters but not for second-class mail.

WHY A POUND-RATE LAW WAS ENACTED AND SOME OF ITS EFFECTS.

One publisher contends (Leslie's, Nov. 24, 1917, p. 174) that enactment of a pound-rate law was "voluntary," and that change was made not for the benefit of publishers but of subscribers.

Passing a pound-rate law was forced by necessity. Postage on periodicals had been paid quarterly in advance by subscriber in driblet sums running 7, 11, etc., cents. No track could be kept of these thousands of trifling amounts without prohibitive expense. It was difficult to keep accounts straight, and some made little effort to do so. Investigation became necessary and showed that of every hundred errors perhaps ninety were against Government.

So passage of a law collecting postage "at source" was enacted. Publishers protested against charges high enough to cover cost. The founder of one great magazine worked strenuously for low rates, and, as amount involved was small, they were granted.

To sum up, contrary to Leslie's statement, the law was distinctly passed not to benefit either publisher or subscriber, but to diminish opportunity for fraud, and evidence exists that publishers had much to do with making the rate low when, on June 23, 1874, the law was enacted. Rates were then, however, higher than now, being 3 cents a pound for magazines and 2 for newspapers.

The operation of this law entirely changed our periodical literature. The old literary magazine, like Atlantic, North American Review, Century, Harper's, etc., had paid expenses both of production and distribution, as does the book, through price charged. They contained a literary product of high class. They made for plain living and deep thinking.

The fruit of this enactment was a "subsidized" periodical getting distribution at practically a franking rate. Then was born a new kind of magazine edited from the business office to carry advertising, only circulars stitched together, or third-class matter, which should pay 8 cents instead of 1.

Tempted by this nearly free distribution, an average of more than 10 new periodicals a day have secured second-class privileges for every day (Sundays and holidays inclusive) of the past 15 years.

Of the product thus evolved the opinion held by one editor is shown in quotations from Howe's Monthly, Atchison, Kans., here presented:

"Best sellers in magazines vie with each other in vulgarity. They outrival each other as to which can be boldest without being barred from the mail. Stories dealing with sex problems, having unmarried mothers and women of the demimonde as heroines, fill them. The country is overrun with publications issued to secure advertising under the benign protection of the second-class rate."

Without altogether agreeing with the editor, nevertheless, the "weedy" literary matter of some, combined with the high-priced advertising that constitutes their bulk, make it evident that Government has distributed this load at heavy loss for years enough. It is time to call a halt.

At this time, when Government seeks to check all abuses, periodical publishing, organized for profit as are other industries, should be abundantly satisfied to be advanced from one-seventh to one-third cost only instead of having to pay full costs of distribution. They should be grateful that a $70,000,000 subsidy is reduced one-third instead of abolished entirely.

As periodicals deliberately close their pages to articles opposing the second-class privilege, and as they are not only its beneficiaries, but also constitute virtually the sole publicity machinery of the land, it is easily seen why this iniquity has persisted.

SECTIONALISM.

A recent article in Saturday Evening Post stated that the zone advances for second-class mail would "denationalize" the press and introduce "sectionalism."

It further stated that we would not permit seaboard States to levy duties on trans-Mississippi wheat or bacon nor tolerate any sectional tariff.

To answer their contention, it is obvious that when merchandise is sent to different parts of the country and goes "prepaid," whether it be bacon, boots, books, or wheat, the freight will vary with distance and total cost will, therefore, vary, which variation, through price being figured on article delivered, sometimes shows indirectly.

It has never been argued, however, that for a packer to charge more for sending bacon 1,000 miles than 100 would "sectionalize" the United States. No more will slight differences in postage "denationalize" the country just because the merchandise, instead of being bacon, happens to be paper in shape of circulars stitched together, the advertising pages of periodicals.

As well might we attempt distribution of the fruits of the earth, the products of the manufacturer, the wares of the merchant at a "flat" rate as to extend this favor to over 1,000,000,000 pounds of periodicals, the merchandise of fewer than 30,000 publishers whose output, moreover, is susceptible of such excessively rapid increase in volume.

When we reflect that this particular issue of the Post contained over 50 pages of advertising, costing $5,000 a page and upward, and that it carried, therefore, more than $250,000 of advertising, yet paid for its postage only about $15,000 for service that cost over $80,000 for the portion mailed and that this is repeated weekly, we well understand why the Post opposes any advance, even though to but one-third cost and on the advertising only.

That the Post, which, it is reported, carried last year more than $20,000,000 of advertising, can not take care of added expense of this sort is not believable. Doubtless, in preparation for just this situation, it has, by increasing proportion of advertising and in other ways, apparently increased its advertising receipts heavily since war began.

HIGH-PRICED PAPER AND ADVANCES.

Publishers contend that there have been such advances in price of paper that the present is an inauspicious time for postage increase.

To give this contention weight, specific assertion is made that for a series of 86 journals whose combined profits amounted to but $1,197,000, extra cost of paper for one year will amount to $3,034,000.

Answer to this is simple. These publishers prove too much. If all these increases are more than publishers can stand, they will be driven out of business anyway and postal advances will matter little. If, however, by drastic readjustment they can meet conditions, then it will be comparatively easy to absorb the postal expense.

The argument is a specious one, but let us remember that in 1911 and in 1914 many publishers, at a time when print paper was about the lowest known, bitterly opposed advances, that in 1914 being a "flat" one of only 1 cent a pound.

Furthermore, since enactment of postal advance in October, 1917, magazine publishers are quite generally making lower subscription rates, which all shows that enlarged circulations with consequent higher advertising rates are what they want. They would give away "circulation" if Government permitted. This is indicated by a report that one prominent magazine recently sold to an agency 200,000 "circulation" at 27 cents per subscription. Its nominal yearly rate is $1.50. The object is, of course, apparent—to get the largest possible output.

Another instance: One E. T. Meredith, of Des Moines, Iowa, publisher of Successful Farming, while vigorously denouncing all advances in postage rates, "zone" or "flat," has, we are informed, offered seven years' subscription to his journal (a large affair with lots of advertising) for $1, a rate that probably does not pay half cost of paper.

These low prices for periodicals stimulate wasted consumption. The story goes that one man subscribed for three magazines with aggregate list prices of $3 because he could get them for $2. When they began to arrive, however, he found that the first was one he didn't want, the second his wife didn't want, the third neither wanted.

WILL ADVANCES KILL THE READING HABIT?

One contention of publishers is that our boys and girls will be shut out from forming the "reading habit" at time of life when most essential.

In writer's opinion, the contrary effect will result. Taking away from a schoolgirl opportunity to eat half a pound of chocolates daily will probably turn her to nutritious bread, meat, and potatoes, which should mainly constitute her diet.

Similarly feeding youthful imaginations with Magazine of Mystery, Stories of Adventure, Police Gazette, scorcs like them and hundreds of the "popular but weedy" variety, tend through oversupply of "literary sweetmeats" to destroy opportunity to benefit the mind by reading the best in essay, history, poetry, travel, and belles-lettres generally.

Due almost solely to its inadequate postal rate, second-class, as shown previously, has increased from 40,000,000 pounds in 1875 to twelve hundred million pounds in 1917. This means that several billion more copies of popular magazines are issued than formerly, and each extra hundred million magazines crowds out 10,000,000 books.

The result is that while America publishes more periodicals than all nations of the globe united and half as many again, she has lost her position as a book producer, save of "best sellers" in erotic fiction. Fast power presses that print periodicals have displaced for young and old the cultural training that good books alone can give.

Our literary decadence has been deplored by many thinkers. While we formerly held high rank as publishing good books in all lines, today (under normal conditions) book publishing in Switzerland, the Scandinavian and Teutonic nations, France, and Great Britain runs from six to eight times as many per capita as with us. Japan publishes four times as many; Roumania, thrice; Russia, of whose population 79 per cent is an ignorant peasantry that can neither read nor write, publishes for the remainder many more books than we; while Spain issues as many books per capita as we.

The "weeds of literature," that too many trashy periodicals are, have been too much for the book.

This lack of "cultural" value in the reading most available results in impoverished development of the young intellect.

Further detrimental influence is seen in an economic direction. In the farm journal line overproduction has been excessive, so much so that we are mailing over 600,000,000 farm journals per annum to our 6,000,000 farmers. Many of these are "islands" of reading surrounded by "oceans" of advertising, prepared often thoughtlessly, always hastily, so publication date may not be delayed.

Under the influence of such "reading" American farmers produce, working on soil of unsurpassed fertility, from one-quarter to one-half as much of a given crop per acre as their European brothers, who get carefully prepared manuals, not weak journals loaded with advertising.

One representative of a conservative old farm journal told the writer that he would gladly see competition diminished. He asserted that in the effort to get circulation a journal with yearly subscription rate of $1 had to give 95 cents to the canvasser who secured order. It was further necessary to give the farmer a premium represented as worth price of subscription, though it actually cost about 35 cents. This building circulation by premiums has caused wasteful overproduction in this field. The department, in fact, was finally obliged to investigate. The report of the Third Assistant Postmaster General (1911, p. 39) shows that one such agricultural publication, with 143,000 circulation, had 122,000 premium-induced. Another, with circulation of 53,000, had 41,000 so secured. A third, with nearly 500,000 per issue, had only 60,000 subscriptions not obtained by means of this extraneous inducement.

Another illuminating fact as to this "special privilege" is seen in the financial field. Investigation shows that something like 86 banking periodicals are issued to supply a need which a prominent bank official stated would be better filled by 6. The extra ones were just "leg pullers" for advertising.

And the situation in nearly all lines is similar.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator from Alabama yield to me?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I merely rose for the purpose of making a statement, inasmuch as what took place in the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, in regard to second-class postage matter, has been mentioned, and very properly so. I am not complaining at all, but I merely wish to add in explanation that a subcommittee was appointed to see whether the proposed amendment to suspend the operation of second-class postage law would be in order on this bill, and that subcommittee unanimously reported that it would not, and that virtually ended the matter. I want to say also that the committee is not at all unanimous on the subject one way or the other. I am exceedingly doubtful whether a majority of the committee are in favor of suspending the operation of the law. I, as one member of the committee, desire to put myself on record as being very much opposed to a suspension of the law.

It is true that so far as newspapers are concerned 95 per cent of them circulate within a zone of 300 miles, and an amendment might not only well be made but should be made as to them, because they virtually bear the cost of transportation now; but in so far as periodicals generally are concerned, it seems to me, instead of flooding the office of every Senator and Representative with literature and getting up a propaganda all over the country, having letters written to Senators beseeching them to suspend the operation of the law, they had better be satisfied with the law as it is or as it will be on July 1, because under that law they will only pay a tithe of what the transportation actually costs. They will still be the recipients of an immense bounty and there is no reason for it. Their advertising rates can be raised to meet the cost of paper.

I wish to put myself on record as being against Government bounty. I do not believe the Government ought to give the periodical publishers a bounty unless they are going to give bounties to every other business in the country. They are on exactly the same platform with all other industries in the country, and if we are going to give a bounty to one we ought to give a bounty to the others. They are in the periodical business for the money that they make out of it, just like the man who has a farm is in the farming business for making money out of it, or to make a living out of it. If the Government gives the periodical publishers a bounty, why should it not give the farmer a bounty, the railroad man a bounty, and every class of our citizens a bounty?

It is undemocratic; it is unrepublican, unjust, and unfair to the taxpayers of the country to give a bounty to the owners of these large newspapers. I understand they are banded together in an organization, and they all stand fighting for this bounty; and every day of the week we get letters from those who as a rule do not understand what they are writing about when they write to their Senators urging them not to interfere with this bounty.

If the matter comes up on a vote on some bill to which it can be attached, or however it may come up, I hope it will be defeated. Let us give the law a trial. It is a law which was passed after a great deal of difficulty, and I hope the Senate will give it a fair trial before anything is done toward suspending it.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. GRONNA. I prefer to take the floor in my own time when the Senator is through.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The adoption of section 2 of the bill increasing the pay of postal employees necessitates a correction in the totals. The clerk of the committee has carefully figured out the increases that are necessary, and I send it to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clerk will be authorized to make corrections in the totals.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I understand that a separate vote has been asked on the amendment found on page 11, beginning with line 8, down to and including line 11.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I understand that the so-called zone system will not at this time be taken up, but there has been a great deal said in favor of either repealing the law or suspending it, and I wish to ask the indulgence of the Senate for just a few moments.

I wish to state that I have received a great many petitions from people of my State calling attention to the fact that they believe it is an injustice to the publishers of magazines and newspapers to increase the rates of postage and also creating what is known as the zone system. Of course those people have a perfect right to give their view of it, and as one Member of this body I welcome the letters and petitions. I trust the time will never come, at least I trust it will never come so long as I shall be a Member of this body, when any citizen of this country shall be denied his constitutional right of petitioning Congress.

I believe those people are mistaken. I do not believe that any injustice is being done the publishers of magazines or the publishers of the large newspapers.

In this connection I wish to ask the indulgence of the Senate to have read at the desk a letter from the publisher of a daily Democratic newspaper in my State and also a copy of a letter written by the same publisher to Mr. Rex Beach, and later on I shall ask to have an editorial read from a Republican newspaper. These people give their version of it.

I want to say to the Senate and to the country, if I can, that the newspaper publishers of the country are not all in favor of suspending the law. There are at least some of them who realize that they have some responsibility during this war. We must collect as much money as is possible, and although it may be a burden upon some of these people to have to pay an additional tax, I think every good citizen of the country is willing to bear such a burden at least during these strenuous times. I ask that the letters may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

DEVILS LAKE JOURNAL,
Devils Lake, N. Dak., March 1, 1918.

Hon. ASLE J. GRONNA,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: Writing as a country newspaper editor, may I call your attention to copy inclosed of letter I wrote recently to Rex Beach, president of Authors' League of America? It will present a different angle to this question of zone-rate advances on second-class mail from that supplied by the national magazine.

The only thing that will save the country press is the zone system.

That the second-class, 1-cent-a-pound rate supplies transportation literally to mountains of national magazines at tremendous loss is evident. A thing not quite so evident is that country papers, weekly and daily, due to the ruinous competition thus created, are in a far less prosperous condition than 30 years ago.

The practical working of the pound-rate law is about this: It distributes periodicals at a nearly free rate, which enables a great national magazine with enormous circulation to save thousands of dollars each issue, and a considerable part of these savings can be devoted to supplying attractive features for the journal, which will increase circulation. This will mean higher prices for advertising pages and a greater loss to the department.

This increase will be at the expense of the small local paper.

For to the small journal this saving of expense can not be put to such use. The amounts are small, and "betterments" that can be made will be slight and results, therefore, negligible.

If there has ever been in the past an excuse for postal service at less than cost, it could be wisely advised only in connection with dissemination of news, not of mere information, no matter how valuable the latter. Books also give information and generally more thoughtfully prepared, and pay a mailing rate of eight times that of the magazines.

Free or nearly free distribution for country newspapers does give a means of quickly getting to the rural and small-town residents the important news about current happenings, and this is the sole excuse for encouraging their development by an undercost charge for distribution.

No such argument exists in connection with the national magazine, which has of necessity to be prepared days or even weeks ahead of publication, and which can not by any possibility furnish news, for such information as the national magazine provides ceased to be news and became merely information 24 hours after it became public.

There is another feature to be thought of. Forty years ago publishing a country newspaper was a profession, not a business, and it should remain so. National magazines, declaiming in one breath against all "special privilege" and in the next formulating misleading, specious arguments in favor of their special privilege, have done far too much through their unfair competition to place this semiliterary occupation on a mere business plane, even to ruin it utterly.

Hoping to be favored with your attention, I remain,

Yours, sincerely,

J. H. BLOOM, Editor.

DEVILS LAKE, N. DAK.

Mr. REX BEACH, New York, N. Y.

DEAR SIR: I have your article advocating repeal of the new second-class postage rates which you kindly gave me first chance to publish here. I can not use this article, for I am not at all in sympathy with your position, nor is this very strange. You are a magazine and story writer; I just a plain country editor. We have no interests in common.

With the abolition of the railroad pass and other "something-for-nothing" privileges, there no longer exists any good reason why even newspapers should be dead-heading it at the post office. Whatever faint excuse there may have been at one time for the carriage at a loss by Government of newspapers, none has ever existed for so carrying magazines, for this nearly free carriage and distribution could be regarded as advisable only in connection with dissemination of news, not of mere information, no matter how valuable the latter. Books give information, generally more thoughtfully prepared. Free or nearly free distribution for country newspapers did give a means of quickly getting to rural and small-town residents important news about current happenings, but that argument never applied to the magazine, which of necessity is prepared days and even weeks ahead of publication. Its contents, while in some instances containing knowledge, by no possibility furnish news, for such information as is provided ceased to be news 24 hours after it was made public.

My objection to the new law is that it does not go far enough nor quick enough. If I had my way, the rates would jump until this handling of second-class mail became profitable. Subscribers who were unwilling to pay a proper price, based on cost, for favorite periodicals, would be of mighty little value to the community.

I live in a region of farmers, and so far as they are concerned know that they are literally pestered with "junk" masquerading as farm journals, and a law that would relieve them would be welcome. I am quite aware that many people have no high regard for the country press and consider it of little consequence. Likewise many people think that we have too many magazines which are entirely unsuited for admittance to respectable homes. They get their large circulations because, through "sponging" their transportation from the Government, they can afford to make enticing offers to subscribers, and having built a big circulation get a stiff price from advertisers. Moreover, these advertisements are simply circulars or third-class matter, save in method of distribution. As such, they should pay 8 cents per pound instead of 1.

They would give away circulation if the law permitted, and even now they circumvent it in every way possible. Here is one way in which farm journals get around it: With a subscription price of $1, a journal I have in mind gives a solicitor 95 cents for procuring the subscription, and then gives a premium to the farmer which costs 35 cents, though it is represented as worth $1.50. In one case of this sort 60,000 subscriptions out of 500,000 issue were taken because of a real desire for the farm journal, the entire remainder being induced by joint action of glib-tongued solicitor and fascinating "premium."

As a result, advertisers are "bilked" into giving business to "circulation" which few read, and the post office is burdened with distribution at a loss of mountains of trash. With popular magazines, the desire for increased circulation induces publishers to give agencies such rates that clubbing offers work a similar fraud upon the department and the advertiser. Wasted circulation is promoted. A subscriber who takes three periodicals, with aggregate list price of $3.50 for $2, may find that the first is one he does not want, the second his wife doesn't want, and the third neither wants.

I will admit I am mercenary in opposing, just as you are in exploiting, your program. I am opposed to classifying newspapers with magazines for postage purposes. Not only do newspapers render services to the public which entitle them to better rates but also the haul of the magazine is a thousand miles, and then some, while the newspaper goes perhaps 50 miles. When rates are based on common sense, the country paper will come into its own again, and the advertising that formerly appeared in its columns, but has of late been carried in magazines, will once more return there. Then its influence will increase, for advertising will protect its patrons against mail-order vampires, and the local merchant can once more afford to take space and exploit his wares, to the joint benefit of himself, the farmer, and the small paper.

THE ZONE SYSTEM IS THE SALVATION OF THE COUNTRY PAPER.

Every country newspaper in the United States should oppose your scheme of repeal, but they won't, for they haven't sense enough to do it. They will follow the lead of the big city papers and magazines of the East, and howl about the great injustice of the increase, as you so thrillingly put it, blissfully unconscious of the fact that by so doing they are assisting the chief agents of the mail-order houses in stealing away their trade.

Another point: I want any paper that comes into my territory from St. Paul, Chicago, and New York to pay well for the privilege; at least, let it pay cost. I have to pay freight on my paper which comes to me before it is printed and then I distribute it to near-by patrons by mail, and I object to the easterner getting his paper, just because it is printed, into my people's hands free or nearly so.

If our Congressmen do their duty by their constituents, the only change that will be made in the law will be to put more "teeth" into it, making second-class mail pay cost of handling.

Believe me, the noise the "big boys" are making is tuneful to me, but I am wondering if they can continue to get away with it. I know they should not, but they are a resourceful lot. It wasn't such a bad idea, either, to get you and the Authors' League to do some of the calamity howling.

Yours, very truly,

J. H. BLOOM,
Editor the Journal.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I do not wish to unduly delay the Senate, and while this editorial in the Minot Daily News I think would give Senators valuable information, I shall not ask to have it read, but ask to have it printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The editorial referred to is as follows:

[From the Minot Daily News and Minot Daily Optic-Reporter.]

DEMANDING NEWSPAPER GRAFT.

An organization calling itself the Publisher Advisory Board and representing the periodicals usually designated as magazines, is making a desperate effort to have the Congress suspend the operations of the zone systems of distribution for second-class mail matter until after the war. Every publisher in the country is urged to use his influence to accomplish this graft. The effort ought to fail. There has never been a more equitable or fairer law enacted than that of zone distribution of newspapers and magazines by the Post Office Department.

The method of charging in this system is identical with that of the parcel post. The rate of postage depends upon the distance the mail is carried. The publication of any periodical is a business matter. Even those which have some other alleged purpose—such as religious or scientific or educational—are at the bottom business propositions pure and simple. The Post Office Department is presumed to be for the benefit of all the people. Expediency and safety in the distribution of mail is a part of this service. But when an individual, by enlarging a private business, makes his individual benefits from that service a burden on others he is getting more than his share of public benefit and should be compelled to desist. The publishers of the long-haul periodicals have been getting that advantage, and they now are complaining because they have been jarred loose from the graft.

Under the present law a magazine or newspaper is carried in the mails from New York to San Francisco for the same price per pound the Daily News is carried from Minot to Towner. The zone system, which has already been enacted into law, provides that the rates shall be a certain amount within a specified distance from the point of publication, and that for each additional distance there shall be an additional charge, so that the publications would have to pay more for the transportation of their mail from New York to Chicago than they would from New York to Newark.

Any business man knows it costs more to haul large freight supplies for a long distance than it does for a short distance. That proposition is too clear to require elucidation. The bulk of some of the magazines reaches into a million and a quarter pounds every week. The current issue of the Saturday Evening Post weighs over a pound per copy, though this is above the average. It never weighs less than a half pound per copy. It claims a circulation of two and a half million copies. This week the Government carried 2,500,000 pounds of mail for the publishers of that publication all over the United States for 2 cents a pound. That was 2,500 tons of mail. It would require fifty 50-ton freight cars to carry the weight. Yet the publishers of that periodical are able to have it hauled everywhere for a mere pittance.

There is a difference between the service of the Nation in the distribution of first-class mail and second class. The former serves all the people. The latter is for the benefit of the few. The cost for the individual service on first-class mail matter is negligible. On the second class it is a burden, because of the bulk and benefits those who so invest their money as to take advantage of the opportunity to graft. Speed is the element of service in first-class matter. It enters largely into the service for actual newspapers. But the magazines, which are the ones opposing the enforcement of the present law, have no such claim. These periodicals are printed days before they are placed in the mails. The "forms" are closed weeks in advance of the publication. They do not pretend to furnish news. Much of their contents are advance publications of books which later appear between covers. There is therefore no reason why the public should be fleeced to pay for the distribution of such material when there is no demand on the part of the public for expedition of the distribution of the information.

The freight on the white paper upon which the Daily News is printed costs more from the mills in Minnesota to Minot than the New York and other eastern publications pay the Government for carrying the same number of pounds of their printed editions from those points to California, and included in the cost to them is the work of post-office distribution and the initial cost of mailing out from the post office of entry. The Daily News must unload its own paper.

The newspapers and magazines should pay a rate of postage to the Government which would allow the department to break even instead of running behind. The paper which objects to paying that much is a grafter. It is impossible to distribute any sort of publication without the service of the post office. But that service should be paid for. It is no more justice to give publishers the benefit of such service at less than it costs than it would be to extend the service to wagon makers and allow them to distribute their products through the mails at less than cost.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I simply want to say that the people of North Dakota, the farmers, the newspaper publishers, and all others, are willing to bear the burden of taxation during this war. The publishers of the newspapers in my State are not asking for any special privileges. The farmers have never asked for any special privileges.

While I am on my feet I wish to say to the Senate now, that in the face of two failures of crops the farmers of my State raised 153 per cent of our allotted quota for the third liberty loan. The newspapers of my State, large and small, have willingly contributed all the space for advertising that was necessary; they have given it willingly; and, Mr. President, I am glad that these men are not asking for a repeal or for an extension of the law which will go into effect on July 1 this year. The editors and owners of newspapers in my State are willing to assume their share of responsibility during the war.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, I do not want to detain the Senate, but I do want to express my gratification at hearing the statement that the Senator from Indiana is not to press the motion of which he gave notice some days ago. At the time this war broke out the Postal Department was making a clear profit of over $70,000,000 a year out of first-class postage—letters and postal cards—while it was losing substantially an equal amount—$70,000,000 a year—on second-class matter. The rate on letters was 2 cents an ounce or a fraction thereof, and on second-class matter it was 1 cent a pound or a fraction thereof. The Senate will catch at once the enormous discrepancy in the rates; and yet, although we were making a handsome profit—many millions of dollars a year—out of first-class postage which was paid by the great mass of the people of this Republic, we increased letter postage, as a war measure, 50 per cent, and we increased the postage on post cards 100 per cent. It is estimated that we shall raise $70,000,000 a year from those increases. All well and good. The people have paid it without a murmur; they thought it was necessary, and it is necessary, in order to prosecute this war, to raise as much revenue as we can from every possible source.

But what did we do with reference to second-class mail matter? We put on that an increase that amounted to almost nothing, an increase from which we shall get $5,000,000 the first year, $8,000,000 the second year, and something like $16,000,000 the third and last year. Even when the $16,000,000 period has arrived we shall still be carrying second-class mail matter at a loss of $54,000,000 per year.

Of this second-class mail matter 40 per cent, in round numbers, of the shortage can be traced to newspaper publications and 60 per cent to magazines. It is estimated by the Post Office Department that of the $5,000,000 we shall raise in addition the first year of this increase provided for in the revenue bill but $2,000,000 will come from the newspapers. Yet some of these newspapers from which we have exacted only $2,000,000 more, when they were responsible for 40 per cent of the deficit of $70,000,000, are asking to have this insignificant increase repealed even before it is tried. Mr. President, there is no excuse whatever for such action on their part. That the request should be seriously entertained is, in my judgment, almost an affront to the intelligence and fair-mindedness and independence of this body.

It is inconceivable, to my mind, that we should be willing to put the heavy increased burdens that we have put on the great masses of the people in the increase on first-class postal rates—

50 per cent on letters and 100 per cent on postal cards—and then not be willing to continue a small per cent—something like 25 per cent increase—on these people who use the second-class mail privilege, from which, as I have said, we are losing $70,000,000 a year.

It is, therefore, a matter of some gratification to me to be able, at the request of the Post Office Department, to submit to the Senate a resolution recently adopted by the publishers in one of the great States of this Union protesting against such action and insisting that the revenue bill shall be allowed to go into effect. I refer to the State of Missouri. I ask, Mr. President, that the Secretary read to the Senate the communication which I send to the desk from publishers of that State.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS. I am informed that second-class mail matter constitutes about four-fifths of the mail that is carried and distributed by the Post Office authorities. Is that correct?

Mr. HARDWICK. I presume that is right—in bulk, in volume.

Mr. THOMAS. So that because this class of mail constitutes four-fifths in bulk of the mail under conditions preexisting, we lose about $70,000,000 per year; and the only effect of this slight increase in rates upon this class of matter is to reduce that deficit about $5,000,000.

Mr. HARDWICK. That is all; and that is what they are objecting to; in other words, we shall say during the next fiscal year, "We do not want to lose more than $65,000,000 on you people, instead of $70,000,000"; and they object seriously to that.

Mr. THOMAS. I should perhaps inform the Senator, as he was out of the Chamber at the time the motion was withdrawn, that it was stated that the Finance Committee had a bill which was in contemplation of a favorable report, and that was given as one of the reasons. I want to assure the Senator that, as a member of the Finance Committee, that measure will not receive my support.

Mr. HARDWICK. I am very glad to hear it; and I believed the Senator would take that position. I now ask that the Secretary read the communication which I have sent to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

COLUMBIA, Mo.

POSTMASTER GENERAL BURLESON,
Washington, D. C.:

Whereas there is a concerted move on the part of certain national advertising periodicals to persuade Congress to rescind what is known as the zone system of second-class postage, effective July 1;

Whereas the Missouri Press Association, representing 325 publishers in the State of Missouri, believe that said zone law does not impose unfair postage rates, and that it will in no sense hamper the dissemination of news and intelligence in our Nation: Be it

Resolved, That the Missouri Press Association hereby demands that each Senator and Member of Congress stand firm in opposition to the proposed repeal of the zone system of second-class postage.

J. P. TUCKER, President.
LEWIS LAMKIN, Secretary.

Mr. CALDER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 14, after line 13, it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided, That the rate of postage on drop letters of the first class, mailed in the city of New York for delivery within the confines of that city, shall be 2 cents an ounce or fraction thereof.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, the Post Office Department has interpreted the law relative to drop letters to mean that a letter mailed within a post-office district for delivery within that district shall be carried to its destination for 2 cents. Under that interpretation, a letter mailed in any part of the city of Washington, if addressed to a point within the city, is delivered for 2 cents. The same thing is true of the cities of Chicago, Philadelphia, St. Louis, and, in fact, of all the large cities of the country, excepting New York City and those few cities that are in more than one State. In New York City, for some reason or other, we still retain our postmasters in the boroughs of Brooklyn, Queens, and Richmond, so that we have a situation where the boroughs of Manhattan and The Bronx make one post-office district and the boroughs of Brooklyn, Queens, and Richmond are different post-office districts. Despite the fact that we are one complete municipality, under the Post Office Department ruling a letter mailed at the Battery, the lower end of Manhattan Island, is carried to the upper end of The Bronx—in fact, it is carried beyond the limits of The Bronx, for The Bronx post office carries mail outside of the limits of the borough—for 2 cents; but if it is mailed at the lower end of Manhattan Island for delivery across the East River in Brooklyn, a distance of a mile, 3 cents is required.

This condition could be remedied, of course, by the abolition of the Brooklyn postmaster's place. I do not come here with that proposition. There are good reasons, perhaps, in the minds of some people why the Brooklyn postmaster should be retained; but it does seem to me that in this great city, where immense postal revenues are derived and where the great profit of the Post Office Department is earned, we should have the mail delivered for the 2-cent rate, as it is in all the other large cities of the country.

I may say, Mr. President, that this will not cost the Government a very large sum, because the business concerns having offices in New York, as most of our principal establishments do, and factories and branch offices in Brooklyn, are able to send their mail through with very little additional postage; but the individual or smaller business concern, who merely mails few letters to some other part of the city, is inconvenienced many times by being asked to put an additional stamp on his letter, and to him the loss, if any, comes.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. CALDER. I do.

Mr. THOMAS. Does not the Senator think that the adoption of this amendment would encourage similar legislation in behalf of cities that are located as are Jersey City, Newark, and Hoboken?

Mr. CALDER. No.

Mr. THOMAS. They each have separate post offices.

Mr. CALDER. But they are separate municipalities.

Mr. THOMAS. Well, the only difference is, then, that while Brooklyn and New York have separate post offices, they are not separate municipalities. That, it seems to me, is a distinction almost without a difference, inasmuch as the Government operates post offices absolutely distinct from each other in both instances.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, the Post Office Department can at any time it feels so disposed abolish any one of these post offices. Why it has not done so is a matter for them to determine.

Mr. THOMAS. That is true.

Mr. CALDER. If the Senator will permit me, there is a condition in Boston which is peculiar. The Boston post office delivers mail not only to Boston itself, but to 11 adjoining cities and 13 other outlying country towns for the 2-cent drop-letter rate.

Mr. THOMAS. The other towns having separate post offices?

Mr. CALDER. The other towns having branches of the Boston post office.

Mr. THOMAS. Then it would seem that the course of the department is dictated by unities of post-office establishments?

Mr. CALDER. That is true.

Mr. THOMAS. The cities of Minneapolis and St. Paul, in Minnesota, have a collective population of something over a million; their boundaries practically adjoin, and if we should establish the precedent which the Senator's amendment would certainly establish, I can see no reason why we should reject efforts to establish similar conditions in places similarly situated. I think the Senator's method of procedure would better be the abolition of the post office in Brooklyn. I freely acknowledge that, inasmuch as Brooklyn is a part of another city, one post office ought to answer them both. I would prefer to see the Senator get at it in that way.

Mr. CALDER. This seems to me a very just proposition. I know the matter could be arranged differently if the Post Office Department were disposed to arrange it, but if they are not so disposed I can not see any reason why that great crowded center of the country, which furnishes, as I have said, a large profit to the postal business of the Nation, should be required to suffer.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator from New York will permit me to interrupt him, in connection with the question he has been discussing, I will advert to my own little city of Concord, N. H., where, I think, there are six offices separate from the main office. They are in charge of clerks—"clerks in charge" I think they are called—but the post offices are maintained at the expense of the Government just the same. Not only does a 2-cent stamp carry first-class mail in Concord, East Concord, and West Concord, which are all in the town, as we call it in the East—"township," I believe, they call it in the West—but it likewise under the Rural Delivery System carries to two or three other towns outside which are subordinate to the Concord office.

It seems to me that the Senator's contention is well grounded, and the fact that there is a post office in Brooklyn, as it appears to me, is no different from the fact that there is a post office at Henniker, N. H., to which the post office at Concord sends first-class mail for 2 cents. The offices there, aside from the main office, are in charge of clerks; that is the only distinction.

Mr. CALDER. I thank the Senator for his explanation of the situation in his own community, and I hope the Senate will adopt the amendment I have offered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 31, after line 4, it is proposed to insert the following as a new section:

SEC. —. During the present war such provisions of the postal laws and regulations which prohibit the appointment of married women to the position of clerk or carrier in the Post Office Service shall not apply to such married women who have either husbands or sons in the military or naval service of the United States.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I offer this amendment after receiving a letter from the Civil Service Commission advising me that a woman, a resident of the city of New York, and married to a man in the military service who is now in France at the battle front, after passing the civil-service examination was prevented from receiving an appointment because she was a married woman. It seems to me that the postal laws should be amended so as to provide for such a case as that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, and I hope that the chairman of the committee will accept it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 32, after line 13, it is proposed to insert after the amendment heretofore agreed to the following as a new section:

SEC. —. The office of postmaster in each class shall hereafter be a nonpolitical office and shall be within the classified civil service, and appointments thereto shall be made in accordance with civil-service rules and so far as practicable by promotion or transfer upon merit, without regard to politics, from the employees of the Post Office Department subject to the permanent civil-service regulations and requirements.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I am compelled to make the point of order against the amendment that it is general legislation on an appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Has the Senator from Washington anything to say with reference to the point of order made by the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am inclined to think that the point of order will lie under the rules of the Senate, Mr. President. I am very sorry that the chairman of the committee makes the point of order. The amendment is a mighty good one. It would improve the bill a great deal.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained. The bill is still in Committee of the Whole, and open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Baird	Kendrick	Norris	Smoot
Bankhead	Kenyon	Nugent	Sterling
Calder	King	Overman	Swanson
Chamberlain	Kirby	Page	Thomas
Curtis	Lenroot	Pittman	Thompson
Dillingham	Lewis	Poindexter	Townsend
Fernald	Lodge	Pomerene	Trammell
France	McCumber	Robinson	Underwood
Gallinger	McKellar	Shafroth	Vardaman
Gronna	McNary	Sheppard	Watson
Hale	Martin	Sherman	Weeks
Hardwick	Myers	Shields	Wilfley
Jones, Wash.	New	Simmons

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-one Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present. The question is, Shall the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole be concurred in, except those for which reservations have been made?

The amendments not reserved were concurred in.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, upon yesterday I gave notice reserving the right to have a separate vote in the Senate on the amendment proposed by the committee authorizing the purchase and operation of the pneumatic-tube system in the different cities where it is now in operation, and I want to discuss that matter briefly a little further.

I understand that there is no moral obligation upon the Government and no contractual obligation upon the part of the Government to either buy or operate this system of tubes for the distribution of mail. I not only understand that such is the fact, but also that it is admitted to be the fact by the owners of the pneumatic-tube system. If there is any doubt about that proposition, I should like to have some one who is on the other side of this question challenge the statement now.

Since there is no doubt about that proposition, it seems to me that the only thing that ought to be considered now is whether this sort of a system will facilitate the distribution of the mail, whether it is desirable or necessary. The matters to be considered in determining that are whether the use of this system accelerates speed in distribution, reliability of service, and economy in its operation.

Upon yesterday, or the day before, the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] said that he did not regard highly the report of the minority of the committee, because only one man out of six who examined the matter recommended adversely to the purchase of the tube system. Now, we might go a little bit further along that line and strengthen that proposition about the recommendations having been favorable or not.

In 1901, under the act of June 13, 1898, there was a report by the joint commission composed of Edward O. Wolcott, W. B. Allison, Thomas S. Martin, E. F. Loud, W. H. Moody, T. C. Catchings, and William H. Fleming, which concluded as follows:

While we believe that all means should be utilized to insure the most rapid transmission and delivery of mails possible, we do not believe that the pneumatic-tube service in its present stage of development is sufficiently expeditious to warrant the enormous outlay of public money that must be called for if this service were generally extended. We must enter the field of discussion and suggest that if a tube could be constructed and operated which would transmit a full pouch of mail from post office to railroad station or railroad station to post office for a reasonable amount of money, or that a smaller and less expensive tube might be used for city service for the transmission of letters from post-office station to post-office station, which should bear an additional charge to reimburse the Government, that it might be for the best interests of the service and the people to continue an appropriation for that purpose.

But we prefer to confine ourselves to present conditions and the conclusions that we have reached from our examinations and the testimony before us. We, therefore, recommend that, under existing conditions, the pneumatic-tube service be discontinued.

That was the unanimous report of a joint commission appointed by law to investigate this system.

There was another report made by a commission appointed by the Postmaster General under the act of May 27, 1908. This commission was composed of Daniel A. Campbell, postmaster, Chicago, Ill.; George H. Roberts, postmaster, Brooklyn, N. Y.; E. C. Mansfield, postmaster, Boston, Mass.; Frank Wyman, postmaster, St. Louis, Mo.; Joseph Stewart, Second Assistant Postmaster General; V. J. Bradley, Superintendent Railway Mail Service; E. M. Norris, Assistant Superintendent Division of Salaries and Allowances; J. M. Masten, Assistant Superintendent Railway Mail Service.

The unanimous conclusion and recommendation of this commission as to the advisability of purchasing the tubes were as follows:

The present contracts under which the tube companies are performing mail service will not expire until June 30, 1916—almost eight years hence. During that period there should be ample opportunity for the companies to perfect the systems and for the Post Office Department to observe the effect upon the postal service. Further, during that period it is possible that other methods of transportation will be developed or improved so as to change entirely the outlook as it now appears. Five or six years hence, we believe, it will be advisable to renew the consideration of the question of Government ownership.

In view of the foregoing, we consider it appropriate to advise you that, in our opinion, it is not feasible and desirable at the present time for the Government to purchase, to install, or to operate the pneumatic tubes, and this is our unanimous judgment.

On September 13, 1909, Great Britain appointed a commission to investigate and ascertain whether it was desirable to have an underground system of delivery and distribution of mail in London. That commission visited the United States, carefully examined into our system of pneumatic-tube distribution of mail in these cities, and went back to Great Britain and reported unanimously that they found no improvement in the system as operated there over the ordinary road van by which it was distributed in England. That was the report of that commission.

It seems to me that gives a fairly good idea of the result of the different investigations and reports; and the majority of them are against the purchase and operation of this system of pneumatic-tube service by the Government.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. KIRBY. Yes.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator has mentioned two commissions that have considered this subject. Can the Senator put into the RECORD how many commissions altogether in this country have considered the question, and how many of them have favored the Government taking over the tubes and how many have been against it?

Mr. KIRBY. I am not in possession of that information, and therefore I can not answer the Senator's question.

Mr. KENYON. But the majority of the commissions have been against it, as I understand.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, the Senator is in error. It is all found in the report, beginning on page 10 and going through several pages.

Mr. KENYON. The report of the joint commission?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes, sir. Beginning at page 10, you will find a résumé of what every commission has reported, both congressional and departmental, that has ever passed on this matter.

Mr. KENYON. What does the Senator from Georgia say as to that question?

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator from Arkansas will yield to me for a moment, Mr. President——

Mr. KENYON. I am sure he will.

Mr. KIRBY. I yield.

Mr. HARDWICK. One congressional committee, appointed in the Fifty-seventh Congress, recommended that the service be discontinued. It was discontinued, in accordance with that recommendation, in 1902. The discontinuation lasted just exactly one year, when the same commission that had recommended that it be discontinued recommended that it be resumed, and it has been maintained ever since.

Mr. KENYON. Are those the only two commissions?

Mr. HARDWICK. Oh, no. There were 4 congressional commissions and about 12 departmental committees. I will say that the only congressional commission that ever held against it was the one that acted in the Fifty-seventh Congress, the members of which reversed their position, or at least it was reversed by the Congress immediately succeeding that, and I think the Members were still in office. The service was reestablished as soon as they tried one year of doing without it. The other congressional commissions have been the other way; and of the departmental committees—something like a dozen—I know of but one that has ever decided against the thing directly.

Mr. KENYON. That answers my question.

Mr. KIRBY. As I understand, even in the case of the reports of these committees that have recommended the continuance of this service, there never has been a unanimous report. I may be wrong about that, but I do not think so.

Now, as to the question about the speed of transmission of these letters, unless the service can be improved somewhat by it, and unless it is more reliable, or more economical, this sort of a burden certainly ought not to be imposed upon the Government. I want to read you a statement from Hon. MARTIN B. MADDEN, of Chicago, who is now a Member of Congress, and who made a statement before this committee. It is found on page 366 of the hearing of December, 1913. Here is his statement:

> Would you be surprised to know that an investigation that I made of the pneumatic-tube service in Chicago led me to the conclusion that it was a service of no special value, except in the matter of the 12 minutes' time saved in closing the mail; that they would have to close 12 minutes earlier if they did not use the service; but that all mail sent through the pneumatic tubes from the office to the railway stations had to be broken up and be put in small packages in order to put it through the tubes at all, and then it had to be redistributed for transportation over the railroad at a cost of $60,000. A number of clerks sufficient to consume $60,000 a year in pay had to be maintained to put that mail back into form. Perhaps it might surprise you to be told that I could take a wheelbarrow from the main post office and start up to any of the ordinary railroad stations with it and load it in and get it mailed on the train as quick as the pneumatic-tube service taking the time for redistribution into consideration.

This mail, he says, can be transported from the main office down to any particular railroad line in a wheelbarrow in the time that it takes to shoot it through the pneumatic tube and redistribute it at an additional cost of $60,000, after it has gotten there. That is Mr. MADDEN'S view about it, and he lives in Chicago, where this system is in force, and he is a Member of the Congress now, and on the Post Office Committee.

It has been said that this system contributes to the speed or that it facilitates delivery; but I find that there is a great difference of opinion, so far as that is concerned, on the part of the Post Office Department and the postmasters and the committee recommending the purchase. I understand that about 150,000,000 letters were delayed in transmission in New York last year by this system. I understand that in Chicago the records show that for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, there had to be diverted from the tube service and delivered by automobile 8,160 pouches of mail, and during the same time in the automobile service there only had to be changed 154 pouches, and they were only slightly delayed. That indicates the difference as to speed in the delivery of letters. Eight thousand one hundred and sixty pouches were delayed on account of the breakdown and inability of the tubes to handle the particular class of mail handled by them, and only 154 pouches were delayed at all in automobile delivery. There is a good, big difference there.

It was said when this system was established that it would facilitate or encourage increasing the volume of mail, and that on that account it ought to be installed and that its use ought to be continued; but a comparative statement has been made as to 50 of the great cities of the United States, showing that in the six cities where this pneumatic-tube service is installed and in operation the volume has increased only eighty-nine and a fraction per cent, while in the remainder of the 50 cities there has been an increase of over 113 per cent in the volume of the kind of mail transmitted by these tubes. The system has fallen down in that respect, if it was ever expected that it could do anything.

It was said that the tube system would reduce the cost of delivery of special-delivery letters, but it never has done that. There is not a record anywhere that shows that it has done it. It has not done it, and no man will stand on this floor and say it has.

It was claimed that the tube system would reduce the expense because of reduction in the clerical force necessary to carry on the work with it; but I find that it costs $70,000 a year more in additional clerical force in one of the cities because of the operation of these tubes. I do not know as to the others. It delays the mail longer than it is delayed in the automobile transit generally, and there is more of it delayed.

It was claimed that more mail was lost by theft in the above-ground transportation and delivery of it than through the pneumatic tubes. An investigation was made in one city because of complaints there, and it was found that in a whole year only four men had been arrested there because of any loss of mail or theft from the mail in connection with the above-ground transit, while more than 10 had been arrested because of theft of mail from the pneumatic-tube service, so that certainly there is no advantage in that respect.

It is said that certain of the cities where these systems are in operation have passed resolutions, by their councils and boards of aldermen, asking that it be retained and continued; but it will not be said upon the floor of the Senate that any one of those councils, before passing that sort of a resolution, has called upon the Postmaster General, or the postmaster of the city, or the postal experts, to determine whether or not the facts stated in the resolution were true.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me——

Mr. KIRBY. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. So far as this service is concerned, I have knowledge of two cities only. Those cities are New York and Boston. If it be possible, as the Senator is arguing, that this system does not facilitate the transportation and delivery of the mails, how is it that every newspaper in those cities, and every person of those cities that I have ever talked with, is in favor of it?

Mr. KIRBY. Because they want to unload it on the Government for $4,000,000. They do not want to lose the property entirely, and necessarily the people in the town and the newspapers insist that they shall have the service because they have had it.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator does not man to say that the general public are in favor of unloading this service on the Government because there is any financial interest in it on their part, does he?

Mr. KIRBY. Oh, I do not mean that they are employed or hired or corrupted; no.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will go into the city of Boston, with which I am very familiar—I have traversed almost every street in it—and find one-thousandth part of the people who are not in favor of the tube service, he will discover something that I do not think exists. In fact, I do not think he will find anybody who is not in favor of it.

Mr. KIRBY. And if the Senator will investigate, I do not know but that he will find that the people who are interested financially in the operation of these tubes are interested in some of the newspapers that are insisting upon their retention. I do not know about that. I do not state that as a fact.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is absurd.

Mr. KIRBY. But I do state that the councils that have passed resolutions favoring the retention of these systems have not called before them the postmasters of any of the towns, or the Postmaster General, or the postal experts of the United States, in considering the passage of these resolutions.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, may I suggest to the Senator from Arkansas that there is a vast amount of testimony available on that subject, taken before the House Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads and the Senate Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, and the fact that these organizations, in cities where the tubes exist, have passed resolutions in favor of their retention is based almost universally on a careful investigation by suitable committees of those organizations, advised by experts employed by the organizations. The business men of these tube cities wish to have the best post-office facilities available or possible; and, fearing that they may lose what they consider a good facility, they have taken pains to investigate the matter. If the Senator will examine what the Merchants' Association of the City of New York—one of the greatest associations of this country—have done in the investigation of this subject, I think even he will be satisfied that their judgment was unbiased and that they were simply looking for a postal facility which would advance their mails and their business, and nothing else.

Mr. KIRBY. I do not know how that may be, but the facts are as I have stated. I have not stated anything here, as I understand, that is not absolutely borne out by all the facts and by the testimony before this commission.

Another thing: I understand that of that portion of the mail that can be distributed through these tubes 87 per cent can be taken care of and distributed as expeditiously as it is now handled by the tube system without purchasing another screen wagon or automobile in those cities to deliver it; that 87 per cent of the mail that is sent through the tubes can be delivered by the same system of delivery that we have now without adding to or increasing it, and the Government, in order to deliver the other 13 per cent——

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, will the Senator tell me where he gets that information?

Mr. KIRBY. Yes; I got that from some report here.

Mr. HARDWICK. Not from the report of the commission.

Mr. KIRBY. Eighty-seven per cent is what the minority have estimated.

Mr. HARDWICK. That is what I thought.

Mr. KIRBY. Well, does the majority report dispute it?

Mr. HARDWICK. Why, undoubtedly we do. We have never conceded that.

Mr. KIRBY. Where in your report have you said anything at all about it?

Mr. HARDWICK. I will show the Senator.

Mr. KIRBY. I shall be glad to have the Senator show me. That is taken from the briefs, too, and the data and the testimony.

Now, another matter. Ninety-five per cent of all the mail distributed through these cities, as I understand, is distributed by vehicular transportation. Is that right? Ninety-five per cent, anyway, of all the mail distributed in the cities where these systems obtain is distributed already by the regular system of screen wagons and automobiles.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, does the Senator refer to the first-class mail, which is all that the tube system attempts to handle?

Mr. KIRBY. I am talking about the entire mail.

Mr. HARDWICK. Oh, well, 75 per cent of all the mail is handled that way, anyway.

Mr. KIRBY. I say 95 per cent of it is distributed through the other system, as I understand, and I do not think that will be disputed or denied. Ninety-five per cent of the entire mail is distributed in that way, as I have stated, and I understand the other figures that I have stated here to be correct. As I understand it, not half of the letter mail is carried in these tubes in the cities where they have installed them.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. KIRBY. I do.

Mr. WEEKS. I have not in mind just now what percentage of the mail, based on weight, is carried by vehicles, and what percentage is carried through the tubes; but the Senator must remember that the parcel post and all other classes of mail are carried by vehicles and never carried by tubes. It may be 90 per cent or 85 per cent or 95 per cent; I will not dispute that; but the reason why a greater percentage of the first-class mail is not carried by the tubes in the cities where the tubes are located is because they do not go into all the stations in the cities. They go to a limited number of stations; but the testimony is, as far as those stations are concerned, that the tubes are capable of carrying all the first-class mail if they are used for that purpose.

Mr. KIRBY. That may be true, Mr. President. I have no disposition to dispute that; but this system is so expensive that it only operates along certain streets or between certain stations in certain cities. It has never been regarded as of sufficient value to extend it, and all the people even there do not have the benefit of this facility that is supplied to part of the people. It would not be so with the right kind of mail delivery or with the other regular system of delivery. I understand further than that even Stone & Webster in their report showed that while certain of the mails were distributed through the tubes a little more rapidly to certain sections, that taking it all together a great deal of it was not distributed as speedily as it would go if it were in the regular vans, street wagons, or automobiles. Those are things that can not be very well gotten around. Those are facts that can not be disputed. Then why should we pay $4,000,000 for a system that certainly does not conduce to speed the service greatly, that is not as reliable as the overground or automobile system, unquestionably, and is certainly greatly more expensive in operation?

We owe no obligation to the people who own these things morally or contractually to buy or to continue the use of them. We have a Post Office Department down here that is supposed to be in charge of the postal affairs of this country. That Post Office Department says this tube system is unreasonably expensive, is out of date, and that it is ineffectual to deliver the mails of the cities rapidly and in a reliable way and at reasonable cost. The other postal experts likewise join in that kind of a statement. I understand it is further true that if this system is bought and $4,000,000 paid for it the mail can be distributed then without using it at all at a saving of over half a million dollars a year by leaving the tubes stand idle and distributing the mail above ground in the usual method.

Why, then, should we buy this pneumatic-tube system? The experts say we do not need it, the Post Office Department says we ought not to have it, and if you do buy it that you would better not require the use of it longer because it would cause a great waste of money for the Government in the operation of it; that it does not facilitate the transmission of enough mail to justify its use at all.

That is the condition here which confronts us, and yet we are expected to buy it and to pay for it and to operate it at this enormous expense. I do not believe it ought to be done. I do not think there is any reason that has been stated here that would justify it under these conditions, and when the Post Office Department, which is trusted to take care of all these things and the operation of the entire postal system, says our department regards the system as worn out, useless junk. Our experts have made recommendation against its purchase. Notwithstanding all this the majority report recommends the purchase and the owners expect it, but this sort of recommendation ought not to be followed, and these things ought not to be unloaded on the Government of the United States at this time when we need all the money we can get to conduct the war properly.

I should like further to say in regard to the statement made by me a few minutes ago about carrying additional mail, if tubes are discontinued, that could not be carried without extending the present automobile service, it would require in New York or in Chicago only 20 new automobiles; in Philadelphia, 23; in Boston, 8 small trucks; and in St. Louis 4 would carry the additional mail. The present service, with these additional machines, would carry all the mail.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, my information is that no member of the Post Office Committee desires to discuss this matter further. I do not know that any Senator on the floor cares to discuss it. It has been very thoroughly discussed during the time the bill has been before the Senate, and I indulge the hope that we may have a vote on the question and dispose of it one way or another. I think it ought to go to conference. What the conferees will work out I can not tell, but they will reach some solution of it. I hope the Senate is ready to vote.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I had intended to discuss the amendment somewhat, but I am not going to do it except to ask for the yeas and nays on concurring in the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. On agreeing to the amendment, the yeas are 26, the nays 21. Senators MCCUMBER, WATSON, WEEKS, FERNALD, and DILLINGHAM being present, the Chair declares the amendment agreed to. The bill is in the Senate and still open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment, the question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. BANKHEAD, Mr. HARDWICK, and Mr. TOWNSEND conferees on the part of the Senate.

GUTZON BORGLUM.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President I send to the desk a telegram and ask that it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read it.

The Secretary read as follows:

STAMFORD, CONN., May 16.

Senator BRANDEGEE,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.:

I was acting as I believed correct in asking you to place my reply before Senate. Will you kindly give papers to some Senator who may regularly do this. I can not let slanderous affirmations without proof be brought before Senate without reply, and, of course, no one wishes to deprive me of the right to answer.

GUTZON BORGLUM.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I simply wish to say that yesterday afternoon a messenger came to my house with a card from Mr. Borglum and handed to me some papers which are in this envelope [exhibiting]. Mr. Borglum evidently wants me to put them in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. There are here two letters from Mr. Borglum containing serious charges against gentlemen about whom I have no knowledge, and there are affidavits here denying the charges that were made publicly on the floor of the Senate against Mr. Borglum—affidavits of Mr. Mix and of one other gentleman in the British service, whose name was associated with that of Mr. Borglum.

Mr. GALLINGER. Gibson.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Yes; Gibson.

It does seem to me that when a man like Mr. Borglum, who has, hitherto at least, been considered to be a respectable gentleman, is attacked upon the floor of the United States Senate, and the charges go into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and all over the country, he is entitled at least to a hearing and to a refutation or a chance to refute the charges that have been made against him. I do not know whether he is innocent or guilty, or whether the gentlemen against whom he makes the charges are innocent or guilty. The charges that he makes here are so serious and grave that I would hesitate to stand sponsor for them, for I know nothing about them. Hence I will not ask to have them put into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I am simply standing here, in view of the telegrams he sends me demanding some sort of a chance to vindicate his character, to ask that these papers, just as I have received them, be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs in confidence, for their information, and for them to take such action upon them as they think is wise and expedient. I am not going to suppress them; I do not think I ought to pocket them; and I do not feel that at this stage I ought to make them public; but there they are, and I ask that that action be taken.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I will say that the Committee on Military Affairs are not particularly interested in any row that Mr. Borglum has with any other individual; but if that committee is permitted to go ahead with the investigation, or if it does go ahead with the investigation, it will hear Mr. Borglum as to facts but not as to any quarrels he may have with individuals. The committee will also be glad to hear from anybody else that can produce any facts whatsoever that bear upon the situation. So Mr. Borglum will have an opportunity if our committee proceeds; there is no question about that.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have no doubt whatever of that, Mr. President. I have the utmost confidence in the Senator from Oregon and in the Committee on Military Affairs—both sides of it, Democrats and Republicans. There are no better set of men in this country than the Committee on Military Affairs, and there is no more patriotic body.

I simply say that a gentleman whom I know to be a man of standing in my State has sent me charges of the character involved in these papers, which I have looked over, and which I do not care to make public, because, if they are true, somebody is a criminal. I know nothing about it, and I am in the position either of having to suppress the whole thing and decline to do anything with it or else to have some authorized body of the Senate take jurisdiction of it. I think the Senator, when he reads these papers, which are accompanied by sworn affidavits, will think there is something in these charges. I do not know how much or what, but I have perfect confidence in the Senator from Oregon and in the Senator's committee. I do not, however, want to be put in the position, as I say, of squelching charges that are made; neither do I want to be put in the position of publishing stuff that, if untrue, is libelous. Therefore I ask that the papers be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs in confidence, and let them use their judgment about what to do with them.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the request is granted.

CONSIDERATION OF UNOBJECTED BILLS.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed with the consideration of the calendar under Rule VIII of bills to the consideration of which there is no objection, beginning where we left off this morning.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

JAMES DUFFY.

The bill (S. 921) for the relief of James Duffy was announced as first in order on the calendar, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes that in the administration of the pension laws and the laws conferring rights and privileges upon honorably discharged soldiers, their widows and dependent relatives, James Duffy, late of Company A, Twenty-fourth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of that organization on the 6th of October, 1862; but no pay, pension, bounty, or other emolument shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EDWARD W. WHITAKER.

The bill (S. 2646) for the relief of Edward W. Whitaker was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the President to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint Edward W. Whitaker, late lieutenant colonel First Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Cavalry, and brevet brigadier general, United States Volunteers, a lieutenant colonel of Cavalry in the Army of the United States; and, when so appointed, he shall be placed upon the retired list of the Army, unlimited, with the pay and emoluments of a retired officer of that grade, the retired list being thereby increased in number to that extent; but on receiving the retired pay under this act he shall relinquish all his right and claim to pension from the United States after the date of the passage of this act, and any payment made to him covering a period subsequent to the passage of this act shall be deducted from the amount due him on the first payment under this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

KATHERINE MACDONALD.

The bill (S. 2975) for the relief of Katherine Macdonald was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let that bill go over, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill goes over.

HOMESTEAD AND DESERT-LAND ENTRYMEN.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3439) for the relief of certain homestead and desert-land entrymen, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments. The first amendment was, in section 1, page 1, line 4, after the word "homestead," to strike out "or desert-land"; in line 11, after the word "homestead," to strike out "or desert-land"; and on page 2, line 3, before the word "entryman," to strike out "homestead," so as to make the section read:

That any person who, as much as one year before the passage of this act, shall have made a valid homestead entry for not more than 320 acres of public land, including entrymen on ceded Indian lands, may, at any time within 90 days after the date hereof, file in the local land office the required notice of intention to make final proof, and upon the submission pursuant to said notice, of satisfactory proof showing compliance with the homestead laws applicable thereto to the date of such proof, and upon the payment of all charges on account of such entry shall be entitled to final certificate and patent for the land so entered: Provided, That no patent shall issue to any entryman who has not actually resided upon his homestead for a period of at least seven months: Provided further, That none of the provisions of this act shall apply to any entries of land under Government reclamation projects.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 7, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 2. That no final proof shall be deemed sufficient and no patent hereunder shall issue until the entryman shall by affidavit, bond, or otherwise, as required by the register and receiver, satisfy the register and receiver of the land office where final proof may be made that he will each year for the next succeeding two years cultivate and put in grain or other food crops one-eighth of the area of the homestead.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 14, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 3. That no patentee hereunder shall have the power to convey by deed of conveyance or otherwise alienate any land patented hereunder (except that he may mortgage it for a valuable consideration) within three years' time from the date of his entry.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, this is a bill which very radically changes the present homestead laws, and I think there ought to be some explanation of why such an important change is proposed to be made at this time.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, what the Senator from Wisconsin says is absolutely true. The bill can not be defended upon any other ground than that it is a war measure. It is for the purpose of trying to get more of the lands under cultivation within the next two years in order to produce food, which is so absolutely necessary at the present time. I will say to the Senator that the bill was held in committee for some time and discussed thoroughly at the committee meetings, but that finally it was decided there would be no danger in passing the bill in the form in which it now is, with the amendments which have been suggested by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, if the Senator from Utah will yield to me, I desire to say that it seems to me that this bill will defeat the very purpose which the Senator suggests that he hopes will be accomplished by the bill. Under the present homestead law the entryman is required to cultivate a certain amount of the area each year, while if this bill passes he will receive a patent for the land at the end of one year, and he is merely required to satisfy the Secretary of the Interior, by affidavit, bond, or otherwise, that in the succeeding two years he will cultivate the land. In the very nature of things it is to be expected that, if this bill passes and the entryman receives the patent which is provided for in the bill, there will not be the amount of cultivation during the succeeding two years that there would be under the present homestead law.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] is now in the Chamber; and, as I did not vote for the bill in committee, I had rather the Senator from Montana should make an explanation of it to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, under this measure, if enacted into law, it will be discretionary with land-office officials whether or not they will issue patents on the showing which is made by entrymen upon final proof. That will have to be such as to convince them that the entryman is acting in good faith, and such as to convince them that he will live up to his affidavit or his bond, or whatever is required of him.

The object of this bill is to enable thousands of homesteaders, while we are engaged in this war, to make final proof on their homesteads on such evidence as will satisfy the land-office officials that the homesteaders are acting in good faith and that they will comply with all of the requirements made of them for three years.

The further object of the bill is to enable such homesteaders who are actually living on the land, improving it and cultivating it, to obtain a patent so they may have some basis of credit on which to borrow money with which to improve their claims and to purchase implements, seed, and live stock, and thus be able to go to work and farm in real earnest for the purpose of making the land produce all which it is capable of producing.

I desire to say to the Senator from Wisconsin that the bill only applies to those people who can comply with its provisions—those who have entered the land at least one year prior to the enactment of the measure and who have lived on the land for at least seven months. It only applies to those who are there now and can meet the requirements; nobody else can ever take advantage of it. It is simply for the benefit of the present existing body of homesteaders—those now on the land and able to meet the requirements. When they take advantage of it, the objects and functions of the bill will end; it can not be taken advantage of in the future.

I desire to say to the Senator from Wisconsin that the bill does not alter the homestead laws as to the future at all; it does not change them for all future time to come; it makes no permanent change. It only enables those who happen to be so situated that they can comply with the terms of the law within 90 days after its enactment to get patents if they desire. Then the law will end. It will have no future nor continued application; it would then become a dead letter.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator from Montana yield to me?

Mr. MYERS. With pleasure.

Mr. LENROOT. In case the entryman, after he receives the patent, does not comply with the condition required for the additional cultivation for the succeeding two years there is no penalty, there is no revocation of the patent, and he will have the land free of any encumbrance of any kind. Although it may result in a much less degree of cultivation than would have been required under the homestead law, he nevertheless will have his patent.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I do not think there is any doubt that if facts could be produced to show that fraud or bad faith had been practiced on the Government, in such a case a patent could and would be canceled. If, in an action to cancel a patent, a man should show by good and substantial evidence that by long-continued sickness, accidental calamity, or something of that kind, he was absolutely prohibited by something beyond his power from complying with the requirements of the law, I think that in such a case the patent should not be annulled; only where there is sufficient evidence to show bad faith or fraud or imposition practiced upon the Government. In such a case I do not think there is any doubt but that the patent could be annulled.

The object of this measure, Mr. President, is, and the whole inception of the matter was, to aid the Government in increasing the production of food products in time of war. There is no doubt it would greatly aid that great end. It is simply a war measure, limited to this particular time and never to be applied in the future. It is not to be a permanent law. The committee considered it to be a war measure to aid in the production of foodstuffs. I know that it is intended to accomplish good; I know it would accomplish much good; I know that the amendments which were added by the committee at the suggestion of the Interior Department make the bill better; I know that the bill was conceived and is advocated in good faith, for the benefit of our country in time of war, and would be productive of a great deal of good. The mere fact that in some instances it may be abused is no more than may happen, and does happen, in connection with the homestead laws generally; they are all abused occasionally. On the whole, I think the bill would undoubtedly result in great good. As I have said, the committee considered this as a war measure and decided that it was for the benefit of the country in time of war. It considered it justified by the war. I hope Senators will not object to the bill, but will let it be voted upon on its merits. There are in the western country, in the public-land States, thousands—yea, hundreds of thousands—of poor but honest, patriotic homesteaders. They are struggling under great burdens. They are good citizens; there are none better. They have entered land, but they have not the means with which to improve and cultivate it. They are poor; they have no money. Not having title to their land, they can not borrow money on it. They have no credit. They can give no security. They want to raise big crops and help their country, but they can not get the money for seed, implements, and teams. This proposed law would enable them to establish credit, borrow money on their land, and with it break and cultivate more land, raise bigger crops of grain, and thus help their country in this time of its stress and need. We must have food to win the war, and this would help.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. MYERS. With pleasure.

Mr. KING. Suppose that after patent is issued, the patentee mortgages the property or alienates it, and the mortgagee or vendee fails to comply with the law and fails to make cultivation of the land, would it not be impossible, under those circumstances, to secure a revocation of the patent upon the ground of failure to live up to the terms of the law?

Mr. MYERS. I do not think so, because certain terms are imposed on the entryman, and if anybody takes a mortgage on the land or buys it, he does it with a knowledge of the conditions imposed by the law and knowing that he will have to comply with those conditions in order to make the patent good. Transferring or mortgaging land will not validate fraud; and if the entryman practices fraud, or if his successor practices fraud, I do not think there is any doubt that the patent could be and would be canceled. The proposed law may be open to some little suspicion of a bare possibility of an occasional abuse, but it would in those particulars result in such great good to the country in the way of increased food production in time of war that I think the good far overbalances any possibility of harm in it. Any law is open to some abuse. Every law is occasionally abused. Every law is occasionally violated as to its spirit and intent. The present homestead laws are occasionally abused and made to work imposition on the Government, but that is no reason why they should be repealed. The good far outweighs the occasional abuse. This proposed law would bring into existence millions more of bushels of wheat the first year of its existence, and we need the wheat. Undoubtedly it would do great good and little or no harm.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. MYERS. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I notice in the report of the Secretary of the Interior that he suggests that the bill be amended so as to require that the entryman—> has actually cultivated not less than one-sixteenth of the area of the entry, and that the law shall require that every patent so issued shall expressly provide that it shall be subject to forfeiture and cancellation unless the entryman shall show to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior that he has cultivated to agricultural crops.

The amendment proposed by the committee does not require the patent to contain that provision. I simply wish to know why the committee did not think such an amendment necessary?

Mr. MYERS. The committee thinks that would be the law, and that the courts would so hold, even without any express provision to that effect; so the committee did not think it necessary to put such a provision in the bill. Of course, if any Senator wishes to offer an amendment along that line, I would not object; but the committee, as I have said, did not think it necessary.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have a great deal of respect for the judgment of the committee, but I can not see how, when all that is required is that the entryman should satisfy the register and receiver, that the courts would then carry any such condition as that into the patent.

Mr. MYERS. If a man should not live up to the requirements of the measure and his obligations, it certainly would show fraud, unless he were prevented from so doing by something beyond his power.

Mr. GRONNA and Mr. LENROOT addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. MYERS. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. GRONNA. I hope the Senator from Montana will not accept the amendment as suggested by the Senator from Washington.

Mr. MYERS. I have no power to accept it. I only say I would not object to it.

Mr. GRONNA. I am only a farmer, and the Senator from Montana and the Senator from Washington are lawyers, but I am very sure that both of them well know that when land is transferred from one person to another, if fraud has been committed the Government can still take the land, no matter who holds it. There are a number of decisions to that effect.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I did not suggest anything about fraud. I suggested that this amendment only requires the entryman to satisfy the register and receiver. It may not require very much to satisfy the register and receiver to accept the proof of the entryman; there is no condition in the patent that it shall be canceled on the terms suggested by the Secretary of the Interior, and you could not get any court to cancel it.

Mr. MYERS. The bill certainly requires an entryman to obligate himself to meet all requirements, and, if he does not do it and he can not show that he was prevented by something beyond his power, it would certainly show bad faith and result in the cancellation of the patent. I have no power to accept any amendment. I simply stated that I had no objection to such an amendment if it were offered. I hope there will be no objection to this bill. It is badly needed. The West wants it. The country needs it. Let us pass the bill now.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. MYERS. With pleasure.

Mr. LENROOT. I wish to say to the Senator, feeling as I do, that this bill would defeat the very purpose that it seeks to accomplish, I shall feel constrained to object to its further consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. MYERS. I would like to ask the Senator from Wisconsin if he will not permit the bill to come to a vote and simply cast his vote against it? Will he not withdraw his objection to its consideration? Let us have a vote on it.

Mr. LODGE. Regular order! We are proceeding under Rule VIII.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made. The Secretary will state the next bill on the calendar.

GUARANTEED PRICE OF WHEAT.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 132) to amend section 14 of the food-control act by increasing the guaranteed minimum price of wheat for the crop of 1918 from $2 to $2.50 per bushel was announced as next in order.

Mr. GRONNA, Mr. SMOOT, and Mr. POMERENE asked that the joint resolution go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

ADDITIONAL DISTRICT JUDGE IN NORTH CAROLINA.

The bill (S. 3217) providing for the appointment of an additional district judge for the western judicial district of the State of North Carolina was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I notice following this bill on the calendar there is another bill providing for the appointment of an additional district judge for the northern district of California. I wish to ask the Senator who reported the bill whether there is a real reason why additional judges should be appointed in North Carolina and California?

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, these bills were thoroughly gone over by the Judiciary Committee and reported unanimously. Two or three bills of the same character have passed the Senate and gone to the other House. Our idea was to let them go to the House and be considered, and, if the House thinks they ought to pass, to put them in an omnibus bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Then the House has not passed any of the bills along this line which the Senate has passed and sent over?

Mr. OVERMAN. None at all.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It provides that the President shall, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint an additional district judge for the western judicial district of the State of North Carolina, who shall reside in the district and shall possess the same qualifications, have the same power and jurisdiction, and receive the same salary now prescribed by law in respect of the present district judge therein, and whenever a vacancy shall occur in the office of the district judge for the western judicial district of the State of North Carolina senior in commission such vacancy shall not be filled, and thereafter there shall be but one district judge in the district.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADDITIONAL DISTRICT JUDGE IN CALIFORNIA.

The bill (S. 2910) providing for an additional judge for the northern district of California was announced as next in order.

Mr. THOMAS. I ask that that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the bill will go over.

NAVY MAIL CLERKS AND ASSISTANTS.

The bill (S. 3399) to amend an act approved May 27, 1908 (35 Stat., 417, 418), and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to extend the provisions of the act of May 27, 1908 (35 Stat., 417, 418), as amended by the act of August 24, 1912 (37 Stat., 560), and as amended by the act of March 4, 1917 (39 Stat., 1188), to authorize the designation of enlisted men of the Navy or Marine Corps as Navy mail clerks and assistant Navy mail clerks for duty at stations and shore establishments under the jurisdiction of the Navy Department, where the services of such mail clerks and assistant mail clerks are necessary.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WIDOW OF OWEN S. WILLEY.

The bill (S. 180) granting an honorable discharge to Owen S. Willey was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That in the administration of the pension laws the late Owen S. Willey, who served in the United States Navy from July 11, 1860, to April 16, 1863, as an acting master's mate, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the naval service of the United States as an acting master's mate on April 16, 1863: Provided, That no pay, bounty, pension, or other emolument shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Ellen M. Willey, widow of Owen S. Willey."

REIMBURSEMENT OF NAVAL ENLISTED MEN.

The bill (S. 3125) for the relief of certain enlisted men of the United States Navy was announced as next in order, and the Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the following-named men the sums of money following their names, respectively, or so much thereof as may be found by the Secretary of the Navy, upon evidence satisfactory to him to have been lost by said men and upon certificate from the Secretary of the Navy as to the amount to be paid: A. Balton, $67; Bernard C. Biezunski, $36; C. C. Bleam, $57; W. J. Brown, $50; Lemuel F. Dixon, $50; Elmer M. Hall, $30; J. Hello, $5; W. P. Hunt, $67; C. E. Jordan, $47; F. E. Kent, $40; Gustave A. Lohse, $76; L. E. Looney, $50; George L. Rice, $60; R. R. Sprott, $50; E. A. Stoner, $62; Max Szwajkowski, $102; E. T. Taylor, $50; Wenford P. Thorogood, $55; N. J. Turpin, $50; W. H. Wilson, father of A. W. Wilson, $87; Elmer Wilson, $50; Robert Wittig, $85; John A. Wohlgren, $85; and the sum of $1,311, or so much thereof as may be found, as above provided, to have been lost, is hereby appropriated to carry out the provisions of this act, the said sums being the amounts claimed to have been lost by the parties named by reason of the defalcations of former paymaster's clerk, Theodore N. Carter, United States Navy, who deserted January 10, 1912, and who is still in desertion.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, for information, I should like to inquire if it is the custom of the Government to reimburse sailors or soldiers for any money which they may leave temporarily with some officer of the Government when the latter defaults or embezzles the money? It does not seem to me that the Government ought to be held responsible under circumstances of that kind. The officer becomes the custodian of the moneys of the individual; he ceases to be a Government employee and becomes the agent or employee of the individual. If they care to make him their agent and he embezzles the money, I do not see why the Government should be responsible, unless it is understood that the Government furnishes such an agent and he gives bond for the protection of those who may make deposits with him. If any Senator can offer any explanation as to the custom of the Government in this regard, I shall be glad to hear it.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, it is the custom of sailors to leave their money in charge of paymasters; there is a provision of law for that; and it is customary to make it good to them if the money is lost by no fault of theirs. The Government is responsible for it; the money is in the hands of Government officers, and this bill is simply to take that privilege from men who are absent, as it is stated, on account of injury, sickness, or disease resulting from their own intemperate use of drugs, alcoholic liquors, or other misconduct.

Mr. KING. I think the Senator is reading a different bill from that which I understand is before the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. Perhaps I am.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Calendar No. 268 is the bill now before the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. I was looking at Calendar No. 276. I will tell the Senator about the bill under consideration in a moment; I was looking at the wrong bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator that I can understand that the Government perhaps ought to be responsible in justice to the men for any moneys which may be due the men and which have not been delivered to them, but I do not quite understand why the Government should be liable if that money has been paid out to sailors or soldiers and they then deposit it with some paymaster, and he embezzles it. For instance, some sailor might obtain money from other sources and use the paymaster as a sort of depository or as the agent to take charge of his money. It would seem to me a very injurious thing if the Government under such circumstances should be held responsible.

Mr. LODGE. It is the practice in the Navy, if the men choose to leave their money with them, for the paymasters to take charge of the money. In this case the man Carter, who was assistant paymaster's clerk, defrauded the Government and also these seamen who had left money with him.

Mr. KING. Has the defaulter been apprehended and punished, does the Senator know?

Mr. LODGE. I was looking to see. I imagine he has; but I do not find it in the Secretary's letter. It is simply to make good to these men, who left their money with the paymaster, money which they have lost through no fault of their own. It is very commonly done. Seamen have not the best places to carry money, and they are very apt to leave it with paymasters.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have just hastily read the report, and I shall ask that this bill go over. I dislike very much to do so, but it seems to me that it would put the Government in a very dangerous situation unless there were some restrictions placed on legislation of this character.

Mr. LODGE. These frauds do not happen very often, the amounts are very small, and it is very hard that the seamen should be defrauded of their pay by Government officers whom they are led to believe are responsible people.

Mr. KING. I will investigate the matter.

Mr. LODGE. They are small amounts. It is the poor seamen who suffer; that is all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the bill will be passed over.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 2120) for the relief of the Wisconsin Band of Pottawatomie Indians, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GRONNA. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3011) for the relief of Winfield S. Solomon was announced as next in order.

Mr. THOMAS. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3646) to grant rights of way over Government lands for reservoir purposes for the conservation and storage of water to be used by the city of San Diego, Cal., and adjacent communities was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

LOSS OF PAY BY OFFICERS AND MEN OF NAVY AND MARINE CORPS.

The bill (S. 3405) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes," approved August 29, 1916, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the fourth paragraph under the subhead of "Officers for engineering duty only" in the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes, approved August 29, 1916," relative to the loss of pay by officers and enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps who are absent from duty on account of sickness or disease resulting from their own misconduct be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"Hereafter no officer or enlisted man in the Navy or Marine Corps in active service who shall be absent from duty on account of injury, sickness, or disease resulting from his own intemperate use of drugs or alcoholic liquors, or other misconduct, shall receive pay for the period of such absence, the time so absent and the cause thereof to be ascertained under such procedure and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy: Provided, That an enlistment shall not be regarded as complete until the enlisted man shall have made good any time in excess of one day lost on account of injury, sickness, or disease resulting from his own intemperate use of drugs or alcoholic liquors or other misconduct."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to amend the naval appropriation act, approved August 29, 1916, relative to the loss of pay by officers and enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps who are absent from duty on account of sickness or disease resulting from their own misconduct."

REIMBURSEMENT FOR UNIFORMS, ETC., LOST ON BOARD "TUSCANIA."

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 134) to reimburse soldiers and officers for uniforms and equipment lost on board the Tuscania February 5, 1918, and in other like cases, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the President to pay out of the annual Army appropriation for clothing, camp, and garrison equipage to each of the officers who lost uniforms and equipment through the sinking by submarine of the steamship Tuscania February 5, 1918, and to others who may hereafter lose clothing and equipage in the same manner, a sum equal in value to the clothing and equipment lost, and not to exceed $400; and to issue to soldiers the necessary clothing and equipment to replace that lost by those who suffered or may hereafter suffer in the same manner, provided that acceptance of any amount hereunder shall constitute a final determination of all claims cognizable under this resolution or any act of Congress, and such claims shall not thereafter be reopened or considered.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] reported this joint resolution; but I will ask the Senator from Oregon if it conflicts in any way with the provisions that we included in the urgent deficiency bill?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. No; not at all. This only covers one case.

Mr. SMOOT. I notice that it says here that it shall apply "to others who may hereafter lose clothing."

Mr. THOMAS. It applies to other like cases.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have not examined it in conjunction with the provision in the urgent deficiency bill.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator knows that there was a provision put in that bill covering losses of all officers.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes; there was. I will state to the Senator why this joint resolution was introduced. It was prepared by the War Department in compliance with a cable request of Gen. Pershing. He states in his cablegram:

Officers and soldiers who were aboard Tuscania lost all uniforms and equipment exclusive of clothes they wore. Soldiers will be supplied necessary clothes and equipment by Quartermaster Department. Case of officers more difficult. They are in immediate need of uniforms and equipment and are without money to purchase same. Recommend immediate joint resolution authorizing Quartermaster Department to donate to each officer $400, which is amount estimated as necessary to equip an officer properly and replace what he lost. Also suggest that joint resolution authorize President to direct same donation, in his discretion, in like cases arising in the future. Pending action of Congress, I have met situation by personally securing credit for these officers to above amount with Morgan Grenfel & Co., London, England. Number of officers so far 10.

Mr. President, with reference to this matter, why postpone it any further? It has been on the calendar since March 1.

Mr. LODGE. It ought to have been passed the moment it was asked for.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes; it ought to have been.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want the Senate to understand that I have no objection to the passage of the joint resolution; but that very cablegram was read to the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations at the time they put in the urgent deficiency bill provision in detail for just such cases as this. The case of the Tuscania was discussed at that time, and the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] called attention to the soldiers who were on that boat, who had lost their all, and they could not get credit abroad to secure the necessary clothes.

That bill passed Congress on March 18 and this bill was introduced on March 1. The only question in my mind is as to whether or not this is not in direct conflict with the law that is now upon the statute books. They ought to be paid, of course.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. In order that there may be no question about it, I am going to ask to have read into the RECORD the provision in the urgent deficiency bill, so that the Senator may see just what it is. I do not think it is broad enough to cover this case. I will ask the Secretary to read, beginning at the bottom of page 3 in the urgent deficiency bill, down as far as that subject is covered. It is only about a page.

Mr. SMOOT. As this measure is to go to the House, I do not care whether it is read or not. Let us pass it to-day.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I ask to have it read, because it will come up again. I am going to insist again that that provision in the urgent deficiency bill is not broad enough to do what is necessary to protect these young fellows who have gone abroad; and a little later on I am going to bring up again the matter that was passed over this morning and try to get it through.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Claims of officers and enlisted men for loss of private property destroyed in the military service: Property belonging to officers, enlisted men, and members of the Nurse Corps (female) of the Army, which they are required by law or regulations to own and use in field service in the performance of their duties, which since the 5th day of April, 1917, has been, or shall hereafter be, lost, damaged, or destroyed in the military service, shall be replaced, or the damage thereto, or its value, recouped to the owner as hereinafter provided, when such loss, damage, or destruction has occurred or shall hereafter occur without fault or negligence on the part of the owner in any of the following circumstances:

First. When such private property so lost or destroyed was shipped on board an unseaworthy vessel by order of an officer authorized to give such order or direct such shipment, or destroyed by the enemy or by shipwreck.

Second. When it appears that such private property was so lost or destroyed in consequence of its owner having given his attention to the saving of property belonging to the United States which was in danger at the same time and in similar circumstances.

Third. When such private property is destroyed or captured by the enemy, or is destroyed to prevent its falling into the hands of the enemy, or is abandoned by reason of military emergency requiring its abandonment.

The Secretary of War is authorized and directed to examine into, ascertain and determine the value of such property lost, destroyed, captured, or abandoned as specified in the foregoing paragraphs, or the amount of the damage thereto, as the case may be; and the amount of such value or damage so ascertained and determined shall be paid from appropriations made therefor, or such property lost, destroyed, captured, or abandoned, or so damaged as to be unfit for service, may be replaced in kind from Government property on hand by the supply officer or quartermaster of the organization to which the person entitled thereto belongs or with which he is serving upon the order of the commanding officer thereof.

Tender of replacement or the determination made by the Secretary of War upon a claim presented as provided for in the foregoing paragraphs shall constitute a final determination of any claim cognizable under this act, and such claim shall not thereafter be reopened or considered by any accounting officer or court of the United States.

No claim arising under this act shall be considered unless made within one year from the time that it accrued, or presented within six months after peace is established.

For the payment of any awards hereunder there is appropriated the sum of $200,000.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, that is the provision in the law to which I have reference, and I think that covers every case which would be covered by this joint resolution. If the Senator from Oregon thinks otherwise, I have no objection to passing this measure and letting it go to the House; but I do believe that the law to-day covers this case as well as every other case of the kind that will happen.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I do not feel about it as the Senator from Utah does. If it is not necessary, there is no use in putting it through the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. That is what I thought.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am acting largely on the recommendation of the War Department. In order to show that the bill upon which the Senator relies—that is, the urgent deficiency bill—does not cover the propositions which the War Department intended to have covered, I am going to ask to have read into the RECORD a letter from the Secretary of War, under date of April 17, 1918, wherein it is shown that the provision in the urgent deficiency bill is not sufficient to meet the needs of the Army at this time.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in that connection I wish to say again, as I said when the Senator referred to this matter before in connection with another bill, that the recommendations of the department were not identically in accordance with the provisions found in this law. Their recommendations were broader than the Appropriations Committee thought the law ought to be, and it is true, no doubt, that there are a number of cases that it would not cover. That does not affect this joint resolution in any way whatever, but it does affect the bill that we passed over between 1 and 2 o'clock to-day.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I am not questioning the statement of the Senator, and I am not questioning the sincerity of the Committee on Appropriations when they provided for this matter in the emergency legislation. What I am insisting on is that that legislation does not meet the situation; and that is one of the unfortunate things about tacking legislation on to these appropriation bills, because the distinguished gentlemen of the committee did not have the military situation distinctly in mind, and did not have before them the legislation which the Military Affairs Committee had before them when they considered this measure and reported it out.

Mr. SMOOT. We had the representatives of the War Department before the committee, and they gave their testimony.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the letter be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE JUDGE ADVOCATE GENERAL,
Washington, April 17, 1918.

Hon. GEORGE E. CHAMBERLAIN,
Chairman Committee on Military Affairs,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR CHAMBERLAIN: In accordance with the request made over the telephone by Mr. Daniels, the assistant clerk of your committee, I am writing you with reference to the differences between S. 3527, the bill to provide for the settlement of the claims of officers and enlisted men of the Army, and the provision upon that subject enacted into law as a part of the urgent deficiency bill.

The circumstances under which payment may be made for losses are cut down by the emergency deficiency act by the elimination of the fourth subdivision of the Senate bill, namely, "when during travel under orders the regulation allowance of baggage transferred by common carriers is lost or damaged; but replacement or recoupment in these circumstances shall be limited to the extent of such loss or damage over and above the amount recoverable from said carrier."

The class of property payment for loss of which is authorized is, according to S. 3527, "all prescribed articles of equipment and clothing which they are required by law or regulations to own and use in the performance of their duties" and such articles of personal property as the Secretary of War shall decide or declare to be reasonable, useful, necessary, and proper while in quarters, engaged in the public service in the line of duty. According to the urgent deficiency act, this class of property is limited to that "which they are required by law or regulations to own and use in field service in the performance of their duties." As a measure applying solely to service beyond the seas in the present war this change is of little or no moment. As applying to time of peace, however, the change is of considerable importance. As one example, I cite the fact that in time of peace an officer is obliged to be equipped with dress uniforms and with sword and saber, and these he must carry with him when he moves from station to station. Other examples would be all those articles determined by the Secretary of War as reasonable and proper to be had while in quarters in the line of duty. All of the foregoing articles would fall within the provisions of the Senate bill. They would not, however, fall within the provisions of the urgent deficiency act. The Senate bill was designed as an amendment to the act of March 3, 1885, whose provisions specifically covered peace time only. One of the amendments carried by the Senate bill is to make the provisions applicable in time of war as well as in time of peace.

By the Senate bill it is provided generally that the proper accounting officers of the Treasury are authorized and directed to examine into, ascertain, and determine the value of the property, and it is provided specially that in time of war such property shall be replaced in kind from Government property on hand upon the order of the commanding officer, and by the amendment offered by Mr. FLETCHER it is further provided that when such replacement can not be made, or can not be made within a reasonable time, adequate commutation shall be given therefor upon the order of said commanding officer. Under the urgent deficiency act it is provided that the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to examine into, ascertain, and determine the value of such property. Thus, as applied to the present war time, all determinations as to loss or damage must be made in Washington or through directions from Washington instead of directly by the officers in the field. Thus the urgent deficiency act would seem to impose a greater burden upon the administration than that provided for by the Senate bill. The provision of the urgent deficiency act that property lost or damaged may be replaced in kind does not obviate the necessity of having money claims presented therefor in Washington, for the Government does not carry officers' clothing or nurses' clothing.

The Senate bill provides a continuing appropriation to take care of these claims. The urgent deficiency act makes a specific appropriation and would require other specific appropriations after exhaustion of the one now made.

The Senate bill provides specifically for the amendment of the act of March 3, 1885, so that it shall read as in the Senate bill set forth. The urgent deficiency act omits reference to the act of March 3, 1885, with the result that that act still continues in force, side by side with the new legislation—meaning two acts to be construed, with the consequent confusion always resulting from such a situation.

Very truly, yours,

E. H. CROWDER,
Judge Advocate General.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REGISTRATION FOR MILITARY SERVICE.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 136) providing for the registration for military service of the subjects or citizens residing in the United States of a foreign country with whose Government the United States has concluded or hereafter concludes a convention or agreement consenting to such aliens being drafted into the military forces of the United States under the terms of the act approved May 18, 1917, entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," and all amendments thereto, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GRONNA. Let that go over.

Mr. THOMAS. Let that go over, pending the ratification of a treaty upon the subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

SALE, MANUFACTURE, AND IMPORTATION OF INTOXICATING LIQUORS IN THE TERRITORY OF HAWAII.

The bill (S. 3935) to prohibit the sale, manufacture, and importation of intoxicating liquors in the Territory of Hawaii during the period of the war, except as hereinafter provided, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LODGE. Let that go over.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I trust that the Senator who objected to the consideration of this bill will allow it to be considered. It is intended not only for the principal island of the Hawaiian group but for the smaller islands as well. By a military proclamation the sale of intoxicating liquors has already been prohibited in the main island, the island on which Honolulu is situated, because it was considered a military zone. The manufacture of liquor on the main island, however, was not prohibited, nor was its importation or exportation forbidden. As a result, liquors are being manufactured in the main island and the smaller islands are being flooded with these liquors and a large amount of liquors are being reimported clandestinely into the main island. On account of these conditions, I trust that the measure may be passed.

Mr. LODGE. I have no objection to the bill as I see it now. I withdraw the objection.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, 90 days after the passage of this act, during the period of the war and thereafter, except as herein provided, it shall be unlawful in the Territory of Hawaii to sell, give away, manufacture, transport, import, or export intoxicating liquors, except for mechanical, scientific, sacramental, or medicinal purposes, for which purposes the sale, gift, transport, import, and export of the same shall be under such rules and regulations as the governor of the Territory may prescribe, and any person violating the provisions hereof shall be fined in a sum not exceeding $500 or imprisoned for a period of not longer than one year, or both: Provided, That at any general election of the Territory of Hawaii, held within two years after the conclusion of peace, the repeal of this act may, upon petition of not less than 20 per cent of the qualified electors of said Territory at the last preceding general election, be submitted to a vote of the qualified electors of said Territory, and if a majority of all the qualified electors thereof voting upon such question shall vote to repeal this act, it shall thereafter not be in force and effect, otherwise it shall be in full force and effect.

SEC. 2. That the said petition shall be addressed to and filed with the secretary of the Territory at least two months before the election at which the question is to be voted upon, and the person obtaining any signature to such petition shall make affidavit that he witnessed the signing of the same and believes the address of each petitioner affixed to his name is the true address of such petitioner. Such election shall be conducted under the laws of the Territory provided for general elections.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SEC. 8. That where privately owned lands within the said park lie within 300 feet of the rim of the Grand Canyon no building, tent, fence, or other structure shall be erected on the park lands lying between said privately owned lands and the rim.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I merely rise to express my surprise that this park has not been created long ago. I was laboring under the impression that the Grand Canyon of the Colorado was protected by national-park legislation some years hence.

Mr. ASHURST. No; if the Senator will pardon me, by Executive proclamation in 1893 it was made a forest reserve. Later, to wit, in 1906, President Roosevelt created it a national monument, and in 1908 it was created a game preserve; but after conferences extending over some years it has been deemed that the Grand Canyon ought to assume the status of a national park.

Mr. THOMAS. I quite agree with that.

Mr. ASHURST. It is not a national park at this time.

Mr. THOMAS. I supposed it had been done a long time ago. It is a very desirable designation.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ASHURST. I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD the bill as passed.

There being no objection, the bill as passed was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HEIRS OF JOSHUA NICHOLLS.

Mr. OVERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I hope the Senator will not insist on that motion at this time. This is the first opportunity we have had to go on with the calendar and get rid of unobjected bills. Let us go through the calendar.

Mr. OVERMAN. We can go on with the calendar to-morrow.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have rather a personal and selfish reason for making the request. I have just received a telegram that my daughter is ill, and I have to make a speech in Philadelphia to-morrow. There is a bill on the calendar which I would like to have the Senate reach. I do not know of any important executive business that we have to transact.

Mr. OVERMAN. There is some executive business, and if we had unfinished business for to-morrow I would yield to the Senator, but we have not.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will not be here to-morrow.

Mr. THOMAS. May I suggest to the Senator from Mississippi that unanimous consent be given to bring up the bill he has in mind?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not want to do that. I do not want any special favor from the Senate; but I ask that we go on with the calendar until we reach my bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. How far down on the calendar is the Senator's bill? What is the number?

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is the bill (S. 463) for the relief of the heirs of Joshua Nicholls. A similar bill has twice before passed the Senate and been sent to the House. I wish to get it off the calendar.

Mr. OVERMAN. I will yield for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 463.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I regret very much, indeed, that having just reached a pension bill on the calendar, and as we have not had an opportunity to consider pension bills for a long time, it shall be displaced by a special order at this time.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have conferred with some Senators on the other side and they think we will take up the calendar to-morrow, and we can finish the calendar, because there is no unfinished business pending.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will not be here to-morrow.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am replying to the Senator from Montana. He will have no trouble in passing all his pensions bills. It is not my purpose to delay them at all. I think if the Senator from Mississippi could get up his bill, inasmuch as he is going away, we then could have an executive session, and to-morrow we can take up the calendar and finish it.

Mr. WALSH. Might we have a unanimous-consent agreement then that when the calendar is taken up to-morrow we will begin at Order of Business 294, House bill 7634?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Order of Business 293 is the next bill on the calendar.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I am very much interested in the passage of Order of Business 293, Senate bill 2104.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not think there will be any objection to that when we take up the calendar to-morrow.

Mr. WALSH. I ask unanimous consent that we begin at Calendar No. 293 to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana asks unanimous consent that when the Senate proceeds to the consideration of the calendar to-morrow it will begin with No. 293. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. SMOOT. In asking unanimous consent to call up a bill at a certain time, will it not require a call of the Senate to agree to it?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks not. The proposition is to proceed to the consideration of it.

Mr. LODGE. I understand we are proceeding under a unanimous-consent agreement to take up unobjected bills on the calendar, and this is simply an agreement that when we go on with the calendar we shall start at a certain number. It is not an agreement about fixing a time to vote.

Mr. SMOOT. I am aware of that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill called up by the Senator from Mississippi?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 463) for the relief of the heirs of Joshua Nicholls, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, in line 7, to strike out "$33,450" and insert "$20,450," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay to Elizabeth R. Nicholls and Joanna L. Nicholls, heirs at law of Joshua Nicholls, deceased, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $20,450, for and on account of property belonging to said Joshua Nicholls destroyed and captured by the United States soldiers in the year 1863, in the State of South Carolina, during the late Civil War. The said Joshua Nicholls was throughout said war a loyal citizen of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

KATHERINE MACDONALD.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I wish to prefer a request to the Senate. I was not in the Chamber when the bill (S. 2975) for the relief of Katherine Macdonald was called. I did not get here until after it had been passed over. I ask unanimous consent to recur to that bill to see if anyone has any objection to it. Let it be called subject to objection.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator will be here to-morrow?

Mr. MYERS. But I understand the Senate will begin the consideration of the calendar at another point.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator can call it up to-morrow. It is now after 5 o'clock.

RED CROSS AID BY SENATE EMPLOYEES.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the RECORD the proceedings of the meeting of the employees of the Senate held this morning in the Senate Office Building in behalf of the Red Cross.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RED CROSS AID BY SENATE EMPLOYEES.

THURSDAY, MAY 16, 1918.

The employees of the United States Senate assembled in the caucus room, Senate Office Building, at 11 o'clock a. m.

Hon. Charles P. Higgins, Sergeant at Arms of the Senate, called the meeting to order and said:

Ladies and gentlemen, we have assembled this morning for the purpose of enlisting the employees of the United States Senate in behalf of the Red Cross. The Vice President has kindly consented to address you on the noble work and success of this most efficient organization. I now present the Vice President of the United States. [Applause.]

ADDRESS BY THE VICE PRESIDENT.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Ladies and gentlemen, this is the first time that I know of in my life when I really felt that I was entitled to talk, because drawing a salary as I do from the Government of the United States I think that a part of your duty, a part of the compensation that you render to the Government, is in listening to the Vice President or any Senator of the United States when he wants to talk to you.

There are certain commonplace things only to be said. The world has been making very great decisions in the last year. There was a time when you and I were just plain American citizens and plain American officeholders, when our duty consisted in voting our various party tickets, in holding office and drawing our salaries with regularity and dispatch. But a change came over the spirit of the world. Things were turned upside down, and then you began to change also and began to make decisions.

Hitherto you had only been political stockholders in that great corporation known as the United States of America. Recently I assume, and I hope, most of you have become stockholders in that corporation by subscribing for liberty bonds.

Once again you are called upon to make a decision. You are called upon to determine what you are going to do with the very few dollars which the high cost of living leaves to anyone of you after you have obtained the actual necessaries of life here in the city of Washington. It is a decision that will not only be momentous for the world but I think will be far more momentous for you, because I am one of those who believe that in the spending of money, if spent aright, while you get rid of your money you get something in return that is far more valuable than the money itself.

You are now going to be called upon to make a decision as to whether you are to devote any little surplus that you may have to luxuries for yourselves, pleasures for yourselves, luxuries and pleasures for those who are near and dear to you, or whether you are going to devote that little surplus to the great cause of humanity.

The world is altogether wrong as to what a man has. Life is still full of strange contradictions. The things which we think we have are the things which we do not possess, and the things which we think we have given away are the things that we really do possess. If you have any stocks or bonds or mortgages, they may disappear in the financial whirlpool to-morrow and you may never see them again, but there is no one of you, from the youngest to the oldest, who ever did anything for humanity, who ever wiped away an orphan's tear, whispered good counsel into the ear of an erring brother, lifted up a fallen man or a fallen woman, or tried to do anything for the uplift of humanity, but, lo, the things which you thought you had given away and had passed entirely from your life have returned to abide with you and to be the only real things that beautify and glorify and adorn the life of the average man in the world.

You have subscribed to liberty bonds. Many of you have brothers, perhaps husbands, perhaps sons, on the far-off battle line of Europe. You have made your sacrifice for your country. Now, are you willing to make a sacrifice for humanity, for part of the reasons for the fighting of this war, as I see it, is that there shall come a time in the history of mankind when the youth of the land shall not be trained to listen to the music of the fife and the beating of the drum as the one great ambition of humanity, when the boys will not be taken out upon the streets of Washington and pointed to the statues of the great war heroes of the world, when in the change in the thought and purpose and emotion of mankind the war drum will throb no longer, the battle flag will be furled, and the mothers of the land will teach their children that the heroes of the world have not been those who have been warring people, but those who have sought to bind up broken hearts, to minister unto the sick, the wounded, and the needy, and to pour wine and oil into the distressed of human kind.

Nothing is comparable, ladies and gentlemen, to the work of the Red Cross. Nothing can come into your lives that will give you so much rest of mind and peace of soul as to realize that you have made some sacrifice for the alleviation of suffering, as to have made sacrifices for the winning upon the part of America of this most just and righteous war.

I do not know what you did last year. That is not very material. I have only one practical suggestion, and that suggestion is that you organize yourselves by the election of a president and a secretary; or if you do not want to go to the extent of electing a president and a secretary, elect a vice president and a secretary, and figure out how much you gave last year to the Red Cross, add a little to it if you can, divide it into 12 equal payments, and tell Mr. Charles F. Pace to take it out of your salary month by month as he pays you and have it sent in your name to the Red Cross.

There is not any other plea that I would make to the employees of this Government other than a plea to get whole-heartedly behind the Government in the fighting of this war to the last man and to the last dollar, and to get whole-heartedly behind the grandest organization that the sun ever shone upon—the Red Cross of America. [Great applause.]

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, May 16, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We bless Thee, our Father in Heaven, for every great thought uttered, for every great discovery made, for every noble deed enacted which tends to minimize the struggle for existence, ameliorate the suffering of humanity, and broadens the scope of civilization.

We love purity and hate iniquity. We love nobility of soul and hate hypocrisy. We love justice and hate injustice. We love peace and hate war. But we love civil, political, and religious liberty more than we hate war. Hence we are engaged in the most sanguinary struggle that the world has ever known, that the purest traditions of the past and the fundamental principles upon which human rights have been secured shall live.

We want peace, but not until a decisive victory has been won; for we realize that a permanent peace can not be secured until Prussianism, militarism, kaiserism, and all that brood of vipers which follows in their wake shall be dead, buried, and the hearse put up.

Give us, O Lord, such a victory, that peace may live; for Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

S. 4477. An act authorizing certain persons formerly connected with the American Embassy at Berlin to accept pieces of plate presented to them by the British Government; and

S. 2097. An act for the relief of Charles S. Fries.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 4482. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, as amended; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

BRIDGE ACROSS BAYOU BARTHOLOMEW, ARK.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take up the bill (H. R. 9715) extending the time for the construction of a bridge across the Bayou Bartholomew, in Ashley County, Wilmot Township, State of Arkansas, for immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to consider the bill H. R. 9715, a bridge bill. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, what is the pressing necessity for consideration of the bill to-day instead of next Monday?

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. There is no immediate pressing necessity, except that it is difficult to get materials owing to the very great congestion of freight in the country.

Mr. STAFFORD. If there is no immediate necessity, I think it ought to wait until next Monday.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. It will not take over 30 seconds to dispose of it.

Mr. STAFFORD. There are a dozen other bills that will not take over 30 seconds, but multiplied together it takes some time.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. I will say that the bridge opens up a territory very advantageous to the citizens of that community. It should be constructed during the dry weather of the year. Owing to the great difficulty in getting materials caused by the freight congestion of the country, the friends of the measure are urging its immediate passage in order that the bridge may be at once constructed.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, may the bill be reported?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the time for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge, authorized by act of Congress approved July 8, 1916, to be built across the Bayou Bartholomew at a point suitable to the interests of navigation at or near Wilmot, Ark., on section line between sections 1 and 12, township 19, range 5 west, where it crosses said bayou in Ashley County, Ark., is hereby extended one and three years, respectively, from the date hereof.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 3, add the letter "s" to the word "time"; page 1, line 10, strike out the word "is" and insert in lieu thereof the word "are."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, in view of the information given by the gentleman from Arkansas as to the necessity of an early passage of the bill, I trust that the gentleman from Wisconsin will not object.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I have received private information as to the exigency of the case, and I feel that I ought not to object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for an indefinite leave of absence of my colleague, Mr. BARKLEY, on account of illness.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I desire to extend my remarks in the RECORD briefly.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. WALSH. Upon what subject?

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. On the war.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROWE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a resolution adopted by the New York Board of Trade and Transportation in reference to the zoning system of second-class mail.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject stated. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I object. The gentleman can get time to read it in his own time. I have enough literature and resolutions on that subject to fill a thousand pages of the RECORD. I have had many gentlemen ask me to put them in the RECORD.

Mr. ROWE. I have had a good many such requests, but this is the only one I have asked to have printed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina objects.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12000) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes. Pending that motion, I desire to make some arrangement if I can with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] in respect to the time for general debate.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I have requests for 30 minutes time, and I would like to have 30 minutes myself, although I do not know that I shall use that much. I suggest to the gentleman that he take one hour, and if he does not want to use it, in the event I need a little further time, he could then yield to me, reserving to myself one hour.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, I have requests for only 5 or 10 minutes on this side. I ask unanimous consent that general debate be limited to 1 hour and 15 minutes, 1 hour of that time to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] and 15 minutes by myself.

Mr. CANNON. I wish the gentleman would take an hour upon his side, and then I take an hour, and then the gentleman could yield part of his time to me, in case I should need it.

Mr. GALLIVAN. I understand there are two important conference reports waiting on the passage of this bill, and I do not desire to delay them. However, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general debate be limited to two hours, one hour to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois and one hour by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent, pending his motion to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, that general debate shall not exceed two hours, one half to be controlled by himself and the other half by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the pension appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the pension appropriation bill, with Mr. VENABLE in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums are appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the payment of pensions for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes, namely:

Army and Navy pensions, as follows: For invalids, widows, minor children, and dependent relatives, Army nurses, and all other pensioners who are now borne on the rolls, or who may hereafter be placed thereon, under the provisions of any and all acts of Congress, $185,000,000: Provided, That the appropriation aforesaid for Navy pensions shall be paid from the income of the Navy pension fund, so far as the same shall be sufficient for that purpose: Provided further, That the amount expended under each of the above items shall be accounted for separately.

For fees and expenses of examining surgeons, pensions, for services rendered within the fiscal year 1919, $50,000.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, this bill appropriates $185,050,000, and that sum is $10,000 less than the estimates. The estimates on which the bill is based aggregate $185,060,000, a sum which is composed of $157,060,000, submitted in the Book of Estimates for the fiscal year 1919, and $28,000,000 in a supplemental estimate. It should be stated for the benefit of the committee that a deficiency of $23,000,000 for the fiscal year 1918 has been granted, which makes the appropriation for the current year $183,060,000. The deficiency to which I referred for the year 1918 and the increase in this bill over the amount carried in the current pension appropriation act was due to the enactment of section 314 of the war-risk insurance act, which was approved October 6, 1917, and which provided a minimum rate of $25 a month to widows of the Civil War, the War with Spain, and the Philippine insurrection. It appears that the number of persons of these classes on the roll on March 31 in this year was 292,809. The Secretary of the Interior, in a communication addressed to the Secretary of the Treasury on May 7, 1918, submitted a very clear description of the nature of this supplemental appropriation. It appears that at the beginning of the current fiscal year there were 288,975 pensioners of said class on the roll at rates of less than $25 a month; 134,613 were enrolled at $12 per month and 153,136 at $20 per month. The cost of the increase to the total number above given for one year was found to be $30,291,924. The Secretary adds that the indications are that there will be an increase in the number of the widow classes thus affected in the next fiscal year, as on March 31, 1918, the total number of the roll was 292,809. Up to January last some 45,000 claims had been filed under said section, and about 25,000 then remained to be adjudicated.

The Secretary further says that a further increase is entailed by the act of March 4, 1917, providing pensions for service in the Indian wars of 1859 to 1891. Some 1,500 pensioners are now enrolled under that act, out of a total of about 9,000 claims, filed thereunder. It might be interesting to note that while the estimates in the increase in the cost of pensions are $38,000,000, the committee has brought in an increase amounting to $28,000,000, for the reason that it was advised that $28,000,000 would probably cover what was required, because there will be a reduction through losses by death or other causes in other classes, chiefly the Civil War survivors. In that class the losses by death for the fiscal year 1917 were 33,232. In the nine months of the current fiscal year—to March 31, 1918—the losses by death were 23,580. At the same rate the losses for the year will total about 31,500. The average annual rate of pension in this class in 1917 was $290.26. It will be slightly over that amount in the next fiscal year, and with the loss of an equal number in that year, leaving an average of one-half the annual pension to that number unpaid, the reduction in cost would approximate $4,500,000. According to the Secretary, the actual reduction would be greater, as the larger number of deaths occur in the higher rate for disability or advanced age, and would doubtless reach a total approaching $6,000,000.

Mr. Chairman, this bill is but 19 lines long, and I have made as complete a statement as the committee feels is necessary, at least for the opening.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GALLIVAN. I will.

Mr. WALSH. This bill does not comprehend within its provisions appropriation for personnel for the Pension Bureau, does it?

Mr. GALLIVAN. Not at all.

Mr. WALSH. Has the committee taken into consideration at all or do they know what increase will have to be provided for the pension bill which passed the House the other day, or when some similar measure becomes a law?

Mr. GALLIVAN. No, sir; because that will come before the Deficiency Committee of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. WALSH. That would not come before the gentleman's subcommittee?

Mr. GALLIVAN. Not before the Subcommittee on Pensions of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. WALSH. Then the gentleman's subcommittee have nothing to do with that at this session?

Mr. GALLIVAN. Nothing whatever.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman state whether or not the pensions or pensioners for Spanish War veterans are increasing to any extent?

Mr. GALLIVAN. Well, I am not prepared to say. I find in the report the total number of Spanish War veterans is given, but candidly I can not answer the gentleman, because the committee had no information touching the matter brought to its attention.

Mr. WALSH. Now, may I ask the gentleman if the pensions for the veterans or widows or dependents and crippled children who are provided for in special acts of Congress are to be paid out of this appropriation?

Mr. GALLIVAN. They are.

Mr. WALSH. Well, how can the committee estimate how many pensions will be provided for by special legislation?

Mr. GALLIVAN. Well, the committee is guided by the estimate submitted by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. WALSH. Well, how does he know?

Mr. GALLIVAN. Well, I suppose in the light of past experience. He has no other way of estimating this item.

Mr. WALSH. He just averages according to past experience?

Mr. GALLIVAN. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. NORTON. How many are receiving pensions as a result of the War of 1812?

Mr. GALLIVAN. The gentleman will find that in the report. There are 109 widows receiving pensions as a result of the War of 1812.

Mr. ROBBINS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GALLIVAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBBINS. What provision is made in this bill, if any, for caring for increased pensions granted under the act of October, 1917, to widows whereby their pension is made $25?

Mr. GALLIVAN. There is an increase of $28,000,000.

Mr. ROBBINS. Is that provided for in this bill?

Mr. GALLIVAN. Yes; I have already explained that.

Mr. ROBBINS. I noted the gentleman's explanation, but I was not sure the committee had made adequate provision so that these cases could be properly adjudicated and paid when adjudicated.

Mr. GALLIVAN. There are $28,000,000 added to the original estimate on account of increases caused by that special act, and we were assured that this sum is amply sufficient.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GALLIVAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. If it were not for the increases to widows and the contemplated increases that are to be made under the bill we passed the other day there would be a continual and very large reduction in the pension roll, would there not?

Mr. GALLIVAN. Without any question.

Mr. TOWNER. The increases that are contemplated in the bill which is now in the Senate, and which has passed the House, I believe are not taken into consideration in the estimated amount?

Mr. GALLIVAN. Not at all; because that will be taken care of, as I have explained, in the deficiency bill which will come in later.

Mr. TOWNER. The increase will have to be based upon the terms of the bill as it finally passes?

Mr. GALLIVAN. Exactly. It was informally discussed in our committee, and it was thought it might require between $20,000,000 and $40,000,000, but no one seemed to know, of course, what it would be.

Mr. TOWNER. Decreases are continually being made on account of deaths, especially of veterans of the Civil War, and they are increasing every year, are they not?

Mr. GALLIVAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROGERS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GALLIVAN. I will.

Mr. ROGERS. I think most of the Members of the House who have more or less to do with pension claims have been greatly disturbed at the long delays, especially in connection with the widows' increases, in the Bureau of Pensions. I wondered if the gentleman has any information as to how nearly up to date the Bureau of Pensions is and what the cause of that long delay has been?

Mr. GALLIVAN. I regret to say I have not. That matter was not brought up in the committee. You will understand we have nothing to do with the personnel of the Pension Bureau.

Mr. ROGERS. Does the gentleman know whether there is any provision in this bill for an extra number of clerks to be used in this bureau which will enable them to do that?

Mr. GALLIVAN. In this bill?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Absolutely not. That is taken care of in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

Mr. DYER. I call the gentleman's attention to the last part of the bill—

For fees and expenses of examining surgeons, pensions, for services rendered within the fiscal year of 1919, $50,000.

That is for additional surgeons?

Mr. GALLIVAN. No; that is to pay those now in the employ of the department as surgeons. That is the annual appropriation fixed by law.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GALLIVAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman give the figures he gave a while ago of the average annual pensions of Civil War veterans?

Mr. DYER. The gentleman will find in the very splendid report presented by the subcommittee on page 7 it is $274.70.

Mr. DENISON. I understood the gentleman from Massachusetts to say two hundred and ninety some odd dollars.

Mr. GALLIVAN. The average annual pension of Civil War veterans last year was $290.26, according to the supplementary report filed by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. DENISON. That is something less than $25 a month?

Mr. GALLIVAN. Apparently.

Mr. DENISON. Since the pensions of widows have been increased to $25 a month, has the gentleman's committee figured there would be a large decrease in the pension rolls by reason of the death of veterans?

Mr. GALLIVAN. Why, it was the opinion of the department, that while, of course, with the death of the old soldiers the widows' list increased, the dropping of so many names from the Civil War lists will practically take care of the increase caused by the increase in the number of widows.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GALLIVAN. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. Does this bill take into consideration the bill that was passed here recently increasing the pensions?

Mr. GALLIVAN. For the third time, I will say to the gentleman——

Mr. DOWELL. I was not present at the time the gentleman stated it.

Mr. GALLIVAN. It does not, because this committee has no jurisdiction over that. That will be taken care of in the deficiency bill, to be reported later, if the bill referred to is enacted into law. This committee on pension appropriations had nothing whatever to do with it, because it is not yet law.

Mr. DOWELL. This only applies, then, to the pensioners that are now on the rolls, as provided under the law?

Mr. GALLIVAN. That is all.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] will use some of his time.

Mr. LOBECK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GALLIVAN. Yes.

Mr. LOBECK. The question was asked a few moments ago as to whether it would be necessary to have an increase of clerks over at the Pension Bureau. I have been informed by employees there that they are well up with their work, and that there will be no increase, so far as clerks and other help in the office there are concerned.

Mr. GALLIVAN. That is purely a matter of administration and will be taken care of in another bill, if it is necessary.

Mr. LOBECK. The question was asked, and that is my information on the subject.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Recently there has been a flat rate allowed to the widows of the veteran soldiers of $25 a month?

Mr. GALLIVAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Is there any disposition on the part of the committee to give veterans a flat rate—an equal or a larger amount?

Mr. GALLIVAN. Our committee could not consider such a proposition because we have not the authority. This is the Subcommittee on Pension Appropriations which has the floor. The Pension Committee would properly have the right to consider the gentleman's proposition.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing certain correspondence with the Civil Service Commission.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by printing certain correspondence with the Civil Service Commission. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, a little over a year ago the Postmaster General wrote to Members of Congress, requesting that they call at his office, as he had something of importance to say to them. Those who called upon him were advised that henceforth all postmasters would be appointed by virtue of a civil-service examination; that political consideration would in the future play no part in the appointment of postmasters, and that the merit system invoked by Presidents Roosevelt and Taft in the appointment of fourth-class postmasters would in the future apply to the appointment of postmasters of the other classes.

This announcement brought a storm of protest from our Democratic friends. This was natural when we recall that but few men on that side of the Chamber believe in the merit system. Having just emerged from a national election in which they were victorious, they argued that "to the victor belong the spoils," and demanded the retention of the spoils system, and the right to name the postmasters in their respective communities. Yet, in the face of this demand, the President issued the splendid Executive order of March 31, 1917, which reads as follows:

Hereafter when a vacancy occurs in the position of postmaster of an office of the first, second, or third class, as the result of death, resignation, removal, or, on the recommendation of the First Assistant Postmaster General, approved by the Postmaster General, to the effect that the efficiency or needs of the service requires that a change shall be made, the Postmaster General shall certify the fact to the Civil Service Commission, which shall forthwith hold an open competitive examination to test the fitness of applicants to fill such vacancy, and when such examination has been held and the papers in connection therewith have been rated, the said commission shall certify the result thereof to the Postmaster General, who shall submit to the President the name of the highest-qualified eligible for appointment to fill such vacancy unless it is established that the character or residence of such applicant disqualifies him for appointment. No person who has passed his 65th birthday shall be given the examination herein provided for.

I was very strongly impressed with the high position taken by the President in the issuance of this order. It has the right ring; it is founded upon a principle that should govern the appointment of all officials who are to serve, not a single public official, but a general public. No Member of Congress ought to be permitted to pay his political debts by the appointment of a person who is to serve an intelligent community as its postmaster. No public official should be permitted to build up a political machine, extend his political influence, or retain his political position by the appointment of officials who are to perform a distinctively public service. So, too, no political party ought to be permitted to extend its influence and power by such methods. Postmasters are intrusted with the performance of very sacred duties. To them are intrusted messages of strictest business confidence and of matters strictly personal. Their appointments ought to be made, not from political consideration, but solely from the standpoint of fitness to perform a great public service.

It was no doubt a realization of these considerations that caused President Wilson to issue the Executive order referred to, which if honestly carried out would take the appointment of all postmasters out of politics, and provide for their appointment as stated in the Executive order, through an open, competitive examination by the Civil Service Commission. The order left no room for political considerations in the matter of appointment. It is explicit in the minutest detail. It provides that the "Postmaster General shall certify the fact of the vacancy to the Civil Service Commission, which shall forthwith hold an open, competitive examination to test the fitness of all applicants to fill such vacancy, and when such examination has been held and the papers in connection therewith have been rated, the commission shall certify the result thereof to the Postmaster General, who shall submit to the President the name of the highest-qualified eligible for appointment to fill such vacancy."

Here was a plan that was fair and just, not only to the public but to the persons who might be candidates for appointment. Under it every candidate would have an equal opportunity, irrespective of political considerations, and the public would secure the services of the man best qualified to perform the service. This plan received general public approval and at the same time received the condemnation of the spoilsman. The pressure brought upon the Postmaster General and the President to repeal this order must have been tremendous, for the original plan has been absolutely abandoned.

I would not indulge in criticism at this time if the President, desiring to recede from the position he had taken in the Executive order of March 31, 1917, had changed or even repealed that order, and I am only indulging in criticism at this time because the President and the Postmaster General have invaded the sacred precincts of the Civil Service Commission and secured the adoption of rules and regulations by that commission governing the examination of candidates for postmaster in offices other than the fourth class that make the civil-service examination a deception and a farce and leaves the appointment of postmasters as much under the spoils system as ever.

When I received a copy of the Civil Service Commission circular No. 201 I was amazed to read the ingenious plan therein set out which practically nullifies the Executive order of March 31, 1917. Under the new plan the applicant for appointment for the position of postmaster other than fourth class will be examined on the following subjects, which will have the relative weights indicated:

	Weights.
1. Education	20
2. Business training and experience	80
Total	100

The circular further provides:

Method of rating: * * * The rating on business training and experience will be determined by the character and extent of the business training and experience of the applicant as shown, first, by his answer to question 23 of the application, which reads as follows:

"Question 23. State fully and in detail all the practical experience you have had in the profession, occupation, or business in which you seek employment, or in professions or occupations of a similar character. State (a) when, giving dates, (b) where, and (c) by whom you were employed; (d) the salary or compensation received; (e) the specific nature of your duties in each case. (The answer to this question should be accurate and complete.) If there are any branches of a profession or occupation in which you regard yourself as especially expert, state what branches.

"And, second, by a careful personal investigation of each applicant by representatives of the Civil Service Commission, one of whom is to be selected by the commission from the Post Office Department, such representatives to make report of their investigation direct to the commission.

It is to be observed that the rating on business training and experience counts 80 per cent in the examination and that under the order of the commission this test is to be conducted, not by the Civil Service Commission alone but also by a representative from the Post Office Department. Is it possible that the Civil Service Commission does not have the ability to conduct the examinations it is authorized to give without calling upon the heads of the departments involved to assist? Is it possible that this great commission, which has examined, rated, and passed favorably upon 607,000 persons now employed by the Government, is not capable of determining the business qualifications and experience of persons to be appointed postmaster? From what source did this demand come that the Civil Service Commission abrogate a part of its duties and turn them over to the Post Office Department? Certainly the decision to have some one from the Post Office Department pass on the business qualifications and experience of postmasters which are to be appointed strictly under the civil-service rules and regulations could not have emanated from the commission itself. If the commission felt incapable of passing upon this question, the commissioners should have resigned their positions. Instead they have stultified the work of a great commission and struck a deadly blow at the merit system.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman state again the total number of employees passed into the service by the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. GOOD. Six hundred and seven thousand.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does that constitute the entire force of Government employees at the present time?

Mr. GOOD. No.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. There are more?

Mr. GOOD. There are a great many who have been covered into the service by Executive order, and a great many more who entered the service, perhaps temporarily, but who have never taken the examination. There are still other employees in departments or bureaus to which the civil service does not apply.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is the Executive order being used to a very large extent now for the appointment of employees outside of the civil service?

Mr. GOOD. I could not say as to that.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Has the gentleman any figures which will show the number of employees of the Government appointed under the Executive order and those appointed through the civil service?

Mr. GOOD. No; I have not. In making this investigation I only looked up the number who had been rated by the Civil Service Commission and had received their appointments through the examinations conducted by that commission.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I was wondering whether the gentleman could give any comparative figures as between the present time and two or three years ago?

Mr. GOOD. I could not give the gentleman that information.

Mr. COX. The matter stated by the gentleman from Iowa is new and very interesting to me. These regulations had entirely escaped my attention. This is what I would like to have the gentleman tell me, if he can: Does the Civil Service Commission hold examinations first, and then is some employee of the Post Office Department, presumably a postal inspector, detailed to look up and announce the qualifications of the men thus examined by the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. GOOD. The Civil Service Commission conducts an open competitive examination as to education, which counts for 20 per cent. Then the commission sends out two persons——

Mr. COX. The Civil Service Commission?

Mr. GOOD. The Civil Service Commission sends out two persons to investigate the applicant upon his business training and experience. Of those two persons one is from the Post Office Department. That examination is not an open one. It is a sort of an oral test. The persons appointed to do that work can do it behind closed doors, can examine the persons privately, and can secure information from whatever source they desire. I understand such information is not made public.

Mr. COX. Then, after that examination is conducted, by a member of the Civil Service Commission and by some one from the Post Office Department, do these two men then certify the eligible list back to the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. GOOD. I suppose the result of that is transmitted to the Civil Service Commission, and that commission then makes the rating upon the reports thus made, and then the final result is certified to the Postmaster General.

Mr. COX. Certifies the highest man?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; I suppose that is the way.

Mr. COX. The one who has made the best showing?

Mr. GOOD. Under this finding.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GALLIVAN. There is not really any examination, as I understand. It is simply a rating on the report of these men, as explained by the gentleman.

Mr. GOOD. I think there is really no examination at all; at least there is no such examination as is conducted in all other cases by the Civil Service Commission to ascertain the fitness of experts in what are called nonassembled examinations.

After reading Circular No. 201, I became satisfied that that demand to adopt this new plan had come not from the commission itself but from either the Postmaster General or the President, and on an investigation I find that it came from both of these officials.

On April 29, 1918, I addressed a letter to Hon. J. A. McIlhenny, president of the Civil Service Commission, making inquiry into this question, and asked for the minutes of the Civil Service Commission dealing with this subject. I shall insert in the RECORD a copy of Mr. McIlhenny's very illuminating reply.

Mr. LONGWORTH. May I interrupt the gentleman? I should like very much to hear that letter read.

Mr. GOOD. The letter of Mr. McIlhenny?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. I have a copy of it here. If I can have some additional time, I will ask the Clerk to read it.

Mr. CANNON. How long will it take to read it?

Mr. GOOD. Perhaps 10 minutes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I think it would be interesting to have it read.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman desires to have it read, I will yield to him five minutes additional.

Mr. GOOD. I will ask the Clerk to read it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. May I ask the gentleman if this refers only to fourth-class postmasters, or does it refer to others?

Mr. GOOD. The order of President Roosevelt placed the appointment of a part of the fourth-class postmasters under the civil service. The subsequent order of President Taft covered all the rest of the fourth-class postmasters into the civil service. That was the situation when this order of March 31 was made. The order of March 31 applies to first, second, and third class postmasters. Now, I will ask the Clerk to read the letter.

The Clerk read the letter of the president of the Civil Service Commission printed at the conclusion of Mr. GOOD's remarks.

Mr. LONGWORTH. May I ask the gentleman where, in his opinion, that Executive order leaves the matter, so far as the civil service is concerned?

Mr. GOOD. The Executive order itself remains in effect. Practically, the situation is this: The Democratic Members of the House, for instance, do not now have anything to say with regard to the appointment of postmasters, but the recommendation comes from a person in the Postmaster General's Office, who has been temporarily loaned to the Civil Service Commission to perpetrate this outrage.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman 10 minutes more.

Mr. GOOD. The action of the commission in this regard is so unusual and, to my mind, so destructive of the principle of the merit system that I was also led to ask the president of the commission if there was any other class of civil-service appointees wherein a test examination, such as is provided for in the examination of candidates for appointment as postmaster, was conducted in part by the official in whose department the successful candidate was to be appointed. President McIlhenny has sent me a large number of circulars announcing civil-service examinations for highly trained experts wherein an oral test is provided. But in not a single instance is this examination, or any part of it, conducted by anyone except the commission itself, and the official to whose department such appointee will be assigned has absolutely no part in conducting such examination.

According to its minutes, the Civil Service Commission, on January 18 last, sent to the Post Office Department a copy of its draft for examinations under the President's Executive order of March 31, 1917. The letter transmitting the same stated:

> The commission does not favor any oral test or any investigation of applicants except under circumstances similar to those under which such investigations are now made according to the usual practice of the commission in cases of high-grade nonassembled examinations.

Unquestionably that was the correct position for the commission to take. That is the position it should have maintained. It could not with credit and honor take any other position. How could it make the exception and permit the Post Office Department to assist in conducting the examination without admitting its own inability to conduct such examination?

The real reason why the commission yielded is frankly told by the president of the commission in his letter, from which I quote:

> The commission was later advised by the Post Office Department that the different plans of the announcement submitted by the commission had been taken up with the President, who had expressed a desire to pass upon the matter before final action was taken, and who personally made some changes lessening the requirements as to length of experience. The final result appears in the published announcement of March 12, 1918. The following is a copy of minute 12 of the commission's minutes of February 23, 1918:
> "Postmaster examination (other than fourth class): Announcement of examinations for positions of postmaster will be made according to the form approved by the President and the Postmaster General."

That is the meat in the coconut. To carry out strictly the Executive order of March 31, 1917, would have taken the appointment of all postmasters out of politics. Politically every candidate would have stood on an equality, and the Civil Service Commission, unhampered by the Executive or by the Postmaster General, would have conducted an honest and nonpartisan examination. But with this modification the examination is the examination of the Postmaster General.

This being the case, can anyone say that the appointment of postmasters other than those of the fourth class was by said Executive order taken out of politics? In this connection the partisanship of the Postmaster General must be remembered. His political bias is well known to the most of the Members of this House. It was my privilege to serve with him here for a period of four years, and I have felt that his services as a Member of Congress were distinguished largely by the partisanship which he displayed. He has ability of a high order. He is also a partisan of the most intense kind. I do not underestimate his ability, neither do I overestimate his partisanship. When we recall that it was the same Burleson who, as a Member of the House, when the Republicans were in control and CANNON was Speaker, offered the resolution declaring the office of Speaker of the House vacant, who is now to conduct this nonpartisan examination of postmasters, one will readily understand the extent to which the appointment of such postmasters has been taken out of politics. At this time, when the two sides of the House are almost equal in membership, there is not a Republican Member who is partisan enough to make a similar motion. It required a partisan of the most pronounced type to make that motion then, and to just such a partisan has the Civil Service Commission turned over the matter of passing upon the qualifications of the applicants for appointment as postmaster, and it will be claimed that the President has taken the appointment of such postmasters out of politics.

May I not suggest to those intrusted with the writing of the forthcoming Democratic campaign textbook that in eliminating from their last publication the eulogistic statements as to how the President had kept us out of war that they substitute in its place the announcement that through the wise and nonpartisan action of the President in issuing the Executive order of March 31, 1917, the dream of a century has been realized by taking the appointment of postmasters out of politics? These two claims belong to the same class, and when one has become a little shopworn the other can safely be substituted for it. [Applause.]

I say without fear of successful contradiction that this examination will be controlled by the Post Office Department. If the President and the Postmaster General were strong enough to force the commission to the humiliating surrender which it has made, they are strong enough and will dominate in the conduct of these examinations. I do not mean to say that all Democrats will be appointed. Some Republicans will be appointed, of course; otherwise the deception will be too apparent. But in the main the appointments will be made not on the recommendations of Members of Congress as formerly, not in accordance with civil-service rules and regulations as obtains in the case of all other civil-service appointees, but under a fake examination wherein the Postmaster General will determine the qualifications of the appointees.

Never before was it considered fair for one side to change the rules after the game had started. Never before was it considered fair or honorable for one team to substitute an interested umpire for a disinterested one. It is not fair or honorable now, and the fact that the change has been made by one high in authority does not make it so.

I am led to make these observations in order that the House and country might know the actual facts governing the appointment of postmasters, other than those of the fourth class. I would not complain in the slightest if the President and the Postmaster General had proceeded in the usual way of appointing only Democratic postmasters. That would have been the natural thing; it would have been founded on almost an unbroken line of precedents. But what I do complain of is the hypocrisy and deceit involved in the present plan of appointing postmasters. If the appointment of all postmasters is to be placed under the civil-service rules and regulations, the same rules and regulations governing their examination and appointment should be observed that are enforced in the examination and appointment of all other civil-service employees. The Postmaster General should not have been permitted to substitute his partisanship for the nonpartisanship of the Civil Service Commission. I complain of this grand larceny of the functions of the Civil Service Commission, because I believe in the merit system, and I hate to see it used as the cat's-paw for ambitious politicians.

Mr. Speaker, the times demand fairer and more honorable treatment than this. The times demand that said Executive order be either repealed or strictly enforced. The spirit of America to-day is loyal, patriotic, and nonpartisan. That spirit should prompt us to forget parties and partisanship in the selection of men to perform public functions; that spirit should actuate us to search out the best man available for every public duty, and then put him in that place, in order that our country may play the part of a greater America. That spirit is not and can not be deceived by this camouflage thrown about the Executive order of March 31, 1917. May not that spirit yet actuate the administration and bring about either a repeal of the Executive order of March 31, 1917, or a release of the Civil Service Commission from partisan domination. [Applause.]

CIRCULAR OF CIVIL SERVICE COMMITTEE.

[No. 201. United States civil-service examination. Postmaster examination. Compensation above $2,400 per annum. Apr. 16, 1918.]

At the request of the Postmaster General, the United States Civil Service Commission announces an open competitive examination to fill a vacancy in the position of postmaster at each of the offices hereinafter named. This is not an examination under the civil-service act and rules, but is held under an Executive order of March 31, 1917, which reads as follows:

"Hereafter when a vacancy occurs in the position of postmaster of any office of the first, second, or third class, as the result of death, resignation, removal, or, on the recommendation of the First Assistant Postmaster General, approved by the Postmaster General, to the effect that the efficiency or needs of the service requires that a change shall be made, the Postmaster General shall certify the fact to the Civil Service Commission, which shall forthwith hold an open competitive examination to test the fitness of applicants to fill such vacancy, and when such examination has been held and the papers in connection therewith have been rated, the said commission shall certify the result thereof to the Postmaster General, who shall submit to the President the name of the highest qualified eligible for appointment to fill such vacancy, unless it is established that the character or residence of such applicant disqualifies him for appointment. No person who has passed his sixty-fifth birthday shall be given the examination herein provided for."

Competitors will be examined in the following subjects, which will have the relative weights indicated:

Subjects.	Weights.
1. Education	20
2. Business training and experience	80
Total	100

In addition to the full and detailed information called for by questions 21 and 23 of Form 1312, the applicants should furnish the following in connection with each responsible position held by them:

(a) The number of persons under their supervision.

(b) The character of the business done by the person, firm, or corporation.

(c) The volume of business done annually.

(d) The commercial rating of each person, firm, or corporation.

To be eligible for this position an applicant must be a citizen of the United States, must actually reside within the delivery of the office for which the application is made, and must have been such resident at the time of the occurrence of the present vacancy.

For offices paying more than $6,000 a year the applicants must show that for at least seven years they have held responsible positions in which the principal duties involved the management of business affairs, such positions as those of president, general manager, general superintendent, or assistant general superintendent, requiring active charge of firms, corporations, businesses, or offices, and such positions in different branches of the Postal Service.

For offices paying over $4,000, up to and including $6,000 a year, the applicants must show that for at least five years they have held responsible positions in which the principal duties involved the management of business affairs, such positions as those of president, general manager, general superintendent, or assistant general superintendent, requiring the active charge of firms, corporations, or offices, and such positions in the different branches of the Postal Service.

For offices paying over $2,400, up to and including $4,000 a year, applicants must show that for at least three years they have held responsible positions in which the principal duties involved the management of business affairs and the direction and supervision of employees, including such positions in the different branches of the Postal Service.

Statements as to education and experience are subject to verification.

Applicants for the position of first-class postmaster must have reached their thirtieth birthday, and for second-class postmaster, their twenty-fifth birthday, on the date of making oath to the application, and must be in good physical condition.

Applicants must submit with their applications their photograph taken within two years.

Persons who meet the requirements and desire this examination, should at once apply for Form 1312, stating the title of the examination for which the form is desired, to the Civil Service Commission, Washington, D. C., or at the post office in the city where the vacancy exists. Applications should be properly executed, excluding the medical and county officer's certificates, and filed with the commission at Washington prior to the hour of closing business on April 16, 1918.

METHOD OF RATING.

The rating on the educational qualifications of the applicant will be determined from the information furnished in answer to question 21 of the application, as follows, and upon corroborative information:

"Question 21. With respect to both your general and technical or professional education, state fully and in detail the names and locations of the schools or colleges you have attended and the courses of study pursued by you in each, naming any degree or degrees received by you, date conferred, and the institution by which conferred. If you have pursued any postgraduate courses of study, state fully what studies and when, where, and for what length of time they were pursued. (The answer to this question should be accurate and complete.)"

The rating on business training and experience will be determined by the character and extent of the business training and experience of the applicant as shown, first, by his answer to question 23 of the application, which reads as follows:

"Question 23. State fully and in detail all the practical experience you have had in the profession, occupation, or business in which you seek employment, or in professions or occupations of a similar character. State (a) when, giving dates, (b) where, and (c) by whom you were employed; (d) the salary or compensation received; (e) the specific nature of your duties in each case. (The answer to this question should be accurate and complete.) If there are any branches of a profession or occupation in which you regard yourself as especially expert, state what branches."

And, second, by a careful personal investigation of each applicant by representatives of the Civil Service Commission, one of whom is to be selected by the commission from the Post Office Department, such representatives to make report of their investigation direct to the commission. The investigation and report should cover two purposes, namely, first, full inquiry as to each candidate's suitability for the office by reason of his character and personal characteristics, this part of the inquiry to be noncompetitive and not considered in the rating of the candidate, but if he is found unsuitable by the commission as a result of such inquiry, he, of course, will not be declared eligible; the second purpose of the investigation should be the same careful personal inquiry from persons best qualified to know of the business qualifications, ability, and experience of each candidate, the report of such inquiry to be confined to findings of facts and to be made a part of the evidence and record upon which the commission rates the candidate.

APRIL 29, 1918.

Hon. J. A. MCILHENNY,
President Civil Service Commission, Washington, D. C.

SIR: Having been a believer in the merit system and a defender of the principles of the civil service, I am amazed at the provisions contained in circular No. 201, which relates to the examination for postmasters with compensation above $2,400 per annum. It seems to me that the Executive order of March 31, 1917, gave promise of a substantial step in advance in the matter of appointment of such postmasters. But I am constrained to believe that the rules adopted by the commission calculated to bring said order into force are not only injurious to the merit system, but if the same principles therein adopted are also adopted in conducting other examinations, the result will be to impair all of the good work which your commission has done and eventually destroy the merit system itself.

It is to be observed that under the rules of the commission the rating on business training and experience will be determined, first, by the applicant's answer to question 23 of the application, "and second, by a careful personal investigation of each applicant by representatives of the Civil Service Commission, one of whom is to be selected by the commission from the Post Office Department."

I should like to know if this rule was adopted at the suggestion of the Post Office Department, or is it a rule originating within the Civil Service Commission? I can not conceive that the Civil Service Commission should have so little confidence in itself that it would require some other organization to select a part of its force, especially when that force is to determine questions of such magnitude and importance. If it is not asking too much, I shall be very glad to be furnished with a copy of the minutes or the record of the commission showing the action of the commission in adopting this method of conducting the examination. To my mind the method adopted will permit the Post Office Department to make its political appointments under the camouflage of the merit system. I do not object to the administration's making appointment of first-class postmasters as political appointments, but I do object to appointments being made under the guise of the merit system.

Will you also advise me if there is any other class of civil-service appointees where the rules providing for their examination permit an oral test to be conducted in the manner provided for in circular No. 201? If so, kindly furnish me the facts in such case.

I assure you that I am deeply interested in this matter and considerably exercised over the action of the commission. I shall, therefore, appreciate an early reply to this letter, together with a copy of the minutes of the commission showing the commission's action in determining the method of rating examinations of applicants for postmaster whose compensation is in excess of $2,400 per annum.

Very truly, yours,

JAMES W. GOOD.

UNITED STATES CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION,
Washington, D. C., May 2, 1918.

Hon. JAMES W. GOOD,
House of Representatives.

SIR: This commission begs to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of April 29, making inquiries concerning the announcement issued by this commission under date of March 12, 1918, for an examination for postmaster at each of various cities at compensation above $2,400 a year.

In order that you may be fully advised, the following is submitted as a statement of all the facts in the matter in the possession of the commission:

1. The following is the Executive order promulgated by the President under date of March 31, 1917:

"Hereafter when a vacancy occurs in the position of postmaster of any office of the first, second, or third class as the result of death, resignation, removal, or on the recommendation of the First Assistant Postmaster General, approved by the Postmaster General, to the effect that the efficiency or needs of the service requires that a change shall be made, the Postmaster General shall certify the fact to the Civil Service Commission, which shall forthwith hold an open competitive examination to test the fitness of applicants to fill such vacancy, and when such examination has been held and the papers in connection therewith have been rated the said commission shall certify the result thereof to the Postmaster General, who shall submit to the President the name of the highest qualified eligible for appointment to fill such vacancy unless it is established that the character or residence of such applicant disqualifies him for appointment. No person who has passed his sixty-fifth birthday shall be given the examination herein provided for."

2. When it became the duty of the commission, under the Executive order of March 31, 1917, to hold examinations for post offices at compensation above $2,400 a year, following the same procedure as in the case of competitive examinations for the classified service, it conferred with the Post Office Department, with a view to ascertaining the requirements of these positions and the qualifications requisite for filing them. Thereafter a draft of the announcement of the examination was prepared in the office of the commission, and the commission formally acted upon such draft on January 18, 1918. The following is a copy of minute 5 of the commission's minutes of that date:

"Examinations for postmaster, $2,400 to $6,000 per annum: Draft of an announcement of an examination for postmaster is approved with the exception of the paragraph relating to an oral test. A draft of this announcement, omitting said paragraph, will be sent to the Post Office Department for its consideration, the letter of transmittal to state that the commission does not favor any oral test or any investigation of applicants except under circumstances similar to those under which such investigations are now made according to the usual practice of the commission in the cases of high-grade nonassembled examinations. (G. C.)

"Commissioner McIlhenny approves the draft with the following exception: I think that a careful and drastic investigation of the character and business qualifications of each applicant should be made by representatives of the commission and that the prerequisites set out in the last clause of the tentative draft of the examination should be stated for the several classes of first-class offices rather than in the specific terms for all offices as in the present draft."

The action of the majority of the commission, as expressed in the immediately foregoing minute, and the action of the minority were both communicated to the Postmaster General. A copy of each of two letters to the Postmaster General, under date of January 16, 1918, and of one under date of January 17, 1918, is inclosed for your information. The commission was later advised by the Post Office Department that the different plans of the announcement submitted by the commission had been taken up with the President, who had expressed a desire to pass upon the matter before final action was taken and who personally made some changes lessening the requirements as to length of experience. The final result appears in the published announcement of March 12, 1918. The following is a copy of minute 12 of the commission's minutes of February 23, 1918:

"Postmaster examination (other than fourth class): Announcement of examinations for positions of postmasters will be made according to the form approved by the President and the Postmaster General."

3. It will be observed that in the announcement as finally approved and published there is no oral test; it is true that the rating on business training and experience will be determined by the character and extent of the business training and experience of the applicant, as shown, first, by his detailed sworn statements of his history, and, second, by the results of an investigation by representatives of the Civil Service Commission. Attention is invited to the provision in this respect that this investigation is to be made by representatives of the commission. It is true that one of those representatives is to be selected by the commission from the Post Office Department; when such representative is so selected, however, he is in every respect the representative of the commission, and not of the Post Office Department. Moreover, these representatives are required to make a report of their investigation direct to the commission. These representatives in this investigation have nothing whatever to do with the rating of applicants; they collect the second part of the evidence, upon which, together with the first part of the evidence, the commission, through its duly authorized representatives, will rate the applicants. This rating of applicants will be done solely by representatives of the commission in its own office, and no one from the Post Office Department, either as a representative of the commission or otherwise, will have anything to do with the rating of applicants. Furthermore, especial attention is invited to the provision of the announcement that the report of these representatives of the commission shall be confined to findings of facts and shall be made a part of the evidence and record upon which the commission rates the candidates. A reading of the published announcement, and especially of the paragraph providing for the investigation by representatives of the commission, shows that careful provision is made throughout to maintain in the commission, where it should be, entire authority and control over the examination.

4. For several years the commission has been holding examinations for the competitive classified service which have included the subject of training and experience, and in order to rate this subject properly it has been necessary for the commission to verify the sworn statements of applicants as to their training and experience by other evidence, including a careful investigation to check the claims of applicants. It is true that such investigation has in nearly all cases been conducted through confidential inquiries by mail, but in some few cases, where found desirable, by personal inquiry in the vicinity of the abode of the applicant. In the postmaster examination, instead of conducting this necessary investigation by mail, it is provided that it shall be conducted by personal inquiry in the applicant's community.

5. The work of rating the papers of this examination will be done by the most experienced examiners of the commission, who are entirely nonpartisan, and, furthermore, as indicated above, the rating will be based solely upon the evidence as to education, business training, and experience presented. There is nothing in connection with this examination that will in the slightest degree disclose the political or religious affiliations of any competitor.

6. Inclosed herewith are marked copies of announcements of some examinations—17 in number—in which an oral test has been included.

By direction of the commission.

Very respectfully, J. A. MCILHENNY, President.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COX], a member of the subcommittee.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I shall support the bill under consideration and briefly, later on, will have something to say about it.

I confess that the matters discussed by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], so far as the regulations of the Civil Service Commission are concerned, had escaped my attention. The gentleman seems to find a mare's nest somewhere in the Executive order issued by the President in 1917 and somewhat modified by an order issued last March. I am glad the gentleman was fair enough to put in the RECORD the letter read to the committee, signed by Mr. McIlhenny, because when you read Mr. McIlhenny's letter you will not find any politics in it, nor anything even squinting at politics; nor will you find that President Wilson has receded an inch from the order he issued in March, 1917, placing presidential postmasters in the civil service under an Executive order.

I am in favor of the civil service, and I suppose that every Member of the House who has gone through the era of appointing postmasters following a presidential election is in favor of it. Because when a Member of the House has 20 to 25 presidential postmasters to appoint he is going some. Whether he wants to go or not, the boys back home will make him go. I was extremely glad to get out from under the turmoil, trouble, and turbulent times of appointing postmasters when the President issued the order.

I took occasion three years ago on the floor of the House, when some bill was under consideration, to say that the only way you would ever get civil service entirely out of politics was to require the certification of the top person and require the appointing power to appoint whoever made the best grade.

There may be a few Republicans patriotic enough and with power enough to resist the pressure of the boys back home, but I do not see one before me now.

Mr. CARAWAY. They never were here. [Laughter.]

Mr. COX. Because when you have three persons certified ninety-eight out of one hundred of you are going to fall for your political job in your congressional district. What is the use of getting up and howling and camouflaging about it? Your intentions might be good, you might be actuated by the highest patriotic motives, but remembering that the boys back home gave you your job and that they are going to swoop down on you and say, "This man on the top of the list is a Democrat, and the second man is a Democrat; but the third man is a Republican, and there is something wrong with the Democrats; they ought not to have these jobs," you will find some way somewhere somehow, down in the department, for the third man to be appointed or else they will get your goat back home. [Laughter.] You men who represent cities may not be troubled that way. But the only way you will ever get away from making a football out of the civil service is to require the person charged with the responsibility of making the appointment to appoint the highest person on the eligible list. That is exactly what the President did in this order.

I do not think my friend the gentleman from Iowa detailed a single instance where the President had receded an inch from that order. He has lived up to the very letter of the order and only appointed the men at the top of the eligible list.

Mr. GOOD. I have no complaint to find with the Executive order of the President; but what was done was this: In conjunction with the Postmaster General, he forced the Civil Service Commission to modify its rules and required the Civil Service Commission to appoint one of the examiners from the Post Office Department.

Mr. COX. I will answer that from Mr. McIlhenny's letter when I get to it. The fact is, as I stated, the gentleman is not able to lay his hand on a single place where the President receded from his order in putting the presidential postmasters under the civil service by the order of March 1, 1917—not one. I imagine that there have been quite a number of presidential postmasters appointed since he issued the order, and I imagine that he has appointed, when the certification has been made to the Post Office Department, the highest grade there was, or I take it the gentleman from Iowa, who has carefully investigated it, would have found it out and put it in the RECORD; and his silence on this point to me is conclusive that the President has taken the appointment of postmasters out of the spoils class.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman is much in error; there have been no appointments made under that order.

Mr. COX. Oh, the gentleman is certainly mistaken.

Mr. GOOD. The Civil Service Commission advised me that they had not had any examinations.

Mr. COX. Scores and scores of them have been appointed since the order of 1917.

Mr. GOOD. The Civil Service Commission say they have not conducted an examination under that order.

Mr. COX. I refuse to yield further.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. For a question.

Mr. PADGETT. They conducted one in my district and have made the report, though it has not been acted upon as yet; and they have made various others in other portions of Tennessee.

Mr. GOOD. Is that first class?

Mr. PADGETT. A presidential postmaster.

Mr. GOOD. Oh, first class.

Mr. COX. I return to my original proposition, that the gentleman from Iowa has not shown, and I call on any other Member here present to show, where the President has deviated one inch from the provisions of his order of March, 1917, in the appointment of postmasters.

Mr. GILLETT. Does not the gentleman call it yielding one inch when, instead of having it made by the civil-service examination, he has the examination made by the Post Office Department?

Mr. COX. The gentleman did not catch the tenor of Mr. McIlhenny's letter. Some one over here says that the gentleman never saw it, and I imagine that is true or he would not talk that way. I want to call the committee's attention specifically to paragraph 3 of that letter and see what it does say. Let us analyze it for a moment. I am now going to read from the McIlhenny letter that was read by the Clerk for the benefit of the gentleman from Iowa:

It will be observed that in the announcement as finally approved and published there is no oral test; it is true that the rating on business training and experience will be determined by the character and extent of the business training and experience of the applicant as shown, first, by his detailed sworn statements of his history; and, second, by the results of an investigation by representatives—of the Civil Service Commission; attention is invited to the provision in this respect, that this investigation is to be made by representatives of the commission; it is true that one of these representatives is to be selected by the commission from the Post Office Department—

Of whom?—

The commission selects both of these men. The commission sends out its own men, and then the commission selects the representative of the Post Office Department, and sends both these men out to make the investigation of the applicant.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield me a little more time?

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. COX. I can not yield any more.

Mr. GOOD. For just a question?

Mr. COX. I can not yield. I continue the reading:

When such representative is so selected, however, he—

Who is this representative so selected? The representative selected by the commission from the Post Office Department—is in every respect the representative of the commission and not of the Post Office Department.

Mr. FESS. Why of the Post Office Department?

Mr. COX. It is perfectly plain that this manner of holding these examinations has not been taken out of the Civil Service Commission at all. The Civil Service Commission holds the examination. It selects its own representative to go out and investigate the character and standing of these men. On top of that it selects the man out of the Post Office Department, I presume, to go along with its own man, and after these two men, both selected by the Civil Service Commission, have investigated the character and standing of these applicants for the position of postmaster, they report back to the Civil Service Commission, and the Civil Service Commission assembles the examination and makes up its report and certifies it to the Postmaster General, and the one having the highest rating, and then under the President's Executive order of March, 1917, the Postmaster General is compelled, whether he wants to or not, to accept the man that is certified by the commission. Can you read any politics in that? Is there any politics in it? If I had time, I would go through all this letter of Mr. McIlhenny and show you. Besides, when you are talking about politics, did you ever stop to consider a moment the personnel, politically, of the Civil Service Commission? There are two Republicans and one Democrat.

Mr. GILLETT. Who are the two Republicans?

Mr. COX. You will not dispute that Mr. McIlhenny is one, will you?

Mr. GILLETT. Indeed, I will.

Mr. COX. What was he? Are you denying that Progressives belong to the Republican Party?

Mr. GILLETT. Does the gentleman claim that Mr. McIlhenny is a Republican?

Mr. COX. Absolutely.

Mr. GILLETT. I have never heard him called one.

Mr. COX. Everyone else except the gentleman has heard him so called.

Mr. GOOD. Where is he from?

Mr. COX. Louisiana. [Laughter.] The other gentleman, whose name I forget, is from the State of Washington, and are you going to deny him or say that he is not a Republican?

Mr. GILLETT. He was a Progressive.

Mr. COX. Does the gentleman want to take the position today that the Progressives are Democrats, that the Progressives are not Republicans?

Mr. GILLETT. I do not. I presume he is a Republican.

Mr. COX. My friend from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] criticized the Postmaster General, Mr. Burleson, because of his conduct when my good friend Mr. CANNON was Speaker of the House, in offering a resolution to declare the office of the Speaker vacant.

I have for Mr. CANNON the most profound respect, and always have had, and I think he is not only a great man of this House but a great man of America to-day. [Applause.] And I think he will bear me out in what I say. If I remember correctly, Mr. CANNON stood on the rostrum there and said, "This House can do whatever it pleases. I court any man to offer a resolution declaring the Speakership vacant." Mr. Burleson offered the resolution, and he forced lots of you men over there to vote for Mr. CANNON who did not want to do it.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. My recollection is that there was a question about the Speakership, and I said that under the Constitution any man at any time—it being a matter of the highest privilege—could offer that motion. Somebody, I think, asked whether I would recognize anyone now to offer it, and I said certainly I would. The vote then came—well, I will not go into it any further. [Laughter.]

Mr. COX. It was very funny to see many of the gentlemen on the Republican side of the House running to cover and voting to retain the Speaker. Probably some of my friends from Iowa were in that class. I do not know how they all voted, but, as I recall, Progressivism at that time was rampant in Iowa, and I imagine the question of CANNON and Cannonism was rather a fierce issue out there. But important legislation was pending, and I rather suspect that was the reason most of them voted for the retention of Speaker CANNON.

Mr. FORDNEY. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. For a question.

Mr. FORDNEY. I will say to the gentleman at the time the Speaker made that statement I held in my possession a resolution to offer, but Mr. Burleson offered his before I offered mine.

Mr. COX. He beat you to it, in other words?

Mr. FORDNEY. I was willing he should. I only intended to offer the motion in case some one else did not.

Mr. COX. I think it was due Speaker CANNON that some one should offer the resolution.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. COX. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LOBECK].

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I am glad to be present to support this pension appropriation bill, the same as I have in the past supported every pension bill and every pension appropriation bill that has come up before the Congress when I could be present. A few days ago a brave soldier boy, Sergt. Kenneth Hatch, from my city, whom I have known since he was a small boy, passed away. There was a beautiful tribute spoken about him at the funeral, and, with the permission of the committee, I desire to read from the Omaha Nebraskan of May 2:

A BEAUTIFUL TRIBUTE.

The funeral service of Kenneth Hatch, only son of Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Hatch, 3819 Charles Street, Omaha, was held at Elks' Hall, this city, Saturday last. Kenneth was a first sergeant, Omaha Hospital Corps, Camp Taylor, Ky. He died as the result of an operation. At the funeral services Rev. F. O Winslow, pastor Walnut Hill Methodist Church, read a beautiful tribute. This tribute was written by Mr. Winslow himself in these splendid words:

"Oh, blessed land, America!
The Nation of the free,
Where glittering crowns can never rule
The home of liberty;
Upon thy sacred altar here,
Where sorrow's shadows fall,
We lay this life—a patriot's life—
His princely gift—his all.

"Oh, blessed land of liberty!
The price you ask to-day,
To rid this world of shackles strong,
We break our hearts to pay.
For this dear flag—your flag and mine—
Is heard our country's call;
For this he gave his rich, strong life,
A priceless gift—his all.

"His work has ceased when scarce begun—
His armor laid aside;
He loved his country and his flag—
For these he lived and died.
What more can loyal patriots do
In answer to our Chieftain's call?
Our hero freely gave himself—
His youth, his hopes, his all!"

[Applause.]

I can also testify to the high character of Sergt. Hatch. I knew him well; he was of the same splendid American spirit that characterized the soldier boys in blue of 1861 to 1865. I remember as a small lad when soldier boys were brought home to the village cemetery who had gone away to fight for our country's defense and the flag. I remember when men came back when the war ended—those who did—and what they have done for the country's development and its industrial life since those days. They have done much more for our country than words can express, and therefore to-day I am glad, as I have been in the past, to vote for this annual appropriation bill that will be beneficial and helpful to the old soldiers, their widows, and dependents. This is money that is distributed through every State and Territory of the Union. This is money that goes to the homes of those who defended our flag when it was necessary, both in the Civil War and the Spanish-American War. I was glad to be present and vote for the measure that will take care of our soldiers who are going forth to-day to battle for the defense of our flag. I remember when brave soldier boys who, like Kenneth Hatch, were brought home to be laid away. Warren Penny, a Civil War soldier, a neighbor boy friend of mine, only 16 years of age, who took part in the Battle of Shiloh, and died shortly afterward, was brought to our village cemetery to be laid away. Two brothers took his place in the ranks, and his older brother, Theodore, fell at Knoxville. Then there was Nels Nelson, the only son of humble parents, who was brought back from Kentucky, and I saw him laid away, and whenever I go to the old village where they were buried I go to the cemetery and place a wreath on the graves in memory of my boyish friends who I remember so well. I envied those boys because they were old enough to go to defend our flag and I could not go because too young. The people of this country and Congress can never do too much for the defenders of our flag, and I shall vote for this bill, as I have voted for every pension appropriation bill and for every pension bill that has been enacted into law since I have been a Member of Congress for the defenders of our country, their widows, and their dependents. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, how much time is there left?

The CHAIRMAN. Twenty-four minutes.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Three on the other side and 21 minutes on this side?

Mr. CANNON. I have got more than three minutes.

Mr. GALLIVAN. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL].

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Chairman, this is the annual pension appropriation bill, and while I do not intend strictly to confine myself to the provisions of the bill I desire to speak upon a subject that I think is kindred to it, and can very properly be discussed, especially under general debate, while this bill is before the House for consideration.

I have introduced a bill, which has been favorably reported to this House by the Judiciary Committee, and I hope at an early day to get unanimous consent for its consideration and passage. The purpose of the bill is plainly expressed in its title; that is, to forbid the payment of pensions to any one who is or may hereafter be found to be disloyal to the United States Government during the present war, and I hope the mere statement of its purpose will be sufficient to enlist the support of every Member of this House.

To the mind of a rational American citizen who loves his country, it is almost inconceivable that a veteran of the Civil War, who risked his life for the preservation of the Union, should to-day in the midst of the greatest crisis of our country's history turn against the country he bravely fought to preserve and sympathize with the murderous enemies who now seek its destruction, and yet information is abundant and conclusive that some, I trust not many, who are now and have for years been sustained by liberal pensions for valiant services in the past, are enemies of a grateful country.

I was a boy during the dark days of the Civil War, but I remember much of that turbulent and distressing period. I know from observation something of the trials, the dangers, and sufferings of the soldiers that participated in that fratricidal struggle, and have ever since admired and honored those who offered their lives in a cause that they believed to be right, regardless of the side on which they fought. [Applause.] Since I have been a Member of Congress I have been a friend to the old Union soldiers and have often actively participated here in legislation offered for their benefit, and shall continue to do so as long as I continue in public life, but gratitude for past services must not lead us to condone either treachery or disloyality in this hour of our country's peril.

We are at war with the highest trained military nation on earth, with an armed force of immense proportions, sustained and led by the most ambitious and bloodthirsty military chieftains the world ever saw. The issue is world domination and despotic power for the gratification and the glory of the heartless rulers of a servile people, against democracy and a just peace, for the benefit of humanity and a Christain civilization. A glorious cause in which to enlist, to fight, and, if necessary, to die!

It is estimated that the United States alone will spend about $30,000,000,000 in the next fiscal year in carrying on the war, equal to about $80,000,000 a day. This large sum must some time be paid by the American people, but even this is not the greatest burden that we shall bear. Dollars can not be compared with the blood that will be shed by our brave boys on the battle fields of France, nor the tears of mothers whose boys will sleep in foreign graves. We sometimes feel that we are making many sacrifices and some few are heard to complain about the necessary and wise food requirements, about the payment of increased taxes, the frequent calls upon us to assist in supporting the Red Cross, the Young Men's Christian Association, and other important agencies that are contributing so much to make more tolerable the Army lives of our faithful soldier boys who are fighting our battles "over there." We should desist from such complaints or hide our heads in shame when we remember the small and insignificant sacrifices that we make when compared with those of the boys who have left home and friends and gone to face the enemy among strangers in strange lands. We are still permitted to remain here at home, far away even from the sound of the death-dealing explosives of modern warfare. We are surrounded by our families and friends in a land of plenty amidst comforts and luxuries. We know nothing from experience of the real sacrifices that are being made by those who are fighting our battles, but we should willingly, without reserve and without stint, do all we can to support, sustain, and encourage them in their gallant and heroic fight for world peace, democracy, and humanity. [Applause.]

I believe it is the duty of every one who claims citizenship in the United States to do his full part to the utmost of his ability to support our Government and to uphold the hands of the Commander in Chief of our Army and Navy, and other legally constituted authorities, in this the most critical hour of our country's life, and the man who does not do so regardless of his past services or sentiments is not only undeserving of further aid from the Government, but is unworthy of citizenship in our beloved land, unworthy of the protection of our beneficent laws, and unworthy to longer dwell under the beautiful folds of the Stars and Stripes, the emblem of our country, which stands for justice, equality, and liberty. [Applause.]

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. For a question, if I have any time remaining.

Mr. DYER. I know, of course, my colleague from Misssouri is one of the best friends the soldiers of our country have. He has done a great service to them here in the Congress, and I was curious to know, having voted to report the bill to which the gentleman refers from the Committee on the Judiciary, if he had in mind any disloyalty on the part of the veterans in this country who are now residing in the United States, or if he had in mind those who might be living in one of the enemies' countries.

Mr. RUSSELL. I have received a number of letters from very reputable men, whom I know, reporting such disloyalty. I have received a number of letters from other parts of the country from several of the States. There was placed in my hands a number of letters, perhaps 30 or 40, by the Commissioner of Pensions, and he advised me that almost every day he receives letters from all parts of the country, stating that hundreds of soldiers were not loyal to the Government at this time. I had a number of those letters before the subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee, of which the gentleman is a member, and offered them to that committee at the time they gave me a hearing upon this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RUSSELL. May I have a minute's time in order to answer the question?

Mr. GALLIVAN. I am sorry, but I have not the time to yield.

Mr. DYER. I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that there are thousands of old soldiers in my district, many of them of German birth, who served in the Union Army, many of them born in Germany. I have never yet had my attention called to a single one who was not thoroughly and earnestly supporting the Government in every respect.

Mr. RUSSELL. I think a great majority of them are—in fact, I think nearly all—but there are possibly a very few who are not, and there ought not to be a single exception in all the limits of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. GALLIVAN. I yield one-half minute to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MEEKER].

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting an application which comes from the Merchants' Exchange of St. Louis for an increase of freight rates. This I do because of its being of value especially to the men of the southern part of the country.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting therein a communication from the Merchants' Exchange of St. Louis. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield seven minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS].

Mr. CANNON. And I yield three minutes of my time, being all the time I have remaining.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I am going to depart from the very specific to the very general in the few moments which I have of the time of the committee. I suppose every man in this body has over and over again in the last months asked himself the question, What is the proper function of the Congress in relation to the carrying on of the war? That is, of course, an exceedingly important question and an exceedingly large one. I shall address myself to it in my 10 minutes, although I am very frank to say that I realize my inadequacy to cope, in that time or in any length of time, with a problem of that magnitude.

The answer to that question is one of the great fundamentals before the country to-day. There are men who regard as usurpation many things for which the President has asked, many things which he has done. These men tremble lest the checks and balances of our Government be upset by the grants of these powers. I confess that I do not share their fears, however patriotic I know them to be.

I regarded the Overman bill, for example, which we passed Tuesday, as an inevitable development of the times, and I had no hesitation whatever in supporting it. I have no fear in these war days of intrusting to the Executive the broadest powers of administration. At the same time I thoroughly believe in the wisdom of the framers of our Constitution, who, with the greatest care, provided that the executive, the legislative, and the judicial branches of the Government should be coordinate in fact as well as in name. I should deplore deeply any suggestion that the balance of these branches should be permanently disturbed, and that the executive should after the return of peace outweigh the legislative.

But we are at war. We are engaged in a struggle for existence. We are upholding the thesis that republican forms of government shall, in future history, rise superior to autocratic forms of government. The greatest republics of the world, from Roman days down to the present time, have never hesitated to bestow upon the executive branch of the government supreme powers for waging war. They have not shrunk from creating even a dictatorship in order that the war should be vigorously prosecuted to a victorious end. In the Civil War we, as a Nation, gladly bestowed upon Lincoln the broad powers which he needed in order to bring about unity of effort and concentration of achievement. The result justified the soundness of the policy. When the emergency passed, almost in a day the executive returned to its position of equality. The balance of power, temporarily deranged for a great purpose, was restored almost overnight. Our allies in the present conflict have passed through the same transition. The democracies of Great Britain and France have, as the war progressed, given more and more power to the executive. The legislative has done this gladly and with a cordial recognition that their course was an inevitable corollary of war.

A legislature is not a body which can conduct a war. In the very nature of things that function belongs to the executive. Prompt, efficient, uniform, coordinate, and, if need be, the secret action necessary for military purposes can be attained in no other way. So I say I do not hesitate to give the President the powers which he asks.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS. Certainly.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Is there not this substantial difference between our form of government and the form of government of every European country, that there is no separation between the executive and legislative, or practically none, there; and in all cases there are those in charge of war operations who are now members of the legislative body?

Mr. ROGERS. I realize, of course, that the analogy between the United State, on the one hand, and Great Britain and France, on the other hand, is not a complete one; that the analogy can not be complete where there is a responsible ministerial form of government as distinguished from our own coordinate form of government. But at the same time, having that fact fully in mind, I still assert that there is to a degree an analogy, because the Parliament of England and the Legislature of France have both given over to the ministry much greater powers than they would have dreamed of giving in peace times.

Let me cite you an instance. We have heard a good deal in this House of the legislation for the conscription of aliens of Great Britain or France in this country, and vice versa. The Parliament of Great Britain last July passed a statute which authorized the executive branch of the Government, without further legislative action, to enter into a binding treaty with us for the reciprocal drafting of the aliens of each country residing in the country of the other. Now, that was a complete reversal of the usual policy of the English Parliament, and it is rather typical of the sort of thing they have done in this war.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Of course, however, the gentleman realizes that Lloyd-George could be turned out of office at any moment by a vote of the Parliament?

Mr. ROGERS. He could be turned out of office, but the treaty would stand undisturbed.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The treaty; but the conduct of the war is an absolutely different thing than in this country.

Mr. ROGERS. I realize, as I said at the outset, that the analogy is not complete, but at the same time the tendency of which I speak is very manifest in both England and France.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS. I will.

Mr. WALSH. My colleague has stated that he heard about this treaty as to drafting aliens in this country. Has the gentleman heard anything about that recently?

Mr. ROGERS. I went to the State Department about a week ago and was told by the solicitor that the agreement would be submitted to the Senate within a week. I asked a representative of the British embassy day before yesterday, and he said that the treaty was practically ready for resubmission to the Senate. That is all I know.

Mr. WALSH. I am glad to get that news.

Mr. ROGERS. I do not mean to suggest that Congress should go out of business in war time, or that it should slavishly follow every recommendation of the Executive. Not at all. In the framing of its legislation it should use the utmost care. In appropriating, in raising revenue, its responsibility is no less than in times of peace. In supervising the actions and expenditures of the Executive it can and should play a most useful and, indeed, essential part. In criticism, if it be the right kind of criticism, it can render inestimable service.

Just a word upon the propriety of criticism of the administrative branch by Members of Congress. It would be a sorry day for the country if all criticism ceased. In my judgment many of the most serious defects of war making in Great Britain and France have been overcome as the direct result of criticism, and often of very caustic criticism. Many of the wisest changes of war policy have been the outcome of such criticism. But the criticism in which we indulge in these great and solemn war days must be constructive and not destructive. I am frank to say that I have myself more than once indulged in adverse comment. But I can honestly say that whenever I have done so I have spoken only after searching my heart to know that my purpose was single-mindedly patriotic.

I have spoken out in an anxiety to build and not to tear down, to construct and not to destroy. I have always asked myself the question whether my word of criticism would do more good than harm. If I were not sure I have kept silent.

I have sought to remember that to err is human. I have reminded myself that, to paraphrase the words of Dr. Johnson, the United States, when transforming itself from a Nation at peace to a Nation at war, is like a dog walking on its hind legs—we wonder not that it does not do it better but that it does it at all. Of course, there have been mistakes, grievous mistakes, in the management of the war by the Democratic administration. But as a Republican I let my mind wander back just 20 years to the last foreign war waged by the United States. A Republican administration was then in power and conducted the war. Were there no mistakes made?

No man, I think, can question my Republicanism. But I am not, and never will be, among the carping critics of the men who are, as our chosen representatives, carrying on the war, and, I believe, doing the very best they can. My sympathies go out to President Wilson and those associated with him in authority. Theirs is a frightful load and burden of responsibility. Of course they will make mistakes. That is inevitable. But unless our words will certainly improve and not retard they had better not be spoken. Unless our criticism, viewed in the broadest possible way, tends to the attainment of the great goal—a victorious and lasting peace—it had better remain unuttered.

We are in a great tug of war in which the destinies not only of the United States but of the entire world depend upon the ability of men of all political parties to put patriotism above party and to pull together until the final victory is won, when the horrors of war shall no longer torture humanity, and when heaven-born peace and freedom shall settle upon a war-weary world. As the stars of heaven are lost to view in the greater light of the sun, so should party lines vanish when they interfere with the obligation of duty and sacrifice, with the service of our country, of humanity, yea, of Christianity itself. [Applause.]

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, has the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] used all of his time?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. GALLIVAN. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY].

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, it is with some hesitation that I rise to say what I do, and yet with the best of motives, following what the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL] has just said, about the existence of instances of disloyalty among some of the soldiers who wore the blue in the War between the States. I wish to state that there was another army in that great day, from 1861 to 1865, coming from the Southland. Permit me to say, also, that in all the Southland, I believe, you will find no name that was registered under the banner of Lee or in the hosts that fought for the Southland that is to-day disloyal to our common country. I have never heard of such a one, though I have scores of letters from old Confederates asking to be allowed to serve. [Applause.] I say this not to criticize the Army of the Union, but as a prelude to the expression of the belief that 99 per cent of those who wore the blue through that fearful time are to-day loyal, and, furthermore, that 100 per cent of those of the Union Army who were native Americans are all loyal to-day. The army of the South was all native American, or so imbued with the spirit of America that they loved our form of government and our ideals.

I say it in order to make this statement, that the ideals of the Southland were the ideals that that flag above the Speaker's desk stands for to-day. Our soldiers have received no pensions from the Federal Government. On the contrary, they have, without much murmuring, paid taxes in order to pay pensions to the Union soldiers. In truth and in fact the brave Confederate soldier knows that it is right that this Government should care for the brave soldier who fought for it and he does not object to paying just pensions. Had we won, our soldiers, too, would have been pensioned by our federal government. We lost, our federal government was dissolved, and our States were for a long time too poor to grant pensions. Our States have grown more prosperous, and I thank God that in later years we are able to, and do gladly, take care of the old Confederate soldier that needs help. We know that they fought from motives of as pure a patriotism as ever lived in human hearts, and for the preservation of the principles embodied in the Declaration of Independence and in the Constitution of the United States. In my judgment, if there was a difference in the intensity of the devotion of the two sections to these principles, the greater intensity of devotion belonged to the South. The old flame of the revolutionary spirit burned more fiercely there. The old spirit still burns all over the old Southland and all over our whole land, save in some dark, small corners where foreign influence has crept in. Around the camp fires over the seas our boys are gathered, and only generous rivalry exists between the sons of the blue and sons of the gray to see which ones of them can exemplify the noblest ideals of manhood and show the greatest devotion to human liberty; and I say all this with this in view, that when this war is over I hope the generous spirit of fraternity may spread over all this land, and that the lines that divided it heretofore, and somewhat still divide the North and the South, will be blotted out after the devotion shown by the sons of the South by the side of the devotion shown by the sons of the North, and that when this war is over there will be no North, no South, no East, no West, but one common country. [Applause.]

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, there will be no further speeches on this side.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Army and Navy pensions, as follows: For invalids, widows, minor children, and dependent relatives, Army nurses, and all other pensioners who are now borne on the rolls, or who may hereafter be placed thereon, under the provisions of any and all acts of Congress, $185,000,000: Provided, That the appropriation aforesaid for Navy pensions shall be paid from the income of the Navy pension fund, so far as the same shall be sufficient for that purpose: Provided further, That the amount expended under each of the above items shall be accounted for separately.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention, if the committee will permit me to speak out of order, to a bill that is now before the Committee on Education of the House and the Senate and which will come before the two bodies for consideration and action very soon. I refer to the soldiers' rehabilitation bill.

When the war-risk insurance measure was before the House it carried, as the Members will recall, three major articles. One referred to disabilities compensation, the second was the family allowance provision, while the third was the insurance feature. Members may recall that I urged at that time that there ought to be a fourth article carried with that measure, with equal rank in importance, namely, the provision for the rehabilitation and reeducation of wounded soldiers, a problem which must be met without the loss of time, since this situation of our soldiery will be imminent when this war gets on in full speed. At the time I called the attention of the country to the efforts that have been put forth by all the belligerent countries, as had then been reported through the press and by personal observation of various associations, some voluntary and others official, including the work of the Murray committee, of Great Britain, which was semiofficial. One of the earliest achievements in this line was the work of the mayor of Lyons, who had been wonderfully stimulated in his efforts by the report of what had been done in Belgium, even before the war had opened, for industrial cripples. I also took occasion to call attention to the wonderful work of Dr. Amar, of St. Maurice, just outside of Paris, in the more spectacular field of adjusting artificial limbs, whereby he has demonstrated that by the functional rehabilitation carried on in the primary hospital he could keep alive the muscles that would otherwise decay or, through the process of atrophy, would cease to be of any value—by certain manipulations—so that with a mutilated arm the muscle could be sufficiently manipulated and trained that an artificial limb could be attached and the mutilated man thus restored could run a typewriter or carry on numerous activities with wonderful agility.

I also mentioned the remarkable case of a violinist who had lost his right arm and through proper manipulation was able after a time to continue the pleasure of his art—to play the violin. The right arm was replaced by a steel arm.

I also took occasion to state quite fully what had been done in Canada, where the greatest advance had been made. A few days after this discussion I asked and secured the privilege of inserting in the RECORD some findings of various agencies at work as were displayed in the museum at Paris to indicate this modern miracle. I also inserted an official report of one of the officers identified with this work in Canada on the same subject. My investigations impelled me to urge at the time in the war-insurance bill of October last the necessity to make provision at once for this problem that from the nature of war must soon be upon us. Some Members in the House suggested that we ought to recommit the bill with instructions to return it at once with a provision to report back a plan for rehabilitation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. FESS. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FESS. I was saying when my time had expired that it was suggested that we recommit the bill with instructions to report it back, making those provisions, but when that was proposed it was learned that the omission of the provision was not due to ignorance on the subject, but, on the contrary, the departments were attempting to investigate more fully the subject before making any recommendations to the House. The House was assured that there was a community of effort at work, representing the Surgeon General's offices of the Army and the Navy, the vocational education department, the Labor Department, and other departments of the Government; a community effort to try to find the best way to do this work. We were assured that in time those departments having in charge such matters would make recommendations to Congress. Consequently the proposal to recommit with instructions to report a plan at once was not attempted, and the war-insurance bill was passed with a simple feature in it to provide for going on with this investigation.

Since that time the Surgeon General's Office, as well as other agencies, have been very active. Most naturally it involved primarily the Surgeon General's Office. It also involved the interest of War and Navy Departments in that those to be functionally rehabilitated and vocationally trained will be under the orders of the military and naval departments when the injuries take place. It will be of interest to the Vocational Board since the major work must be carried on for the purpose of civil life and therefore under the direction of the education board. It will be of interest to the Labor Department because of labor's interest in the effect of such training not only on the placement of the rehabilitated, but also to avoid by ignorance of the condition of the labor market the congestion and breakdown by overcrowding any one line of industry and thereby permit the exploitation of the laborer. This item ramifies the entire problem. It also affects the War-Risk Insurance Bureau, which must provide in the main for the payment of allotments and compensations under the direction of the administering board.

There is no legislation on the books or proposed legislation that has such diversified interests and involve so many of the Government's departmental activities as this proposed rehabilitation movement. An attempt to embody the consensus of departmental opinion resulted in a committee called by the Surgeon General to report a plan of administration. A tentative report recommended a board of control made up of a representative from the War Department, the Navy Department, the Department of Labor, the War-Risk Insurance Bureau, and the Vocational Board. Later the Council of National Defense took up the matter for general discussion. It also became the subject of Cabinet interest. The one item of supreme concern was that of administration. It was finally agreed that the existent Vocational Board is the proper agency for the administration. Its articulation with the various States, its close connection with the existent institutions which must largely be utilized for the rehabilitation work would enable it to put in operation this work without undue interference, which must necessarily occur in case of an entirely new agency with no connection with these facilities. This board has already made research of the situation in Europe and has published data covering the work of the belligerent countries and has made suggestions on the needs and possibilities of such legislation in this country.

There was sent to Canada a short time ago a commission, or rather a group of men, hardly to be styled a commission, to make a study of this work at first hand, to go not only into the primary hospitals where the functional rehabilitation is carried on, but in the secondary, where the vocational rehabilitation is the major work.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman give the names of those men?

Mr. FESS. I can not offhand, but I will say to my friend they represented a wide range of ability. This commission spent several days in actual investigation in Canada, and a partial report will be found in the hearings before our committees.

The upshot of all of this was the drafting of a bill embodying the expert opinion of those who had been studying the problem intensively. That bill was simultaneously introduced in the Senate and in the House. In the Senate it is known as the Smith bill. The House bill is known as the Sears bill. The two bills went to the respective Committees on Education. There was a joint hearing of the two committees of the Senate and the House with Senator SMITH as chairman. These hearings occupied three days. Before that joint committee appeared the Surgeon General and also the representative men that he had appointed; also Dr. Prosser, the former director of vocational education in New York, more recently the director of the Institute of Dunwoody in Minneapolis, and now the minister of education here in connection with the Federal board. He was a member of the President's educational commission that reported the vocational education bill that was enacted under the name of the Smith-Hughes bill. Dr. Prosser was one of the men who went to Canada. To his grasp of the vocational situation in the country at large, he added zest on the present situation and gave a very exhaustive discussion of what had been done in Canada. There also appeared F. B. Kidner, the vocational secretary of the Invalided Soldiers' Commission of Canada, who gave a graphic account of his work of rehabilitation in that country, easy the most advanced country of all the belligerents in this work.

There also appeared W. S. Gifford, of the Council of National Defense; also Lieut. Col. Billings, of the Army; Dr. C. McMurtrie, of New York, director of the Red Cross Institute for Crippled and Disabled Men; also Commissioner Little, of Employees' Compensation Commission; also T. B. Love, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury on behalf of the Treasury Department; Mr. Allen Walker, of New York, manager for the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, appeared on behalf of that agency in our national life. Mr. F. W. Keough, of New York, appeared as the representative of the National Manufacturers' Association. Labor was represented by Commissioner Royal Meeker, of Labor Statistics Department; Grant Hamilton, of the American Federation of Labor; John B. Andrews, secretary of American Association of Labor Legislation; also Arthur Holder, who is the labor representative on the Board for Vocational Education. Richard Borden appeared as the representative of the American Hospital Association. He is secretary of its war-service committee. William Baldwin appeared as the representative of the National Tuberculosis Association, of which he is treasurer. In other words, the hearings comprehend the latest expert information from these various activities, and I would advise the Members of the House to secure copies of those hearings as soon as possible.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio may have five minutes more. Is there objection?

Mr. DYER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I do so for the purpose of making an inquiry as to what is coming up after the disposition of this bill.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield to me, I might be able to answer that question in a way.

Mr. FESS. I yield to my friend.

Mr. DENT. It was understood that the conference report on Senate joint resolution 124, providing for the registration of those becoming 21 years of age should be taken up the first thing, but somehow it has been displaced. I understand that will come up next. It is a very important bill. The registration is supposed to take place on June 5, and I hope that that conference report will be called up sometime this afternoon.

The CHAIRMAN. The chairman of the Indian Affairs Committee stated that it was his purpose to call up the conference report on the Indian appropriation bill if he could.

Mr. DYER. In view of these important matters I feel that we ought not to proceed out of order on this bill. I will not object now, but I will object to any additional time hereafter, unless it refers to the bill under consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request?

There was no objection.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I thank the members of the committee that they permit five minutes more on a bill that undoubtedly is the most important one that will come before Congress at this session. Our wounded are coming back in streams. We have no provision for rehabilitating them. I have it from the Surgeon General's Office no longer ago than yesterday that they are attempting to borrow some of the necessary tools to do the bedside training for these soldiers. This bill should come before the House as quickly as the committee can report it, and should be given privileged status for final action at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. MAPES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield to my friend.

Mr. MAPES. Did your committee consider the question of including the rehabilitation of those injured in industry?

Mr. FESS. The committee had that before it. Nearly everyone who spoke upon the bill urged that we include that feature, but the committee felt that it would not do to bring that in at this time, for fear that it would endanger or delay the passage of this bill. Therefore it is not included in the bill.

Mr. MAPES. That is the only reason it was not included?

Mr. FESS. That was the only reason. The committee were unanimous in favor of it, but did not deem it proper to attach it to this bill.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield to my friend from Massachusetts.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Did I understand the gentleman to say that our wounded are coming back in streams?

Mr. FESS. They are coming back—perhaps I should not say to this country yet.

Mr. GALLIVAN. That is what I wanted made clear to the House. I am told that there are no wounded coming back to this country.

Mr. FESS. I would not say that.

Mr. GALLIVAN. At any rate, they are not coming back to this country in streams.

Mr. FESS. It is altogether owing to what is meant by "in streams." The wounded are coming in.

Mr. GALLIVAN. I want to know what the gentleman means. The gentleman used that expression.

Mr. FESS. The wounded are coming in. Only yesterday there were here two of our own boys with no arms.

Mr. GALLIVAN. They have been here for some months.

Mr. FESS. I do not know.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Yes; for some months.

Mr. FESS. Well, there are soldiers in the hospital here in the Capital.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I want to confirm the gentleman's statement to a certain extent. Wounded men have been coming back. A number of hospitals and former hotels are now fully occupied. I could name some, but will not. Wounded and sick men have come back and some have come up from the camps.

Mr. FESS. But that question is not pertinent. It is not important whether our wounded are being brought here or kept in France or elsewhere for treatment; this war is raging and our boys are on the front, and we know that they will be wounded, and we should not quibble over words. If we hesitate here to do what we ought to do now, it seems to me it will be a very serious matter.

Mr. FARR. Do not the papers every day indicate the number who are being injured?

Mr. FESS. Certainly; and the numbers will increase. Our committees are meeting every day to consider this matter.

Mr. COX. Have the committee reported out the bill yet?

Mr. FESS. The House committee have agreed upon it, but we have not reported it, awaiting a joint meeting with the Senate committee before we make the report. The number of the bill is 11367.

Mr. CANNON. Who introduced it?

Mr. FESS. In the House the bill was introduced by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SEARS], chairman of the Committee on Education, and in the Senate the bill was introduced by Senator SMITH of Georgia, chairman of the Committee on Education of that body.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Where can copies of the hearings be had?

Mr. FESS. At the Committee on Education of either the House or the Senate.

Mr. COX. What is the number of the bill?

Mr. FESS. No. 11367.

Mr. COX. Did I understand the gentleman to say that Dr. Prosser was to administer this work?

Mr. FESS. A board, of which Dr. C. A. Prosser is the director.

Mr. COX. I know him well, and a better man can not be found in the United States.

Mr. FESS. I fully agree with my friend from Indiana. I served with him on the vocational commission, which reported the Smith-Hughes vocational education bill. There is no man to be found who has a clearer grasp of the vocational problem. The fact that he is the director of the Federal Vocational Board, which the bill provides shall administer this law, insures success of the great work.

Mr. ESCH. I have read the bill, and I think it is an admirable one. Does not the gentleman think we acted wisely in not including in the war-risk insurance bill of last year the full provisions with regard to rehabilitation?

Mr. FESS. I rather think that is true; that taking the time required to make this investigation gave us a better bill than we could have had at that time. However, we must not delay action now since the needs are imminent, as is apparent to all.

Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that there are several other urgent matters coming on to-day, and that I am not going to be able to say all I wanted to say in analyzing the bill briefly, I am, by your consent to revise and extend my remarks, going to give a brief abstract of the bill by inserting a copy of the bill and a short statement as to its provisions:

A bill (H. R. 11367) to provide for vocational rehabilitation and return to civil employment of disabled persons discharged from the military or naval forces of the United States, and for other purposes.

Be is enacted, etc., That this act shall be known as the vocational rehabilitation act.

SEC. 2. That every person who is disabled under circumstances entitling him, after discharge from the military or naval forces of the United States, to compensation under Article III of the act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, as amended, and who, in the opinion of the Federal Board for Vocational Education, is unable to resume the former occupation or to enter upon some other suitable or gainful occupation or having resumed or entered upon such occupation is unable to continue the same successfully and may be vocationally rehabilitated, shall be ordered by the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance to follow such course of vocational rehabilitation as the Federal Board for Vocational Education shall prescribe and provide, or when deemed advisable by said board shall be retained in the military or naval forces of the United States and be detailed to the control and direction of said board until the course of training prescribed has been satisfactorily completed.

The Bureau of War-Risk Insurance shall have power, and it shall be its duty, to order the persons included in this section to follow suitable courses of vocational rehabilitation to be prescribed and provided by the Federal Board for Vocational Education, and every person so ordered to follow a course of vocational rehabilitation shall, while following the same, receive monthly compensation in a sum equal to the amount of his monthly pay for the last month of his active service, or to the amount to which he would be entitled under Article III of the said act approved September 2, 1914, as amended, whichever amount is the greater, and if such person was an enlisted man at the time of his discharge he shall, for the period during which he is so ordered to follow a course of vocational rehabilitation, be subject to all the requirements and entitled to all the benefits of Article II of the said act approved September 2, 1914, as amended, in the same manner as if he were an enlisted man, and for the purposes of the said Article II his monthly compensation shall be deemed to be his monthly pay: Provided, That if and while a person willfully fails to follow the prescribed course of vocational rehabilitation in a manner satisfactory to the Federal Board for Vocational Education the said board shall certify to that effect to the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance, and the said bureau may, in its discretion, withhold any part or all of the monthly compensation due such person and not subject to compulsory allotment.

The military and naval family allowance appropriation provided for in section 18 of the said act approved September 2, 1914, as amended, shall be available for the payment of the family allowances provided by this section; and the military and naval compensation appropriation provided for in section 19 of the said act approved September 2, 1914, as amended, shall be available for the payment of the monthly compensation herein provided. No compensation under Article III of the said act approved September 2, 1914, as amended, shall be paid for the period during which any such person is ordered by the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance to follow a course of vocational rehabilitation.

SEC. 3. That the courses of vocational rehabilitation provided under the provisions of this act shall, as far as practicable and under such conditions as the Federal Board for Vocational Education may prescribe, be made available without cost for instruction for the benefit of any person who is disabled under circumstances entitling him, after discharge from the military or naval forces of the United States, to compensation under Article III of the said act approved September 2, 1914, as amended, and who is not included in section 2 hereof: Provided, That no monthly compensation, family allowances, or expenses as provided by this act shall be paid on account of any such person availing himself of the courses under this section.

SEC. 4. That the Federal Board for Vocational Education shall have the power, and it shall be its duty, to provide, or procure to be provided, such facilities, instructors, and courses of vocational rehabilitation as may be necessary to insure proper training for such persons as are required to follow courses of vocational rehabilitation as herein provided; to prescribe the courses to be followed by such persons; to pay, when in the discretion of the board such payment is necessary, the expense of travel, lodging, subsistence, and other necessary expenses of such persons while following the prescribed courses; to provide for the placement of rehabilitated persons in suitable or gainful occupations; and to do all other things appropriate or necessary to insure the vocational rehabilitation and placement in suitable or gainful occupations of persons following the courses of vocational rehabilitation. The board shall have the power to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary for the proper performance of its duties as prescribed by this act and is hereby authorized and directed to utilize, with the approval of the Secretary of Labor, the facilities of the Department of Labor, in so far as may be practicable, in the placement of rehabilitated persons in suitable or gainful occupations.

It shall also be the duty of the board to make or cause to have made studies, investigations, and reports regarding the vocational rehabilitation of disabled persons and their placement in suitable or gainful occupations. When the board deems it advisable, such studies, investigations, and reports may be made in cooperation with or through other departments and bureaus of the Government, and the board, in its discretion, may cooperate with such public or private agencies as it may deem advisable in performing the duties imposed upon it by this act. The Federal Board for Vocational Education shall make an annual report to the Congress on or before December 1 on the administration of this act.

SEC. 5. That all medical and surgical work or other treatment necessary to give functional and mental restoration to disabled persons prior to their discharge from the military or naval forces of the United States shall be under the control of the War Department and the Navy Department, respectively. Whenever prevocational training is employed as a therapeutic measure by the War Department or the Navy Department a plan shall be established between these agencies and the Federal Board for Vocational Education acting in an advisory capacity to insure, in so far as medical requirements permit, a proper process of prevocational training and the proper preparation of instructors for such prevocational training.

The board shall in establishing its plans and rules and regulations for vocational training cooperate with the War Department and the Navy Department in so far as may be necessary to effect a continuous process of prevocational and vocational training.

SEC. 6. That the Federal Board for Vocational Education is hereby authorized and empowered to receive such gifts and donations from either public or private sources as may be offered unconditionally. All moneys received as gifts or donations shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States and shall constitute a permanent appropriation to be called the "Special fund for vocational rehabilitation," to be used under the direction of the said board, in connection with the appropriations hereby made or hereafter to be made, to defray the expenses of providing and maintaining courses of vocational rehabilitation; and a full report of all gifts and donations offered and accepted and all disbursements therefrom shall be submitted annually to Congress.

SEC. 7. That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to be used by the Federal Board for Vocational Education for erecting, renting, and remodeling buildings and quarters, repairing, maintaining, and equipping same, and for equipment and other facilities necessary for proper instruction of disabled persons, $250,000; for the preparation of instructors and salaries of instructors, supervisors, and other experts, including necessary traveling expenses, $545,000; for traveling expenses of disabled persons in connection with training and for lodging, subsistence, and other necessary expenses in special cases of persons following prescribed courses, $250,000; for tuition for persons pursuing courses in existing institutions, public or private, $545,000; for the placement and supervision after placement of vocationally rehabilitated persons, $45,000; for studies, investigations, reports, and preparation of special courses of instruction, $55,000; for miscellaneous contingencies, including special mechanical appliances necessary in special cases for disabled men, $110,000; for the administrative expenses of said board incident to performing the duties imposed by this act, including salaries of such assistants, experts, clerks, and other employees in the District of Columbia or elsewhere, as the board may deem necessary, actual traveling and other necessary expenses incurred by the members of the board and by its employees under its orders, including attendance at meetings of educational associations and other organizations, rent and equipment of offices in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, purchase of books of reference, law books, and periodicals, stationery, typewriters and exchange thereof, miscellaneous supplies, postage on foreign mail, printing and binding to be done at the Government Printing Office, and all other necessary expenses, $200,000: Provided, That the said board shall file with the Clerk of the House and the Secretary of the Senate on July 1 and every three months thereafter, for the information of the Congress, an itemized account of all expenditures made under this act.

SEC. 8. That section 304 of the act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, as amended, is hereby repealed.

Section 2 provides for the rehabilitation of any person who is unable to resume his former occupation or enter upon some new occupation.

It limits the benefits to persons who after discharge were entitled to compensation under the war-risk insurance act.

It secures to the invalided soldier while in training the rate of pay received the last month before his discharge. In case he declines to take the training the War-Risk Insurance Bureau may withhold his allotment.

Section 3 includes those disabled soldiers who are able to resume their former occupation or to enter upon some new occupation.

Section 4 provides the duties and powers of the Federal Vocational Board, which by the bill is made the administrative agency to carry out the provisions of the act.

Section 5 provides for the control by the Army and Navy over the disabled soldier during the period of his functional rehabilitation; that is, while he is undergoing the medical treatment to physically rebuild him. It also provides that in case he should have bedside or curative training, called prevocational training, the vocational board shall act as an advisory body only for this character of training. In making plans for vocational training the vocational board shall cooperate with the War and Navy Departments to insure against disturbance of a continuous process of useful training.

Section 6 provides for the acceptance of bequests.

Section 7 is the appropriating section. The House committee decided upon a lump-sum appropriation of $2,000,000. The Senate bill sets out the items in detail. But since no European government has attempted to budget the items of expenditure in this particular activity, it appeared to House Members a better plan not to designate the items, since the same authority in either case will administer them. The items as set out by the original bill were mere estimates, as the problem is entirely new and should not be hampered by any needless restriction.

Mr. Chairman, as I said before, the rehabilitation and the reeducation of the disabled American soldier is a duty demanded at the hands of this Government. The necessary legislation should not be delayed for a single moment. I know of no proposal that has evoked such universal approval from the Members here and the people at large. There was not a single discordant note in the hearings. Even those who urged the inclusion of the industrial cripple, everyone asked that it be omitted if it would endanger the passage of this measure. The hearing displayed the most remarkable unanimity of opinion upon the need of this legislation, as well as an equally remarkable approval of governmental effort and immediate effort for speedy action.

The House Committee on Education, after holding daily meetings in the most careful consideration of the bill, has agreed upon it and is now ready to report. It hopes to report the bill to the House within the next few days. Having been interested in this problem even before our country entered the war, because of the havoc of human ability and the great need of speedy methods to utilize in a rational way these wasted powers lost to the world unless speedily rehabilitated, I feel justified in urging the membership of the House to secure at once copies of the bill and hearings, in the hope that we shall take immediate steps to place the law on the statute books, that all necessary authority may be given to at once prescribe and provide the facilities to not only functionally rehabilitate our inevitable war wrecks, but also vocationally train these disabled men for future self-helpfulness, to avoid that heritage that inevitably awaits a dependent. It is well for us to assure our boys that their sacrifice is appreciated, their bravery and valor will never be forgotten, but that is lip service. We must add to that our guaranty of an independent existence, for lip service is empty and time is the enemy of such laudation. I have asked for this time to speak out of order to call attention to this imperative need. The war is raging. Our sons are on the front. The casualty lists are streaming in and will grow longer with the weeks. We must speed up our equipment. No soldier of our armies should be compelled to admit that human energy lost by the injuries of war was permitted to waste permanently because some one neglected his duty.

By unanimous consent, Mr. HARDY, Mr. COX, and Mr. GALLIVAN were given leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

The Clerk resumed and completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. GALLIVAN. I move that the committee rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. VENABLE, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 12000) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GALLIVAN, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

REGISTRATION FOR MILITARY SERVICE.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on Senate joint resolution 124.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read the conference report, as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 124) providing for the registration for military service of all male persons citizen of the United States or residing in the United States who have, since the 5th day of June, 1917, and on or before the day set for the registration by proclamation by the President, attained the age of 21 years, in accordance with such rules and regulations as the President may prescribe under the terms of the act approved May 18, 1917, entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 1, 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the House insert "and all male persons"; also amend the title by striking out the word "or," in line 2, and insert in lieu thereof "and all male persons"; and the House agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 8: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 8, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out by the House insert the following: "Provided, That students who are preparing for the ministry in recognized theological or divinity schools, and students who are preparing for the practice of medicine and surgery in recognized medical schools, at the time of the approval of this act, shall be exempt from the selective draft prescribed in the act of May 18, 1917"; and the House agree to the same.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 124) providing for the registration for military service of all male persons, citizens of the United States or residing in the United States, who have, since the 5th day of June, 1917, and on or before the day set for the registration by proclamation by the President, attained the age of 21 years, in accordance with such rules and regulations as the President may prescribe under the terms of the act approved May 18, 1917, entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," submit the following written statement explaining the effect of the action agreed on:

The Senate receded from all of the amendments of the House except the amendment relating to the exemption of divinity and medical students. On the question of exempting divinity and medical students, the conferees agreed that students of both classes who are actually in attendance upon such school on the date of the approval of the act should be exempted. This, of course, would not permit any subsequent entrance as a student at such schools in order to avoid the draft, which seems to have been the principal objection on the part of the House. The House conferees agreed to retain the Senate amendment also as to medical students now in bona fide attendance at medical colleges. This is no more nor less than what the President has actually done under the act of May 18, 1917, by which such students were furloughed until graduation. It was thought, in view of the large number of medical officers who have entered the Army service, that this exception was also important. The health of those who stay at home and support the Army is, of course, a matter of great importance.

S. H. DENT, Jr.,
W. J. FIELDS,
JULIUS KAHN,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, the conferees agreed and the Senate receded in favor of the House on every proposition except the exemption of theological and medical students, and on that the conferees made a compromise. Students in attendance in schools or colleges on the date of the approval of this resolution shall be exempt, whereas those who hereafter enter will not be exempt. That is the law, as far as divinity students are concerned, in the draft act of last year. It is the practice of the War Department so far as medical students are concerned, and I think that is a fair compromise. I hope the adoption of the conference report will not be long delayed.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I do not think the Members heard the gentleman's full explanation. What are the terms on which the divinity and medical students are exempt?

Mr. DENT. Those are exempt who are in actual attendance on theological and medical schools on the date of the approval of this resolution.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Exempt from the registration provided for. What as to students who enter the schools afterwards?

Mr. DENT. They will not be exempt.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Therefore there can be no refuge in a college or medical or divinity school after the passage of this act to avoid draft.

Mr. DENT. No.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. They are not to be taken out of the college schools now?

Mr. DENT. No; not those that are now in.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. When their terms have expired and they have graduated——

Mr. DENT. They will be subject to the same law as anybody else.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. This permits them to complete their studies?

Mr. DENT. That is true.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman submit to a question?

Mr. DENT. I will.

Mr. DYER. This conference agreement does not include dental students?

Mr. DENT. It does not include dental students; they were not involved in the conference; it was not a matter in dispute between the two Houses.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. I will yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH The conference report exempts those who are at present in medical schools, but it does not provide that they shall upon graduation go into the reserve.

Mr. DENT. No; it does not. It exempts them during the period of their attendance upon the school.

Mr. WALSH. In the original draft law the medical students were required to enter the medical reserve.

Mr. DENT. They entered the Medical Reserve Corps, but they were furloughed during the period that they were actually in attendance in the school. That was by Executive order. Now, Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDWELL] two minutes.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, when the conference report was before the House a few days ago the bill as amended by the Senate carried a clause giving exemption to any man who after the approval of this act went into the schools, and it was on that ground that I opposed it and on that ground alone. That having been taken out of the bill, I think the amendment proposed by the Senate is entirely justified. In the first place, the exemption of medical students is absolutely necessary, because we must have doctors, and we must have them in great numbers. The news that has come from the front of the activity of chaplains in our Army during the past few days demonstrates beyond question that the chaplain in the Army is as necessary as any other branch of it. I do not believe that we ought to do anything that would stop the good work that is being carried on by the divinity schools in this country, and I am heartily in favor of the amendment as agreed to by the conferees, and I hope that the conference report will be adopted. This is a Christian country, famous for its religious tolerance. The Jew and the Gentile, Catholic and Protestant, enjoy its freedom and institutions. This amendment will be gratifying to all and is a guaranty of the perpetuation of our faith.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE].

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I think that no one in this body believes that I do not appreciate the services of the clergy of this country and also the value and the worth of medical men of this land and the great patriotic service they are rendering in this war. I would not criticize either for a moment. But, gentlemen of the House, I can not change my mind about what I believe to be a fundamental principle. When we passed the original draft law it applied equally upon the shoulders of all of the young men of the country. They all stood on the same level. They all looked alike to the Congress of the United States, and that was proper and right, but this bill provides that the young man who, since the enactment of the original draft law, has determined that he would make medicine or theology his life work, and has entered a school of either theology or medicine, shall be exempt from registration and military service in the armies of the United States, while his neighbor boy, just as much of an American, who might have determined that his life work would be agriculture, or along mechanical lines, or a dentist, or any other line of work, shall not be exempt. I assert that is class legislation and absolutely un-American, and violates every principle for which we have always stood, that all Americans should be equal before the law.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKENZIE. I congratulate the conferees in taking out the most vicious part of the amendment, but I am absolutely opposed to the part that still remains, and though realizing that this law ought to be enacted very soon I shall, notwithstanding that fact, cast my vote against the report.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I would like to ask the gentleman what he has to say along the line of the evidence brought out before our committee, that there have been more medical officers killed in this war than in any other branch of the service?

Mr. McKENZIE. They were medical men—doctors—not students 21 years of age, just entering college.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. How will we supply their places when they are all killed out?

Mr. McKENZIE. There have been many farmer boys and others killed who went over there.

Mr. DYER. These men are being educated in the schools for service in the Army, practically every one of them, as soon as they graduate.

Mr. McKENZIE. No; perhaps 1 out of 10 will.

Mr. DYER. It strikes me that the doctors of the country are being called to the service.

Mr. McKENZIE. I honor them for going.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman contend that in the original draft law all the young men of the country between 21 and 31 years of age were placed upon the same footing and that there were no classes exempted from registration or being drafted?

Mr. McKENZIE. Speaking generally, yes.

Mr. WALSH. Speaking specifically, there were two classes of people who were exempted.

Mr. McKENZIE. I understand.

Mr. WALSH. Divinity students, pilots, and mariners.

Mr. McKENZIE. Divinity students who had already entered a theological school and ministers were exempted, and I want to say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that the exempting of ministers from helping to fight the battles of this country of ours met with no enthusiastic response in my breast, for I do not come from a section of the country or represent a class of men who listen to sermons on Sunday by men who do not desire to uphold the flag of our country.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN].

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I usually am entirely in accord with my friend from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE], but in this particular matter I believe he is in error. The medical students of the country will have to be graduated in order that the health of the country may be looked after by educated and skilled physicians. We do not want to return to a condition in this country that prevailed 20 or 25 years ago, when medical "quacks" were preying upon the people.

A great demand has been made upon the medical profession in this war. Thousands of doctors in excellent practice have given up that practice in order to give the benefit of their skill and experience to their country. A large number of medical men are being killed in this war. Surely the Congress wants to make some provision that new men trained and skilled in medicine and surgery can take the places in the Army and throughout the country of those who sacrifice their lives in the war.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to be set right as to whether these medical students who will be in the medical colleges at the time of the approval of this act will be exempt for all time from the selective-draft law.

Mr. KAHN. I do not think so.

Mr. STAFFORD. I direct the gentleman's attention to the phraseology. The chairman of the committee stated they would not, but I have difficulty in coming to that conclusion. The bill provides:

Provided, That students who are preparing for the ministry in recognized theological or divinity schools, and students who are preparing for the practice of medicine and surgery in recognized medical schools, at the time of the approval of this act, shall be exempt from the selective draft prescribed in the act of May 18, 1917.

If that does not mean that they shall be exempt for all time, what does it mean?

Mr. KAHN. When they cease to be students——

Mr. STAFFORD. There is no such qualifying clause.

Mr. KAHN. I take it that that is the way the department would construe it.

Mr. STAFFORD. The department would not have any right to read such words of limitation into it.

Mr. KAHN. I believe that if the men were to drop out of the medical or theological schools before they graduate they would no longer be exempt but would be subject to draft under the law of last year.

Mr. STAFFORD. Under the original draft law persons who were preparing for the ministry in recognized divinity schools were not only exempted fom the draft law as divinity students, but they were exempted upon their being ordained.

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Now, by specific language you say that these medical students shall be exempt from the selective draft prescribed in the act of May 18, 1917. What more definite language could be written exempting those students from the selective-draft law?

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the statement of the gentleman from Wisconsin, I am quite positive that where a man ceases to be a student his condition reverts back to what it was before he entered the school. The language used in this bill regarding these students is almost identical with the language of the selective-draft law regarding theological and divinity students. But what is the practice of the War Department to-day? They take the young men in the medical schools and furlough them. They give them furloughs in order that they may continue their studies in the medical schools. They are not inducted into the Army of the United States so long as they continue as students. The department recognizes the fact that this country will need a supply of doctors, and so, in order to continue that supply, they are not now taking those young men for the draft, but are allowing them under furloughs to continue their studies in the medical schools. This bill will simply give that practice the sanction of law.

Mr. STAFFORD. Are not they furloughed under the President's order during the school period, on the condition that they shall upon graduation become a part of the Medical Reserve Corps of the Army?

Mr. KAHN. The Medical Reserve Corps of the Army was abolished under the act of June 3, 1916, and we have not had any Medical Reserve Corps since then.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman permit?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is it not a fact, under the President's order, in order that they may obtain exemption they must indenture themselves to join the Army upon their graduation?

Mr. KAHN. I am not informed whether the President's order contains such a provision; but I take it that these young gentlemen are patriotic—just as patriotic as any loyal citizens of the Republic—and I feel that they will go into the Army of the United States by the thousands. There is no question about it in my mind. But if the medical students are of draft age when they graduate, they can undoubtedly be drafted into the Army if they should refuse to go voluntarily. Several months ago the War Department, realizing that there was apt to be a deficiency in the number of physicians in the Medical Department, made a strong appeal to the doctors of the country in order to try to induce them to come into the service. Accordingly many of them came into the service, and I am sure these young men will likewise respond gladly to any call of that kind and will cheerfully help the Government in the hour of its need.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. I will.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield me five minutes more?

Mr. DENT. I yield five minutes additional to the gentleman.

Mr. McKENZIE. I simply desire to ask my colleague if he does not think that in order to make this legislation consistent that the arguments we have heard that these young men are needed in the Army, that there should be a provision coupled with this exemption that when they have graduated they are immediately drafted into the Army? Would not that make it logical?

Mr. KAHN. We have not been drafting doctors as yet into the Army at all. We have appealed to their patriotism, and they have come in great numbers. But I want to call the attention of the House to these facts: Never before in the history of any war has there been such a need for doctors as there is in this war, and never in the history of any war have so many doctors lost their lives at the front as in this war.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. And let me suggest that probably never before have so many doctors volunteered their services as in this war.

Mr. KAHN. That is very true, because we have never in all our history had occasion for such a large number. Congress recognizing the need of doctors in the Army several years ago provided there must be 7 surgeons to every 1,000 men in our Regular Army.

Mr. CALDWELL. The gentleman might add never before in the history of the world has it been necessary for doctors to bear arms as they have to do now.

Mr. KAHN. Well, the doctors, as I understand it, at the field hospitals right behind the lines, or rather immediately behind the trenches, are constantly under shell fire and are frequently killed.

Mr. HICKS. And, if the gentleman will permit, in the Naval Officers' Medical Reserve Corps many thousands have volunteered their services and are awaiting call from the Navy.

Mr. KAHN. I thank the gentleman for his information.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. I will.

Mr. DOWELL. Without taking up the question whether or not these persons designated in this amendment should be within the draft, as I understand the construction of the language of the amendment by the gentleman from California, if the student drops out of the medical school——

Mr. KAHN. Before graduation——

Mr. DOWELL. Before graduation, that he then comes within the law and would be subject to the draft.

Mr. KAHN. Exactly; because he is no longer a student in the medical school.

Mr. DOWELL. But I wish to call the attention of the gentleman to the language of this amendment, and I am unable to read the amendment as the gentleman has construed it, I ask the gentleman if he will not reread this paragraph, and in the rereading he will not change his statement upon that question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. DENT. I yield the gentleman three additional minutes.

Mr. DOWELL (continuing). Because when a student has once been exempted, where is there a provision that brings him within the statute?

Mr. KAHN. The moment he leaves the school he is no longer in the school and ceases to be a student, therefore his status changes.

Mr. DOWELL. This amendment states, "at the time of the approval of this act."

Mr. KAHN. Yes; he is a student.

Mr. DOWELL. Then, if he is a student at the time of the approval of this act he becomes exempt in the very terms of the act. I am not quibbling about whether this is correct or not, but I desire that the House understand the exact language of this amendment.

Mr. KAHN. Well, in speaking about the amendment with officials of the War Department, who will probably construe the bill if it is enacted into law, I feel confident that it will be construed as I have stated it. In the final analysis the War Department will construe the bill. At any rate, the language in this bill is similar to the language of the draft law in regard to this particular subject.

Mr. DOWELL. If the gentleman has that construction, it is different.

Mr. KAHN. Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to say this, in conclusion: The Senate yielded on every amendment offered to the bill in the House except this one. This is the only amendment that they insisted upon. In view of the fact that the so-called Hull amendment and other amendments are all accepted by the Senate, I hope that the House will accept the conference report and allow the bill to pass. [Applause.]

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I shall yield three minutes to the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. O'SHAUNESSY] and then I shall yield two minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], and then I propose to move the previous question, except for the purpose of answering questions.

Mr. RUSSELL. I should like to have about one minute.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I wish to congratulate the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs and the conferees, who were charged with the responsibility of bringing accord on this question, so vital to the success of our arms.

I can readily understand why some gentlemen, when this question was before the House the other day, felt disposed to urge an objection to the recommendation of the conferees, fearing, as they did, that men might seek to evade military duty by entering seminaries. That would be a reprehensible conduct on the part of any man. The conference report exempts those now in the seminaries, and thus corrects the objection urged against the former report, which exempted those now in and hereafter entering. The great concord and amity existing between all creeds in this great war of ours and the great work being done by the ministers of every religion upon the battle field speaks eloquently for the tremendously unifying process going on, as evidenced by the work of the Young Men's Christian Association, the Young Men's Hebrew Association, and the Knights of Columbus. It bids us rejoice that in this great conflict there has come a greater community among the American people, which presages a victory for our arms. [Applause.]

I can not but feel the great necessity for medical men. I can not but feel that there is a great necessity for more chaplains to sustain our troops in their hour of peril and in their hour of danger. The medical schools must be recruited, the seminaries must be recruited, and I am to-day proud to pay my tribute, as a Member of the House of Representatives, to the medical fraternity of the United States for so generously volunteering its services in this hour of need. And I am sure that if the occasion becomes more urgent they shall be found just as willing as they have been in the past. Who doubts the valor, who doubts the courage, of the men who bear the cross upon the battle fields? We daily read of the great deeds of sacrifice, of heroism, and of valor performed by these clergymen who are giving their lives, giving everything, in order to serve our troops, to sustain them, to give them courage, and to keep them keyed up to the supreme duty of the hour. Conserve our medical students for the Nation's future needs in peace or war. Conserve our divinity students so that the ministry may be unimpaired in its great work of spiritual consolation.

Again, I congratulate the conferees. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] is recognized.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, just a word in response to the insinuation of the gentleman from Illinois when replying to a question of mine. Lest any impression be left that my section of the country is infested with ministers or priests of the Gospel who would rather preach than fight, I want to tell him that no such condition as that prevails. I have the great honor to represent in this body the old Plymouth Colony, as well as Cape Cod and the old whaling city of New Bedford, and that section of the great Commonwealth of Massachusetts has not been backward in furnishing its supply of young men from every profession and walk in life in response to the President's call and under the selective-draft law. We have no slackers amongst these two professions in my section of the Republic. And let me further say that at the outset of this controversy I voted with the gentleman from Illinois.

I think, however, inasmuch as this provision is made to comport with the original draft law, although I think there is some doubt about the language, there can be no harm in accepting it. But I do desire to call to the gentleman's attention that there are certain classes in the original draft law that are exempted, and that if he desires to be wholly consistent, as he usually is, the amendment contemplated to the draft law ought to include within its terms some of these other classes and put all the young men between these two age limits upon an equal footing. We exempt now county and municipal officials, certain Government employees, pilots, and mariners, and also workmen, whether they are Government workmen or not, employed in the arsenals and upon certain Government work. Now, then, if it is desired to put all the young men of the country between those ages upon the same plane, they ought not to be given the privilege of a special exemption.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the chairman of the committee a question. If I remember correctly, when this bill was passed by the House there was a provision in it providing that the boys to be enlisted under this act would go to the foot of the list in their respective classes.

Mr. DENT. The Senate yielded on that.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senate amended that by striking it out?

C. D. CARTER,
CARL HAYDEN,
P. P. CAMPBELL,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Maryland one minute.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to reserve a point of order on the conference report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CRISP). The gentleman from Michigan desires to reserve a point of order on the conference report?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks that if a point of order is made on the conference report——

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I understand it was reserved, only.

Mr. CRAMTON. It was reserved.

Mr. NORTON. The point of order comes too late at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will overrule that. The point of order came as soon as it could be made.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I ask that if the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] has a point of order it be made now.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I want first to yield to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM] to ask unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the conference report on the military bill just adopted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD as indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] makes a point of order on the conference report on the Indian appropriation bill. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CRAMTON. I will make the point, and possibly the chairman of the committee or others can explain the matter properly. I made the point, however, that as the legislation passed both Houses in section 18——

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. What amendment is that?

Mr. CRAMTON. Amendment No. 60, on page 6 of the report. As the legislation passed both Houses it was temporary in its nature, but by the insertion of the word "hereafter" it appears to me that possibly it was made permanent legislation. If so, it is clearly subject to a point of order. I ask the gentleman to explain the purpose and effect of that word "hereafter."

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Well, the gentleman has explained it as well as I can explain it. It was put in for the purpose of making it permanent law.

Mr. CRAMTON. Then, Mr. Speaker, I urge that the point of order is well taken because, as the legislation went through both bodies, it was limited in its effect to the ensuing fiscal year. The conferees have inserted the word "hereafter," and have sought, at any rate, to make the legislation permanent, and thereby it seems to me they have exceeded their authority. There was no matter as to the period of the legislation in dispute between the two Houses.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will hear from the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I am frank to say and to repeat that the word "hereafter" was put in to take away the temporary character from the amendment and make it permanent law, which the Senate conferees and House conferees all seemed to think was a good thing to be done.

Mr. BUTLER. Is any other part of this bill in dispute?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, the subject matter was before the conferees. The question of sending certain matters to the Secretary of the Interior for approval was before the conferees. A dispute arose as to whether or not contracts relating to minerals, oil and gas leases, and so forth, should be sent to Washington for the approval of the Secretary of the Interior. That was the chief question in dispute between the House and the Senate conferees.

The subject matter arose out of a Senate amendment and was before the conferees, relating to contracts or leases between certain lessees and the Indian owners. As to whether or not these contracts should be affirmed in Muskogee, Okla., or be sent to Washington, was the real question. I do not think it is a close question under the rules of the House. The matter having been before the Senate, it seems to me the matter was sufficiently before the conferees so that they had jurisdiction to make the law as it has been made.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, the insertion of this provision here making it permanent law is doing by indirection what it has not been possible to do directly for several years. This proposed permanent law has been before the House Committee on Indian Affairs during the past two or three years to my personal knowledge, and it has not received, when it was brought squarely before the House, the approval of the Congress. I am certain that when the House Committee on Indian Affairs considered this paragraph of the bill and when the House as a whole considered it it had no intention of enacting any such permanent law as is proposed to be enacted here by the conference committee. There is nothing here to show or indicate that when the Senate passed this provision the Senate intended to enact this as permanent law by tacking it on as a rider on this appropriation bill, as it is proposed to be done by the conferees.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Has the gentleman the conference report before him?

Mr. NORTON. I have the conference report before me.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On page 6, where the word "hereafter" is used, the gentleman will see that the words are:

That hereafter no part of said appropriation shall be used in forwarding the undisputed claims—

And so forth.

Does the use of the word "said" limit it to the appropriation in this act, or does the gentleman contend that it would apply to any appropriation hereafter made and be permanent law?

Mr. NORTON. I am inclined to think that interpretation would be put upon it, and that it would apply to any appropriation made hereafter under this item in the bill. I know that it is confidently expected by some Members who are in favor of this legislation being made permanent that such interpretation will be placed upon it by the Treasury Department.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I was going to call the attention of the Chair to the point which the Chair makes. It seems to me clear that this is not permanent law; that this deals with this appropriation of $185,000 and nothing else. There is no language by which it can refer to anything except the $185,000 herein appropriated. "Said appropriation" means this sum of $185,000, and can not mean anything else, and it does not refer to anything except this appropriation. It refers to no other part of the law. No matter what was in the minds of these gentlemen, they have not enacted permanent law.

Mr. BUTLER. Why did they put it in there?

Mr. MADDEN. It does not help it any. Why not strike it out?

Mr. NORTON. I will say to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY] that I appreciate the force of his argument, but I also appreciate what I believe to be the clear intent of those who placed the word "hereafter" in the language of the bill. I believe that the expression is susceptible of the interpretation that the words "said appropriation" refer to the item of the appropriation instead of to the amount, to the item for expenses of administration of the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes of Oklahoma. It occurs to me that the employment of the word "hereafter" in the way in which it is here used makes the law permanent.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to address the Chair, but in view of the query propounded by the Chair to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. NORTON] I merely wish to make this observation, that while the word "hereafter" applies in one way merely to the expenditure of this appropriation, still I wish to direct the attention of the Chair to this condition of affairs that might arise in the future, that when this item is carried in subsequent appropriation bills this clause—

Provided further, That hereafter no part of said appropriation shall be used in forwarding the undisputed claims to be paid from individual moneys of restricted allottees—would apply to that appropriation in the subsequent appropriation bills. It would not be necessary to reincorporate the language of this proviso, because it is permanent law attaching for all time to the appropriations that will be voted for this respective purpose, and the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs [Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma] admits that that is the purpose of it. Suppose next year when the Indian appropriation bill is under consideration the committee carries an appropriation for expenses of administration of the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes of Oklahoma; it would not be necessary to carry the legislation as carried in this proviso, because here the Congress has for all time enacted the policy as to how that fund shall be utilized in its expenditure, and the Comptroller of the Treasury, in passing upon that, would necessarily hold that that limitation is permanent, because the word "hereafter" applies. What is the value of the word "hereafter"? Strike it out, and, of course, then the language would apply merely to this appropriation. The Chair must give obvious construction to that word "hereafter." If it is to be construed as applicable only to this year, it has no purpose, because then it would read—

Provided further, That no part of said appropriation shall be used—

And so forth. But no, the obvious intendment of this provision is that for all time the appropriation that is voted for this purpose shall be utilized as herein expressed, and therefore it must be construed by the Chair to be permanent legislation.

Mr. NORTON. Let me call the attention of the Chair to this feature of it: Suppose you leave out the word "said" and put in the word "this," so that it will read—

That hereafter no part of this appropriation.

That clearly would make it permanent law. It seems to me that the word "said" modifying the appropriation has reference to the item that is in this bill or that may be in some subsequent bill.

Mr. WALSH rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts desire to argue the point of order?

Mr. WALSH. I merely desire to direct the attention of the Chair to the fact that while it may refer to "said appropriation," that does not confine it simply to this specific sum of money; because if that were so, and next year they appropriated only $181,000, in order to have this proviso apply it would have to be repeated in the appropriation bill. Furthermore, the paragraph as carried in the bill calls for a report to be made to Congress by the Secretary of the Interior showing in detail the expenditure of all moneys appropriated by this provision. That would apply only, of course, to this sum of money, because the word "hereafter" is omitted. It seems to me that including the word "hereafter" would accomplish just what the chairman of the committee [Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma] suggests was intended, to make this apply to all appropriations in the future under this item, namely, for expenses of administration of the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes of Oklahoma and compensation of employees.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, there is one phase of this question to which I wish to direct the attention of the Chair. All of the language of the proviso is an amendment by the Senate and never was before the House. Being new matter inserted by the Senate, the conferees were competent to consider any germane amendment. For that reason the word "hereafter" might properly be inserted by the conferees.

I would like to read from Volume V of Hinds' Precedents, page 725, where a similar point of order is discussed:

It is true that if the whole paragraph in the bill as it passed the House had been stricken out and a substitute therefor proposed by the Senate, or if the Senate had stricken out the paragraph without proposing a substitute, and the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate, then the conferees might have had jurisdiction touching the whole matter and might have agreed upon any provision that would have been germane. But that is not this case. This provision in the conference report inserts legislation that never was before the House or before the Senate, and it was quite competent for the conferees, if they could do this, to have stricken out the whole paragraph and inserted anything that was germane.

We have a similar situation here. The House never acted on this proviso; it was new matter inserted by the Senate. Being in conference, it was competent for the conferees to make it permanent law, as the chairman proposed. Therefore we were acting within our jurisdiction as managers on the part of the House to consider and act upon the entire proposal as we did.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, in the first place, the question as to what effect the words "no part of said appropriation," might have on the word "hereafter" had occurred to me before making the point, and that was the reason of my question to the chairman of the committee. His positive assertion as to the purpose the conferees had in inserting the word "hereafter" has resolved all my doubts on the proposition, and it should, it seems to me, resolve the doubts of the Chair.

Furthermore, it is not certain that all of the $185,000 will be expended this year. If it is not, future legislation may make it possible to carry the balance forward. As to the suggestion of the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], permit me to suggest this, that when the legislation was before the House there was a section carrying this appropriation of $185,000, but there was no provision, no limitation, upon the method of expending that appropriation. Therefore there was no period of time during which they were prohibited from forwarding the reports from the superintendent to the Interior Department.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The House having made the appropriation making no limitation on the expenditure, and the Senate putting the limitation on it that it did, raises the matter as a question for the conferees. Now, this is the question: The Senate having put the limitation for one year on the subject matter, and the House conferees agreeing that the limitation to one year should be removed and the matter should become permanent law——

Mr. CRAMTON. I was attempting to answer that question. I say that when the legislation was before the House the appropriation was made without limitation. So that there would be no interruption in the forwarding of these reports of the superintendent to the Interior Department. The Senate legislated and put in a limitation for one year. It goes to conference. On the one hand, no interruption in forwarding the report; on the other hand, an interruption for one year. Now, the limit of no interruption and the interruption for one year—those are the bounds of the authority of the conferees. It is an absurdity to say that with these bounds—no interruption on the one hand and one year on the other—the conferees can extend that period to eternity. I insist that the argument made by the gentleman from Arizona is not well taken. It is not a case of an entire new paragraph.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, the only question involved here seems to be as to whether or not this word "hereafter" applies to other funds than those carried by the bill. It is true, in so far as one of the conferees was concerned—myself—that I would like to see this made permanent law. What was in the minds of the other conferees I am not able to say. But it matters not what might have been in the minds of the conferees, we are bound by the language of the bill. The bill says that "hereafter no part of said appropriation shall be used," and so forth. No part of what appropriation? "Said appropriation," and that cleary refers to the $185,000 carried in this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CRISP). The Chair is ready to rule. The gentleman from Michigan makes the point of order against the conference report on the ground that the conferees exceeded their authority by making a provision of the bill, which was temporary in its nature when it went to conference, permanent legislation. The Chair is clearly of the opinion that if the conferees exceeded their authority by making permanent a provision of law that was temporary when it passed both branches of Congress, it would be beyond their authority and would vitiate the conference report.

The question for the Chair now to decide is not what might be or may have been the intention of the conferees when they made the report, but what is the legal effect of the report submitted by them.

When the amendment No. 60, known as section 18, was submitted to the conferees it provided that no part of said appropriation—dealing with the appropriation of $185,000 carried in the bill—should be used for certain purposes. The conference report contains identically the same language, except that the word "hereafter" is inserted, which makes the conference report read:

Provided further, That hereafter no part of said appropriation shall be used for such purposes—

And so forth.

The Chair is of the opinion that the meaning of that language confines the legislation to the appropriation carried in this bill. The Chair is of the opinion that the original language simply acted as a limitation on the appropriation carried in this bill, and the word "hereafter" does not necessarily make the legislation permanent or applicable as to any other appropriation. The Chair is of the opinion that if the word "any" had been used instead of "said," it would have been permanent legislation. But the legal meaning of the language is that the legislation is confined simply to the appropriation covered by this bill, and therefore the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, there is a difference between the amounts carried in the statement in the original conference report which was withdrawn and this present report of some $35,000, which comes about as follows: Two items, amendments 44 and 80, as passed by the Senate, were gratuity appropriations from the Treasury. One of these items, No. 44, for the Tularosa Road, carried $16,000, and the other No. 80, for the Shiowitz Road and bridge, amounts to $15,000. These two items were made reimbursable from tribal funds by the conferees. Then there is another item carried in amendment No. 29, of $4,000, which was a gratuity from the Federal Treasury. This item was changed so as to have the money drawn from tribal funds. Change in these three amendments, making two reimbursable and the other paid from tribal funds, aggregate $35,000, and this accounts for the difference in these amounts in the conference.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. NORTON. The gentleman says items Nos. 44 and 33 are made reimbursable?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Amendments Nos. 44 and 80.

Mr. NORTON. What is amendment No. 44 reimbursable from?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Amendment No. 44 is the Tularosa Road in New Mexico.

Mr. NORTON. From what is that made reimbursable?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. That is made reimbursable from any funds that may hereafter be due Indians from the sale of their lands and timber.

Mr. NORTON. They have lands to be sold?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. They have lands and timber.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. What does the term "reimbursable," as used in the report, mean?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. That word, when used in an appropriation bill in this manner, signifies that the amount under consideration is to be reimbursed to the Treasury from some other source. In this particular instance it means reimbursed from tribal funds.

Mr. WALSH. I want to ask the gentleman another question, and if he will permit me I shall preface it with a brief statement. I notice that the bill as coming from the conference committee is larger than as it passed the Senate in its total. I want to ask the gentleman if he can hold out any hope to the House or to the country that some of these days the Government will not have to bear this enormous burden on account of the Indian activities, and whether or not the Indian Bureau shows any signs of economy or of adopting a plan which would perhaps relieve the Government of this burden and permit the Indians to embark upon a program where they would not be considered objects of charity to such a large extent or wards of the Nation? Can the gentleman give any assurance that at some time in the near future we will not have to make such tremendous appropriations for this activity?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Massachusetts has asked a question which goes to the very heart of this proposition of Government supervision of the Indians. It will be necessary to continue these appropriations, and perhaps increase them from year to year, until our Indian Bureau shows some better progress in two particulars—first, that of divorcing the competent Indian from further supervision by the Indian Bureau, and, second, the elimination of red tape and duplication of work.

Mr. WALSH. Of course that will be taken care of by the Overman bill.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The ultimate object of the Indian Bureau should be to eliminate itself. That is to say, the efforts of the Indian Bureau should be primarily directed to the culling out of every competent Indian, placing him on his own responsibility, turning him loose, and letting him go hence. This in itself should eliminate a large, unnecessary expense that is now being incurred by the Government, and in addition would admit of Indian Bureau officials giving more judicious and intelligent supervision of the full blood, whom we should consider as the real ward of the Government. Second, that of elimination of red tape and duplication of work is just as important from the standpoint of economy to the Treasury, and could, in my opinion, be done without any violence or injury whatever to the Indian. No one knows or can even attempt to say just how much money is spent unnecessarily on this proposition of red tape and duplication of work, but your Indian Committee has been able to find quite a good deal of it.

It should be eliminated; but the very moment that any serious attempt is made by Congress to carry out either of these reforms it invariably brings into opposition, with all the forces of false sentimentalism, reaction, and stagnation, and if the future can be judged by the past these forces will probably be strong enough to accomplish the defeat of such reforms for some time to come, and in the meantime it will be necessary to continue and perhaps increase appropriations carried by this Indian bill.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman intend to be serious when he expresses the hope that any Government bureau ought to divert its activities toward a course which will eventually eliminate itself? That does not seem to be the purpose that inspires any branch of governmental activity. On the other hand, it seems to be its object to perpetuate itself. I fear from what the gentleman has said that that is the program that is being followed in this bureau.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I cherish no vain delusions that any man is going to seek to eliminate or even curtail his own jurisdiction.

As competent Indians are divorced from the supervision of the Indian Bureau, as red tape and duplication of work is eliminated just in that proportion will the jurisdiction of the Indian Bureau be decreased, and just in that proportion will the employees of the Indian Bureau be cut down. Under such conditions we can not hope for these reforms to come from one of our bureaus itself. It is not in the probability of the cards that it will be done in this way. In the very nature of things none of us seeks to diminish our own jurisdiction. All of us are rather more inclined to attempts at reaching out and covering more territory; so, in my humble opinion, it is expecting too much to hope that any such reforms will ever be instituted in a serious way by the Indian Bureau or any other bureau under like conditions. Since we can not hope for such reform from that source, then there is but one alternative left, and that is for Congress to do it itself.

Mr. BUTLER. That is right. Why do we not do it? We are a good reform factory.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. We have sought to do it to a slight extent right in this bill. The Senate placed an amendment in this bill which is numbered 60. This amendment, in a small way, sought to cut out some of the red tape and duplication now in vogue, but the House conferees and the Senate conferees at the time apparently did not think it would accomplish very much as the Senate passed it, so we undertook in conference to have this Senate amendment amended so as to do some real service, as we thought, in the way of elimination of red tape and duplication of work, and in a way which I verily believe would have done no violence or injustice whatever to the Indians, but would have proved a real service to them. This amendment as amended was agreed to without contest by all the conferees, and our conference report was filed in the House and Senate. What happened? History simply repeated itself. The forces of reaction immediately got on the job, the conferees were called back together, and we were required to eliminate the only part of the amendment which we believe would have done a real service to the Indians.

In connection with that let me call attention to a bill which I introduced early in the session, which has received some considerable consideration from the Committee on Indian Affairs, which was sent many weeks ago to the Indian Bureau for report, but which, up to this time, has failed to receive any report either favorable or adverse. This bill provides for the issuance of trust patents to and divorcing from Government supervision all Indians of less than one-half Indian blood. This line of demarkation was not placed at less than one-half Indian blood as an arbitrary dividing line or without due consideration.

That question was carefully thought out before the bill was introduced. Let us consider for a moment what antecedents are necessary in order that a person shall be of less than one-half Indian blood. A person of less than one-half Indian blood must have had a father and mother who both had white blood, otherwise he would himself be one-half or more than one-half Indian blood. Then this person of less than one-half Indian blood must have been reared by two parents both with an admixture of white blood. Consequently he could not have been raised as an Indian, but necessarily must have been raised as a white man. He must have been raised as I was raised, as my Cherokee friends from Oklahoma, Mr. HASTINGS and Mr. CHANDLER, were raised—not as an Indian, but as a white man—and it seems to me that it is perfectly foolish for our Government to continue supervision over such citizens as these. When I came to Congress, having been elected by about 300,000 people to transact their business in this body, I came here restricted so that I could not sell an acre of my allotted homestead land without the permission of the Secretary of the Interior. One of the first things I did when I came here was to persuade Congress to change the law which so restricted me; but there are many competent Indians throughout our country whom the Government still undertakes to supervise, and they should be set free. This rule should apply to every competent Indian in the land.

In justice to the Secretary of the Interior I must say that he has recently been accomplishing some good things along this line with his competency commissions. These commissions I understand to be not under the Indian Bureau, but make their reports direct to the Secretary of the Interior. But I do not think even this work is proceeding with sufficient expedition to warrant any hopes of curtailing the Indian appropriations in the near future.

Mr. FESS. What proportion would be set free of supervision of the Government if the gentleman's bill should pass?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I have not any statistics at hand and it would be guesswork, but I should say that 20 to 30 per cent would be dismissed from supervision at once, and the bill provides machinery for removing restrictions from others as they are found to be competent.

Mr. WALSH. And the appropriations reduced accordingly?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Certainly; and the appropriations reduced accordingly.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I will.

Mr. FESS. Is it not a rather unusual thing for these appropriations to increase when the purpose of the supervision is to put the Indian where he can be self-sustaining?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I would not use the word "unusual." We might say "surprising." It is the usual thing to do, because when I came to Congress, as I recall now, this appropriation bill carried about $9,000,000 from the Treasury. Now, as the Indians have progressed and are developing along with this wonderful civilization of ours, we find we must appropriate from the Treasury over $11,000,000.

Mr. BUTLER. Did I hear the gentleman correctly to state that when he came to Congress his affairs were managed by this bureau?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. When I came to Congress I had 160 acres of land that I could not sell, which I could not lease for longer than one year without asking the permission of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. BUTLER. Was it by reason of this management the gentleman was so efficient when he came here? [Laughter.]

Mr. WALSH. In spite of it.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I will.

Mr. CRAMTON. While the illustration the gentleman gives is, of course, of peculiar force here in the House, where the gentleman is known and his capacity is known, the gentleman also would be willing to state that there are thousands of persons of more than half Indian blood to whom it would be a real disaster if the protection of the Indian Bureau as an agency in the Government were withdrawn.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Oh, Mr. Speaker, no one will go any further than I to protect the real Indian. No one has gone further than I to protect him, and I have been subjected to contumely and abuse of some few people who ought to have been my friends on account of my attempts to protect the real Indians. No one will go further than I. I do not want the gentleman to misunderstand me. I do not want to say that the Indian Bureau can be wiped out with one stroke of the pen.

Mr. CRAMTON. I am simply endeavoring to get a statement from the gentleman——

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. But if you expect to have any lessening of expense, if we expect a procedure which will lessen the jurisdiction and expense of any of our bureaus, then the Congress itself must do it, for we are not going to be able to rely upon any man or agency to do it.

Mr. CRAMTON. I am simply asking the gentleman to get a direct statement from him as to these Indians of more than half Indian blood. I know the gentleman's position is that the Government should continue its supervision of their affairs in large degree.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Of those who need it.

Mr. CRAMTON. And that is quite generally true of those of full blood, or nearly so. Now, might I ask the gentleman if it is not true that a few years ago when restrictions were removed from a great number of Indians that was followed by the wholesale alienation of their land, so that within a period of 10 years a very great per cent of them were entirely wiped out as to their possessions?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Well, Mr. Speaker, there are no authoritative figures given on that proposition. If the gentleman refers to the act of May 27, 1908, that only removed restrictions on the homestead lands of those Indians of less than half Indian blood of the Five Civilized Tribes. It did not touch those of half or more than half Indian blood. Now, if those Indians of less than half Indian blood had become educated at the expense of the tribe, or at the expense of the Federal Government, had been educated perhaps in the schools with white children, and had grown up right alongside them, that Indian, if he was not then able to take care of himself, should not be blamed on account of his Indian blood, because he was more of a white man than an Indian.

Mr. CRAMTON. I have seen the statement quite recently that, by a certain statute enacted about 10 years ago, some 90 per cent of those whose restrictions as to the alienation of land had been removed, within that 10 years of time had entirely divested themselves of their land. Now, I would like to ask the gentleman——

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I have heard of the statement to which the gentleman refers. It was 85 per cent; but the gentleman who made that statement—and he was an Indian Bureau employee—when pressed for an answer said his statement had been obtained—from whom? Not from an actual count of the Indians, not from the Indian Bureau, not from the records, but from the land men who dealt with the Indian and bought his land themselves; so that is about the extent of its authenticity.

Mr. CHANDLER of Oklahoma. And is it not a fact that the proposition is simply this, that many sold their land and allotment, like myself and Mr. HASTINGS, and invested it in other ways? And while I sold my allotment, I can go and buy it back again for half of what I sold it, and yet I am incompetent, unable to look after my own business.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. And yet the gentleman's constituents trust him to look after theirs.

Mr. HICKS. Do I understand the chairman of the committee to state that, in his opinion, the increase in this appropriation is due more largely to the unscientific treatment of this question than to an increase in the Indians themselves?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I think it is due to these points——

Mr. HICKS. I am glad to have the gentleman make that clear.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. First, the attempt to take care of and supervise a class of people who are just as competent as those who are trying to supervise them; and, second, to cut out the red tape and duplication of work that exists throughout the Indian Bureau.

Mr. HICKS. Is there any increase in the number of Indians that come under the supervision of the Indian Bureau?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. It has decreased somewhat in the last 10 years, and appropriations still continue to increase.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WALSH. I want to state that the sections of country which have no dealings with the Indian Bureau of course have no understanding of the various problems. My question was prompted by a desire to know if the enormous cost to the Government might not in some way be decreased, or if some hope might not be held out that it would be decreased. I want to thank the gentleman for his statement, and to say that I think I express the views of a great many gentlemen of the House when I say that I believe that if the Indian Bureau in some way could be induced to follow the suggestions or the program of gentlemen like the distinguished gentleman from Oklahoma, who has a wide range of knowledge and intimate familiarity with these problems, the Government would be saving money; that the Indians would be assured of humane and just treatment; and that the taxpayers of the country would be assured that the conduct of its Indian affairs was being handled upon an economical basis.

I want to thank the gentleman for the views he has expressed in reply to my question.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that in my opinion we are never going to get this reform until it is brought about by Congress. And when we undertake that we are going to find lined up against us all the forces that will be discommoded by it, all the forces of stagnation, all the forces of sentimentalism, who want to see the Indian remain in war paint and feathers and blankets; and, as a rule, they have been strong enough in the past to defeat such legislation. There was one exception to this, and that was when we passed the restriction bill for the Five Civilized Tribes.

Mr. SINNOTT and Mr. NORTON rose.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT] first.

Mr. SINNOTT. I desire to call the gentleman's attention to Senate amendment No. 70, on page 68, and that is the allotment of the $400,000 to the Klamath Indians. On account of some misgivings having been expressed in the Oregon papers, I would like to ask the gentleman whether or not the department has any discretion to defer the expenditure of this money beyond the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Now, let us see what the gentleman's question was.

Mr. SINNOTT. Amendment No. 70, on page 68, the appropriation of $400,000 for the purchase of stocks, and so on, for the Klamath Indians.

Mr. NORTON. They may expend, I will say to the gentleman, $1 or $400,000 of that amount.

Mr. SINNOTT. Can they defer the expenditure of that money beyond the next fiscal year, ending June 30, 1919?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. They can not extend it beyond the next fiscal year.

Mr. SINNOTT. It applies during the next fiscal year?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. NORTON. Just to make it clear to the House, I know the gentleman, as he intimated, will understand that under existing law the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Lane—who, by the way, is generally accredited with being the most able man in the present Cabinet—has the right to release restrictions from any Indian of less than half Indian blood and from any Indian, as a matter of fact, whom he considers competent; that under existing law he has the right to employ men to go out to the different Indian reservations and advise him concerning the Indians now restricted who would be better off and whose condition would be better if the Government restrictions were removed. That I mention so that the House may understand what the law is; and the authority has already been given to the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The gentleman of course knows, and we all know, that the Secretary of the Interior has full authority to remove the restrictions on any Indian. But that is done——

Mr. NORTON. And, further, any Indian who desires to have his restrictions removed has the right to make application.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. NORTON. And has the right to have a hearing and have the restrictions removed?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. True. But there are two reasons, as the gentleman knows, why that is not done, and the first is because when the Indian's restrictions are removed his lands become taxable; and an Indian of less than half blood is no more anxious than his white brother to pay taxes. It ought not to depend on his application. The very fact that the Indian says he does not want his restrictions removed is one of the very best reasons in the world for removing them, because it shows he is frugal enough to try to avoid taxation.

And the other reason is the very reason that brought me here, with restrictions on me, because I had a little pride and I did not feel that I wanted to humiliate myself by going before some clerk of the Indian Bureau and submit to giving answers to such questions as I thought were none of his business in order that I might have the right to do as I pleased with that which was my own.

Mr. GANDY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. GANDY. I just want to ask the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. NORTON] a question. I am sure the gentleman did not want to leave the impression on the House that when an Indian out on one of these Indian reservations makes an application for patent in fee he has any right for a hearing?

Mr. NORTON. He has the right under the existing law to have a hearing before the superintendent of the agency, and that is given him. I will say, so far as my personal knowledge is concerned, that I am very much in favor of a compulsory law removing the restriction from all Indians of less than half blood. I make those statements so that the House may know what the real conditions are.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I am glad the gentleman mentioned it, because I realize that many Members do not know that which we took for granted.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. In section 18 the conferees have eliminated the last proviso, "That applications for the removal of restrictions, loaning, investing, or depositing of Indian funds shall be submitted to the Secretary of the Interior as far as he may direct." May I ask the gentleman the reason for eliminating that?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. That was provided by section 1 of the act of 1908.

Mr. CRAMTON. So that there is no necessity for it?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. No.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. What I wanted to inquire about has already been answered. I just wished to ask what the Secretary of the Interior could do now under the law, and whether there is anything in the way of his doing it?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The Secretary himself has been rather inclined to be progressive on these questions, I will say to the gentleman from Connecticut, and has perhaps gone a little further than some of his advisers desired that he should go.

Mr. SHERWOOD. How many Indians are enjoying tribal relations now?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. That would depend on what we consider tribal relations are. Really very little of what were known as tribal relations now exist among any of the Indians. Some of them have a business committee, others have a chief, and they have governments of this or that kind under different heads, all of whom are subject to removal by the Secretary of the Interior, and most of whom are appointed by the Secretary.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Probably how many?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I would say that probably half of them have that kind of relation, and there are something over 300,000 Indians.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think it is worthy of mention by the chairman of the committee, and to have it called to the attention of the House—his surrender under duress, I assume, to the items agreed to in a modified form, providing for the support of Indians in Mississippi, the Mississippi Choctaws, and also Indians in Texas, which have in no way any tribal relations, but have independent citizenship.

That item, so far as the relief and education of the Texas Indians are concerned, has been bitterly opposed for years and years, and successfully opposed by the former chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, Representative Stephens, of Texas; and now, under military or other power exerted, the conferees were obliged to surrender the position that has been taken by the House conferees in the past against the policy of providing for the education and support of Indians who are citizens and are recognized as citizens in their respective communities.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, the managers on the part of the House really thought they had done a pretty good job with that amendment. There was a Senate amendment carrying $175,000 for schools and the purchase of lands of the Coushatta Indians in Polk County, Tex. That was amendment No. 77. The Indian Bureau was heart and soul for this amendment. We realized the power and influence of it, and we realized that sooner or later that amendment was going to be placed in some bill; that there was no use for three conferees to try to resist a power of that kind, and when it did come we realized it would probably amount to a great deal more than the amount we agreed to. So that when we cut it down from $175,000 to $8,000 we really thought we did a pretty neat job under the circumstances.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then is the House to understand that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, as head of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, was strenuously insisting that this item in some form should be incorporated in the bill?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. We were so advised by all parties to the conference who seemed to know.

Mr. STAFFORD. I believe his native State and present residence is Texas.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I understand his native State is Iowa.

Mr. STAFFORD. I mean to say his present residential State is Texas. I assume that he desired to give some exceptional relief to some Indians who have the status of full citizenship, so that he might show his gratitude to his present State in advancing any cause he might have down there in that State.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The gentleman must not ask me to pass upon the motives of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. I suppose these people were right near him, and he had more opportunity to observe their need of help.

Mr. STAFFORD. Do I understand that he lives tributary to this country which is sought to be affected by this item?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I really could not give the gentleman any information about that. I do not know how far it is from his home town to the land sought to be purchased; but we did not provide for the purchase of any land under the House amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. There are several Members from Texas here in the House. Perhaps they might be able to give the House the information.

I wish now to direct attention to another item, to Senate amendment No. 92, in which the conferees apparently have liberalized the provision as adopted by the Senate. I wish especially to inquire why the conferees made an exception, so far as interest charges and other regulations are concerned, as to the funds of the Five Civilized Tribes and Osage Tribe of Indians, excepting them from the provisions applicable to other Indians, as provided in the section?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The Indian appropriation act of 1911 made about the same provision for the Five Civilized Tribes, and this act itself in another place carries a provision with reference to the Osages.

Mr. STAFFORD. This provision here directs these trust funds, whether they can be segregated or not, to be deposited in the banks of the respective communities in the States where the tribes are located, at reasonable rates of interest, provided they can be obtained.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. That is already the law with reference to the Five Civilized Tribes, and a similar provision is carried in this same bill in another item with reference to the Osages.

Mr. STAFFORD. But here is an exception to that general provision, that the funds of the Five Civilized Tribes and Osage Tribe of Indians, and of the individual members thereof, shall be deposited in the banks of Oklahoma or in the United States Treasury, and may be secured by the deposit of United States bonds, but the other provisions requiring interest payments by the banks shall not apply to these funds.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Where is the gentleman reading?

Mr. STAFFORD. In the last proviso to section 28, amendment 92:

And provided further, That the foregoing shall not apply to the funds of the Five Civilized Tribes, or the Osage Tribe of Indians, in the State of Oklahoma, but the funds of such tribes and individual members thereof shall be deposited in the banks of Oklahoma or in the United States Treasury and may be secured by the deposit of United States bonds.

Under that provision the funds belonging to the Five Civilized Tribes and the Osage Indians—and the funds belonging to the Osage Indians run into the millions of dollars—must be deposited in the banks of Oklahoma without the requirements of this provision that they shall pay a reasonable rate of interest. I ask some member of the conference committee to explain that mandatory direction, excepting the funds of the Five Civilized Tribes and the Osage Indians, running into millions of dollars, from the requirement that reasonable interest shall be paid on the deposits.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. If the gentleman will look at amendment 57, he will see that the Osages are covered under that.

Mr. CHANDLER of Oklahoma. And the act of 1911 makes that provision for the Five Civilized Tribes.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The act of 1911 makes the same provision for the Five Civilized Tribes. It is practically the same thing for the Five Civilized Tribes, with the exception of the individual Indian's money.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman mean to say that under existing law there is a provision directing the funds of the Five Civilized Tribes and the Osage Tribe of Indians to be deposited in the State banks without paying interest?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. No; under rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. STAFFORD. This provision is the latest enactment of the law. It relates to the placing of tribal trust funds, whether they can be segregated or not, in the banks drawing a reasonable rate of interest. That provision in the last proviso excepts the Five Civilized Tribes and the Osage Tribe of Indians. These moneys are required to be deposited in State banks or the United States Treasury, but if deposited in the State banks of Oklahoma, running into millions of dollars, they will not be required to draw interest.

Mr. HAYDEN. There is nothing in this proviso which repeals the special statute that requires the funds of the Five Civilized Tribes when deposited in the banks to draw interest and that proper security be given for such deposits. That being the case, there is no danger of anything happening that the gentleman from Wisconsin fears.

Mr. STAFFORD. This is the latest enactment of law, and it supersedes as far as it conflicts with any prior law or statutory enactment.

Mr. HAYDEN. This proviso does not conflict with prior enactments; the interest must therefore be paid.

Mr. STAFFORD. Here is a provision for the depositing of Indian funds, whether segregated or not, and directs how these funds shall be placed. This is a general enactment, and the last proviso provides that this general enactment shall not be applicable to the funds of the Five Civilized Tribes or the Osage Tribe of Indians—that they shall be deposited in the banks of Oklahoma and may be secured by the deposit of United States bonds.

Mr. HAYDEN. Why should the funds of the Five Tribes be excepted? The answer is, because some years ago a special statute was passed which provided for the depositing of these funds in the banks of Oklahoma, under adequate security and with a proper interest charge. With respect to the Osage Indians we provided in this same bill, in amendment No. 57, that the Osage funds shall be deposited under the rules and regulations of the Secretary of the Interior as to interest and security. Now, in the face of these two special statutes a general statute would of course not apply.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am not willing to concur in that statement. If we were not adopting a general law as we are doing, applicable to the funds of all Indian tribes, as the gentleman will admit, I might concur in his proposition. But when we pass a general law relating to all funds of Indian tribes, and that law directs where they shall be deposited, and provides for the drawing of interest, and then the proviso especially excepts the funds of the Five Civilized Tribes and the Osage Tribe of Indians, in effect that they shall not be limited by these conditions, I think it is open to grave question whether these funds draw interest.

Mr. HAYDEN. The history of this proviso is as follows: As originally adopted in the Senate it provided that the foregoing should not apply to the Five Civilized Tribes or the Osage Tribe of Indians. Why? Because there were special acts which governed the funds of the tribes. That fact was brought to our attention.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. If the gentleman will pardon me, the segregation of the funds was the principal thing undertaken by that section. Originally the provision could not apply to the Osage Indians or the Five Civilized Tribes, because that had already been done.

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes; but there was no authority by which United States bonds might be used as security for obtaining the deposits of the Osage Indians or the Five Civilized Tribes, and therefore we provided that the funds of such tribes, either individual or community funds, should be deposited in the banks as now provided by law, and that the bonds of the United States might be used to secure such deposits. Our sole object and purpose was to make United States bonds available for security of such deposits.

Mr. STAFFORD. That may have been the intention, but I respectfully submit that under this general language providing generally for the method of depositing Indian funds and trust funds, whether they may be segregated or not, and requiring the conditions under which these funds may be deposited, that when you incorporate in a proviso a special exception in which you state that these conditions shall not apply to the funds of the Five Civilized Tribes or the Osage Tribe of Indians, and that the funds shall be deposited, not under and according to the rules and regulations of the Secretary of the Interior but mandatorially direct that they shall be deposited in banks in Oklahoma, and in the United States Treasury, that that is a direction that they shall be deposited without any interest charge whatever.

Mr. HAYDEN. But we do not repeal the special statutes, which provide for proper security and that interest shall be paid.

Mr. STAFFORD. You are amending those statutes right here by this proviso.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. That is the only change there is in the law.

Mr. HAYDEN. That is all there is to it.

Mr. STAFFORD. By referring in this general way, you are superseding the special law that you passed heretofore.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The gentleman is mistaken about that. What does this language say here? This only exempts tribes from this language that is written in this amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is that language?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. It does not exempt them from anything else. It does not exempt them from existing law, which provides that the funds may be deposited in the banks of Oklahoma and draw interest under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the language that the gentleman refers to? The first proviso is:

Provided, That no tribal or individual money shall be deposited in any bank until the bank shall agree to pay interest thereon at a reasonable rate and shall have furnished an acceptable bond or collateral security therefor.

There is a general provision, and now you except the funds of the Five Civilized Tribes and the Osage Tribe of Indians from the effect of that general law.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The Five Civilized Tribes and the Osage Indians are always legislated for differently from any other tribes. This does not in any manner repeal existing law, which gives all of the protection necessary. It provides that the funds shall be deposited in banks and shall draw interest under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I want to ask the gentleman one question. Is there now a general statute which provides that the money of these particular Indians mentioned in this last proviso, the Five Civilized Tribes and the Osage Indians, when deposited in banks in Oklahoma shall draw interest?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Yes. It is the act of March 3, 1911.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Then, in my judgment, there is a principle of law with which everyone on the floor is familiar that will settle this controversy. Every lawyer understands that in law repeals by implication are not favored. There being a general statute requiring payment of interest on funds of these particular Indians when deposited in banks, there are but two ways by which to repeal that statute. One would be by a statute expressly repealing it and the other by statute repealing it by implication. Repeal by implication is not favored in law at all wherever it is possible to reconcile the provisions of two statutes on the same subject. This last proviso does not, in my opinion, in the slightest degree tend to repeal the general statute.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The conferees did not so regard it, and no one of the conferees had any idea of changing existing law.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Certainly it does not expressly repeal it, and no court, I think, would hold that it does it by implication.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is just the question.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. To sum up in a few words, this proviso requires the money of these Indians to be deposited in banks in Oklahoma, and the already existing law requires that money of these Indians deposited in Oklahoma shall draw interest. Plainly there is no conflict between the terms of the proviso and the existing law, and therefore there is no repeal by implication, and the funds will draw interest.

Mr. CHANDLER of Oklahoma. Here is what the act of 1911 says:

* * * may be deposited in National or State banks in the State of Oklahoma in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, such depositories to be designated by him under such rules and regulations governing the rate of interest thereon, time of deposit and withdrawal therefrom, and security therefor as he may prescribe.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, it is very evident that we can not get through with this matter within the hour, and I ask unanimous consent that the time be extended for 30 minutes. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS] has some remarks that he desires to submit.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. How much more time has the gentleman?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has two minutes remaining.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the gentleman from Oklahoma reserve the remainder of his time and that I be recognized for an hour.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I reserve the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL].

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS] such time as he may desire within the hour.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a general speech upon the Indian question, and particularly upon this bill, as it affects the Five Civilized Tribes, and this one item that we have under discussion this afternoon. And for fear I will not have the time I am going to ask in advance to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to extend and revise his remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HASTINGS. I want to say further, Mr. Speaker, that I am going to ask the Members of the House to allow me to proceed, because I believe I can anticipate the questions they desire to ask me. I have my theory about the management of the Five Civilized Tribes, and I would ask not to be interrupted at the present until I shall have concluded.

Mr. Speaker, this bill carries an appropriation of $11,032,517.36 for the fulfillment of treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes and for their support, civilization, and education, as well as for the prevention and treatment of contagious and infectious diseases among them. Of this amount $2,786,857.36 is reimbursable from the sale of timber or land belonging to them, while the remainder is a direct appropriation from the Federal Treasury. Four hundred thousand dollars is contained in the bill for the relief and care of destitute Indians and for the treatment and prevention of contagious and infectious diseases, including the maintenance of various hospitals throughout the western country. One million seven hundred thousand dollars is for the purpose of paying the expenses of Indian children who are attending day and industrial schools, to educate them along industrial lines. Four hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars is appropriated for the care of timber and for industrial work among the Indians. One hundred and fifty thousand dollars is appropriated for the suppression of the liquor traffic. Every one recognizes the necessity for making this last appropriation. Inasmuch as a great deal of difficulty has been experienced in preventing the introduction into Indian country and sale of intoxicating liquors to Indians, the following drastic provision, making the possession of intoxicating liquors in such country a crime, was incorporated in the bill:

Provided, That on and after September 1, 1918, possession by a person of intoxicating liquors in the Indian country where the introduction is or was prohibited by treaty or Federal statute shall be an offense and punished in accordance with the provisions of the acts of July 23, 1892 (27 Stat. L., p. 260), and January 30, 1897 (29 Stat. L., p. 506).

Appropriations are made for the care and support of Indians in 24 of the 48 States of the Union. Legislation for their benefit should be viewed from a national standpoint. Once they occupied the entire United States. By treaties and legislation the areas occupied by them have been diminished from time to time, until now their reservations cover a relatively small portion of the country.

The last Federal census gave the number of Indians as 265,683. In addition, many mixed bloods are scattered throughout the United States, who are not included in this census as Indians.

Oklahoma means "The home of the red man," and the State is properly named. In all, 33 tribes are located there. The Five Civilized Tribes occupied the eastern half of the State when Oklahoma was admitted to statehood, and they owned 19,520,960 acres of land. The Dawes Commission was sent to them by the act of March 3, 1893, to make an agreement for the abolition of their tribal governments, the enrollment of their members, the distribution of their moneys, and the allotment of their lands. It was expected that this work would require only a few years. That was 25 years ago. Everyone familiar with winding up an estate knows that a delay of 25 years in administering upon it is sufficient to bankrupt it. The members of the Five Civilized Tribes begged and plead with Congress and the departments to expedite winding up their affairs when they were political orphans and without representation in Congress, and since statehood they have spoken through their Representatives, urging legislation and departmental action to this end.

The Indians of the Five Civilized Tribes were made citizens of the United States by the act of March 3, 1901. The greatest difficulty experienced in securing legislation for them is due to the fact that Members of Congress are unable to distinguish between the qualifications of the different tribes. They have no personal knowledge of conditions existing among them. It is not generally known that the Five Civilized Tribes have a century of civilization behind them; that they had governments of their own, similar to the various State governments, with their executive, legislative, and judicial branches. It is not generally known that they made their own laws and executed them; that they had their own school systems, which included primary and boarding schools; and that for a hundred years the Government of the United States had no supervision of any kind over the Five Civilized Tribes. They appropriated their own money without any supervision. These tribes are not to be compared with any other tribes in the United States when legislation comes up for consideration concerning them. These tribes have Indians upon their rolls with as little as one two-hundred-and-fifty-sixth part Indian blood.

When statehood came a large number of Indians were elected to the constitutional convention, and since that time a very large number of Indians have been elected to the various county, State, and Federal offices in Oklahoma. In that part of Oklahoma formerly occupied by the Five Civilized Tribes and known as the Indian Territory there is now no distinction between Indians and whites. The fact that one is of Indian blood is seldom referred to. They represent the greatest development and the best civilization of any Indians on the American Continent. They are proud of their advancement and look with encouragement to their future. The splendid State of Oklahoma honored one of their members by placing a statue of the great Sequoyah in Statuary Hall as one of its most distinguished men. The progress of these tribes was made without any governmental supervision, either tribal or individual. Surely lessons helpful in the management of other Indian tribes may be drawn from the achievements of the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma.

There were enrolled 101,519 members of the Five Civilized Tribes. This number included 2,506 intermarried whites and 23,405 freedmen enrolled as members of the tribes, leaving 75,608 enrolled as Indians by blood. Of this number 26,787 were enrolled as of full Indian blood and 37,180 were enrolled as restricted Indians. All Indians of one-half or more Indian blood are classed as restricted Indians. Most of the rolls were made as of date 1902. It is estimated that about one-third have died since then and the restrictions have been removed from about 5,000, so there are about 20,000 living restricted Indians of one-half or more Indian blood among the members of the Five Civilized Tribes.

The Oklahoma delegation has done everything possible within the past few years to individualize the lands and moneys of these Indian tribes, and much has been accomplished. Three years ago a per capita payment of $300 was made to the Choctaws and $200 to the Chickasaws. Last year a per capita payment of $100 was made to each of these tribes, and the present bill authorizes the payment of $200 to each. There are 20,799 Choctaws and 6,304 Chickasaws. These disbursements to them aggregate $15,631,400. A per capita payment of $300 to the Seminoles was made in 1916 and another of $200 was authorized last year, but only $34 paid, because insufficient funds were available. The present bill directs a per capita payment of $100 to the Seminoles and also provides that all the moneys belonging to the Creek Tribe, except $150,000 withheld for the payment of current expenses, including three boarding schools, shall be paid out as equalization money. There are enrolled upon the Creek roll 18,774 and upon the Seminole roll 3,127. Including the amounts paid and authorized to be paid per capita to the Choctaws and Chickasaws and Seminoles within the past three years, as well as the $138,019.20 balance paid to the Cherokees and the $2,000,000 equalization money authorized to be paid the Creeks, the total aggregates $19,096,537.20. The affairs of the Cherokee Tribe have been completely wound up. There were 41,824 enrolled members of this tribe. They have no officers of any kind and a provision is inserted in the pending bill to construct a dormitory at the Cherokee Orphan Training School out of any remnants of money uncalled for at the end of 18 months belonging to this tribe.

All legislation necessary to wind up the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma has been enacted. Recently Congress passed an act providing for the sale of the coal and asphalt lands. Laws are already in force that will enable the administrative officers of the Government to completely wind up the affairs of these tribes. The question, therefore, in the future will be an individual rather than a tribal question.

The Oklahoma delegation has insisted that the affairs of the individual Indians can best be administered by Federal employees in Oklahoma, who know the situation and are in sympathetic touch with the Indians, rather than by Federal employees in Washington, 1,500 miles away, who know nothing of the members of the Five Civilized Tribes except from reading typewritten reports of the superintendent at Muskogee.

When I entered Congress at the regular session in December, 1915, the first bill introduced by me was H. R. 108, to confer upon the Superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes, Muskogee, Okla., the authority now exercised by the Secretary of the Interior over the individual members of these tribes. This bill was strenuously opposed by certain departmental officials, who never want to give up any jurisdiction. No department of the Government wants to give up any jurisdiction, and the heads of the various bureaus are always unwilling to trust officials in the field with final authority. When the Indian bill was up before the House there was considerable criticism of the methods of the Indian Office. This criticism was just, and while it was not directed at the head of any particular bureau, it is against the system.

Under the existing law every agricultural lease of a restricted Indian in the Five Civilized Tribes must be approved by the Secretary of the Interior. The same is true with reference to any claim to be paid out of restricted money. It is also true of the approval of oil and gas leases. There are 265 Federal employees in the Indian Service alone in Oklahoma. They are all under the civil service, and are honest, capable, and sympathetic.

An amendment was added to the Indian appropriation bill in the Senate providing that undisputed claims and uncontested leases should be approved by the Superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes at Muskogee, Okla., instead of the Secretary of the Interior, who as to these matters, of course, acts through department clerks in Washington. Oil and gas leases were excepted from the operation of this amendment. The conferees took out the exception when they met and, therefore, included the uncontested oil and gas leases, which were to be approved by the Superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes. Immediately an earnest protest came from the Indian Office and intimations were made that proper protection was not being given the Indians and that some scandal would follow the enactment of this legislation. I want to denounce such intimations in the very strongest language and condemn them as unfounded.

The item as was first agreed to in conference only provided that undisputed claims and uncontested leases should be approved by the Superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes, instead of the Secretary of the Interior. It took away no supervision from the Indian, either over claims or over leases, but simply transferred supervision, so far as undisputed claims and uncontested leases were concerned, to the local Federal official at Muskogee, Okla., who is nominated by the President and confirmed by the Senate. The right of appeal was given to the Secretary of the Interior in all contested cases. He has 265 assistants who have personal knowledge of the Indians in addition to what is shown by the enrollment records in his office. They are in much better position to handle these matters in Oklahoma than the head of any bureau in the Indian Office in Washington.

After the conference report was filed, a point of order was made against it in the Senate, because of the fact that the approval of uncontested oil and gas leases was transferred from the department in Washington to the Superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes, a Federal official at Muskogee, Okla., and the report was recommitted to the conferees, who agreed to the following provision:

That hereafter no part of said appropriation shall be used in forwarding the undisputed claims to be paid from individual moneys of restricted allottees, or their heirs, or in forwarding uncontested agricultural and mineral leases, excluding oil and gas leases, made by individual restricted Indian allottees, or their heirs, to the Secretary of the Interior for approval, but all such undisputed claims or uncontested leases, except oil and gas leases, now required to be approved under existing law by the Secretary of the Interior shall be paid, approved, rejected, or disapproved by the Superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes of Oklahoma: Provided, however, That any party aggrieved by any decision or order of the Superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes of Oklahoma may appeal from the same to the Secretary of the Interior within 30 days from the date of said decision or order.

There was also inserted in section 28 of the bill a provision requiring that the funds of the Five Civilized Tribes and the Osage Tribe of Indians and the individual members thereof "shall be deposited in the banks of Oklahoma or in the United States Treasury and may be secured by the deposit of United States bonds." The money belonging to the tribes and restricted members in Oklahoma will be used to develop Oklahoma, and Government bonds may be used as security for the funds.

It will be seen that this provision, as finally enacted, permits the Superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes to approve agricultural leases and to pay the undisputed claims of restricted Indians. It is a long step in the right direction, but the superintendent at Muskogee should be given the authority also to approve uncontested oil and gas leases, with the right of appeal in contested cases.

Of course, it will be said that this would take power away from the Secretary of the Interior. Everybody knows that the Secretary of the Interior can not attend to the details of this work, as it is only a small branch of his department. I doubt if he ever personally approved a single oil or gas lease or the payment of a single claim. These claims are filed with local representatives of the office in the various counties in eastern Oklahoma. Reports are made upon them and they go to the Superintendent for the Five Cilivilized Tribes, in Muskogee, Okla., where they are examined and reports are made to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, whose subordinates examine them again 1,500 miles away from Oklahoma, and who know nothing about them except what the papers show. A report is made by the commissioner's office to the Secretary of the Interior, with no additional information. The same is true of oil and gas leases, which are made upon blank forms in quadruplicate. These forms have not been changed for the last seven years. All the information concerning any Indian matter is collected and filed with the Superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes at Muskogee, and there is no additional information in the possession of the Indian Office at Washington upon matters forwarded here by the superintendent.

It is well known by everyone in Oklahoma familiar with the oil business that commercial leases are more valuable and bring more money in the competitive market than departmental leases. This is largely due to the uncertainty of approvals and delays incident thereto. When a lease is entered into and submitted for approval, a bond is required upon which a premium is charged. A bonus is paid and development arranged for, but drilling contracts must be made only tentatively, until the lease is forwarded to Washington for final action and returned approved.

If the matter is urgent, a representative of the lessee takes the train for Washington, or employs a Washington attorney, or wires or writes his Representative in Congress. The officials at Washington have no information in addition to what the papers accompanying the report show. They are no more competent or trustworthy than the Federal officials in Oklahoma. Remember that the proposed amendment only provided for the approval by the Superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes of the uncontested leases. The contested leases were to be forwarded for review. I contend that all this is unnecessary; that it is a duplication of work; that it causes delay; that it requires extra clerical help, making it expensive to the Government; and that it affords no additional protection to the Indian, but is a financial loss, because departmental leases are not as valuable as commercial leases.

The present Indian appropriation bill carries an appropriation of $185,000 for the payment of employees of the Superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes. A large part of this sum is paid clerks employed in answering letters and preparing reports. Large sums are appropriated for the Indian Office in Washington. A great many of these employees could be transferred to other branches of the Government if this duplication of work were eliminated. However, each time that an attempt is made to eliminate this duplication of work an attack is inspired against the legislation, insinuating that it is a scheme to rob the Indians and that certain scandals will grow out of it. I have supreme contempt for such methods and am very impatient with them. I am a Cherokee Indian by blood and am carried on the rolls of the tribe. My whole life has been devoted to their service. Since reaching manhood I have held one position after another in the Cherokee Tribe, including the office of attorney general and representative of the tribe in Washington for 25 years. I have assisted in securing the enactment of all legislation looking to the winding up of Cherokee tribal affairs. They have been completely wound up. I represented the tribe before the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes in making its roll and before all the courts of the country. I have a right, therefore, to speak with some knowledge regarding the Five Civilized Tribes.

No man would go further to protect the Indian. I would be heartily ashamed of myself if I did not. I have fought his battles all my life. I attended the tribal schools. I taught in them. I practiced law in the tribal courts and, as before stated, have been honored and trusted by the Cherokee Tribe for 25 years. I would be untrue to myself and to my race if I did not give my best thought and earnest consideration to the enactment of laws and the adoption of policies for their protection and development, as well as all tribes scattered throughout the United States.

The report of the Superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes for the past fiscal year shows that there were 9,725 letters sent from his office to the department in Washington. Eliminating Sundays and holidays, he sent about 32 letters every day to the department. He received in reply 8,158 letters, or an average of about 27 each day. His office received 141,184 miscellaneous letters, and he wrote 146,645 miscellaneous letters. Perhaps half of the latter were written because of the delays occasioned by sending matters from the office at Muskogee to the department in Washington for approval. Including circulars, 880,712 pieces of mail went through the Muskogee office.

The department is always opposed to giving additional authority to the local Federal employees in Oklahoma, but it has never been pointed out wherein the Indians would not be protected. Departmental officials content themselves with vague insinuations calculated to frighten Members of Congress who do not understand the situation. Such tactics have no terrors for me.

Let me repeat that the proposed amendment did not take away the least bit of supervision from the restricted Indians of the Five Civilized Tribes, but simply transferred supervision over undisputed claims and uncontested leases from bureau chiefs in Washington to a responsible Federal official nominated by the President and confirmed by the Senate, with headquarters at Muskogee, Okla., surrounded and assisted by 265 civil-service employees. Can it be said that these 265 employees in Oklahoma are not honest or efficient? How could any injustice be done the Indian when his individual matters are supervised by a Federal employee upon the ground, who fully understands the situation?

The first commission sent to the Five Civilized Tribes was under the act of March 3, 1893. It was headed by the venerable ex-Senator Henry L. Dawes, from whom the commission took its name. Its personnel was changed from time to time. At times the number of commissioners was increased, and at other times decreased, until in August, 1914, there was only one commissioner, and his office was combined with that of the Indian agent at Muskogee. I came into close contact with every one of these commissioners. They were all men of the very highest character, and during the entire 25 years of their combined service there was never a breath of suspicion against any single one of them. There was never any suggestion that any one of them did not perform the duties of his office honestly and efficiently or extend every protection to the Indians of the Five Civilized Tribes. It is a great pleasure for me to attest to their personal integrity and to the very high character of each one of them. The present Superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes is a Choctaw Indian and is carried on the rolls of that tribe. He is a man of the very highest character. He was a member of the constitutional convention in Oklahoma, was for years in charge of one of the Indian academies, and was later Register of the Treasury of the United States. He is in complete sympathy with the Indians in Oklahoma and can be depended upon under all circumstances to see that their rights are protected.

He has 265 civil-service employees under him. It is my good fortune to know nearly all of them personally, and I never knew men and women who were more intelligent, more competent, or more efficient. They are not excelled anywhere. I assert, with confidence, that all these undisputed claims and uncontested leases could be left with that office in perfect safety. I can not find parliamentary language sufficient to express my contempt for any insinuations against either the integrity or competency of these officials to fully protect every interest of restricted Indians in Oklahoma.

Not only in Oklahoma, but throughout the entire United States, wherever Indians are located, the local representatives should be given greater authority under general rules and regulations prescribed by the Indian Office. If you place greater authority upon the local representative, the additional responsibility he is compelled to assume will strengthen him and make him a much more efficient and capable officer. This is true everywhere. I am opposed to incompetency or dishonesty in every branch of the public service, and if we have any incompetent or dishonest officials in the Indian Service they should be dismissed at once. Certainly no one could truthfully say that if the proposed amendment did not take away supervision but transferred it to another Federal official, nominated by the President and confirmed by the Senate, it is taking away protection from the Indian. The people of Oklahoma are entitled to have these matters acted upon expeditiously.

When I introduced H. R. 108, December 6, 1915—three years ago—at that time it took on an average of six to nine months to get oil leases approved by the department, and sometimes claims to be paid out of restricted moneys required from two to four years. See pages 100 to 105 of the hearings on this bill. It is true that within the past three years, due to threatened legislation, the department has expedited action upon these matters, and we do not have as long delays as were experienced in the past, but I challenge any person on earth to give any good reason why an undisputed claim should not be paid or state why an uncontested oil lease made upon a form prescribed by the Department of the Interior should not be approved by the Superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes.

A large part of the correspondence of Members of Congress from Oklahoma is with reference to these claims and oil leases. This should not be necessary. They would not be doing their duty to the Indians of Oklahoma if they failed to protest against it. Every member of the Oklahoma delegation, both in the Senate and the House, is outspokenly in favor of this legislation. While Congress should have the benefit of the views of the department, I am sure that we shall not abandon our legislative functions to the department.

Not only does every member of the entire Oklahoma delegation favor this legislation, but every citizen in Oklahoma, Indian and white, who is not under departmental influence. Long-distance government can never be satisfactory. Officials in Washington, be they ever so honest, can not decide questions as satisfactorily from typewritten reports as Federal officials in Oklahoma who, in addition to the facts stated in black type on white paper, are thoroughly familiar with the entire situation. I am not only opposed to long-distance government, but I am opposed to red tape and official camouflage. The people of my district and State may rest assured that I shall never be contented until the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes are completely wound up and the supervision of the details of the affairs of individual Indians is transferred to local Federal officials. There can not be any convincing argument against it.

By the use of business methods the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes should be completely wound up by January 1, 1919, except perhaps for the sale of the coal and asphalt lands and the settlement of certain matters in litigation in the Creek Nation. All of the remaining tribal property, including town lots, unallotted lands, surface of the segregated lands, and coal and asphalt lands, could be offered for sale this coming summer and fall.

I am going to make an exceptionally strong statement, but one that is true. The Indian Office has never, upon its own initiative, taken a single step looking to the expeditious winding up of the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes. Prior to statehood, the representatives of the several tribes importuned the department day in and day out to advertise and sell the tribal property and to distribute the money among the members entitled to the same. The last payment made to the Cherokees was $3.30 each in 1916. I challenge anyone to tell me where a step has been taken by the department to press legislation upon Congress that had the closing up of tribal affairs for its object. Since statehood the Oklahoma delegation has been most persistent in making almost daily calls upon the department to settle disputes, sell town lots, sell unallotted lands, and to make per capita payments. It is true that much has been accomplished and tribal affairs are now in a good way to be wound up, but I challenge anyone to show that this was done upon the initiative of the Indian Office. True, certain per capita payments were recommended, but it was after they were insisted upon by the members of the Oklahoma delegation. True, certain lands have been sold, but the files of the Oklahoma Members will show that they have repeatedly requested these lands to be advertised and sold. It is true that a bill has been passed providing for the sale of the coal and asphalt lands, but this bill was prepared by the delegation, introduced, and passed.

My contention is that all the details necessary to wind up the affairs of these tribes should have been assembled and concrete recommendations made to Congress. Not only has this not been done, but the printing of the very able and exhaustive report of the Superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes was discontinued three years ago, although he is the successor to both the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes and the Indian agent, whose annual reports since 1893 were printed for the information of Congress. The committees of Congress had this annual report printed for the past two years. The provision inserted in this bill requiring a report to Congress was for the purpose of having the same printed.

For 10 years there has been $2,000,000 in the Treasury to the credit of the Creek Nation, with no suggestion as to what should be done with it. I prepared an amendment, which is in the bill, to pay it out under existing law as equalization money to the enrolled members as their rights might appear. This was not originated by the department, and the point that I want to drive home is that no action has ever been initiated, so far as I know, within the last 15 years by that office for the speedy settlement of tribal affairs.

Suppose any Member of Congress were interested in an estate that took 15 years to settle, would he not be impatient with delays and demand quicker action?

Now, I want to be absolutely fair. In my judgment the delays have been occasioned by three things. First, there was no definite policy outlined for the settlement of the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes. Second, congressional legislation was enacted by piecemeal, which was not comprehensive enough, due to the fact that no well-defined policy had been thought out and agreed upon by the department. Third, it is my firm conviction that the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes could have been administered upon and wound up completely within five years if the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes had been given final and full authority under general rules and regulations of the department. The department would not allow an enrollment to be approved without its being forwarded to Washington, and would not allow the slightest thing to be done by the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes without first being forwarded to Washington for approval. At first every patent issued for each town lot and to each tract of allotted land had to be forwarded to Washington for approval.

The answer will doubtless be that legislation required this, which is true, but the legislation required it because the department insisted upon having the laws enacted in that manner.

I want to make another serious charge, and that is that every error, either of law or fact, committed to the detriment of the members of the Five Civilized Tribes has been committed by department officials here and not by Federal officials in the office at Muskogee, Okla.

I assisted in making the Cherokee rolls, and am familiar with the members enrolled thereon. I make the statement without fear of successful contradiction that every person whose name appears upon them about which there is any doubt was placed there by the officials in Washington over the objection and protest of the members of the commission at Muskogee. Every ruling that was made to the detriment of the members of the Five Civilized Tribes was made by the office here.

Let me be specific. When the legislation which afterwards became the act of April 26, 1906, was being considered in Congress, I called the attention of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], who was then a Member of Congress, on the Committee on Indian Affairs, to the necessity for additional legislation to wind up the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes, and had his active and sympathetic assistance. Prior to that time there was no legislation fixing a date when the rolls should be closed, and a provision was added to section 2 of that act requiring the rolls to be fully completed on or before March 4, 1907. Without this provision, the rolls would have remained open indefinitely. Another provision was inserted in that act which gave the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes final jurisdiction over questions of fact. Then, as now, the department raised such a protest as to induce the conferees to withdraw their conference report and take out this provision before the report was finally approved. If this provision had remained in the law many persons of doubtful right would have been left off the rolls of the Five Civilized Tribes.

I want to call attention also to the provision in section 3 of the act of April 26, 1906, placing a legislative construction upon the ninth article of the treaty of 1866, directing that only such Cherokee freedmen should be enrolled "who were actual personal bona fide residents of the Cherokee Nation August 11, 1866, or who actually returned and established such residence in the Cherokee Nation on or before February 11, 1867." The department here held, over the protest of the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes, and in the face of the plain reading of the treaty and all the constructions that had been given it by the courts, that freedmen were presumed to have constructively returned unless attorneys for the Cherokee Nation proved that they exercised rights of citizenship outside of the Cherokee Nation. Of course, this was impossible and would have resulted in almost all applications for enrollment of freedmen being granted. This ruling was held in the Charley Foreman case and in several other freedmen cases decided prior to the passage of that act, which is the reason for the exception in the above provision to the effect that it should not interfere with the enrollment of anyone "who has been adjudged entitled to enrollment by the Secretary of the Interior." Without the aid of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] in the enactment of this provision there would have been 1,500 or 2,000 additional names added to the Cherokee freedmen roll alone.

No man living, who knows the facts, can truthfully say that the officials in the department at Washington have contributed more to the protection of the Indian tribes than the Federal officials in Oklahoma. I have already stated that every person, so far as I recall, whose enrollment was doubtful, was placed upon the rolls by the officials in Washington.

I want to call attention to the famous Riley freedman case, involving the enrollment of about 300 freedmen on the Cherokee roll. At various times weeks were consumed in taking testimony. A record of more than 300 typewritten pages was made up. Those who prepared the decision for the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes saw the witnesses, heard the testimony, and were better prepared to pass upon the questions of fact. The commission held that they were not entitled to be enrolled. The case was sent to Washington. By looking at the calendar it will be found that March 4, 1907, fell on Monday. This case with a voluminous record was received in the Indian Office on Sunday, March 3, 1907, and an opinion was prepared and signed reversing the decision of the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes and directing that these people be enrolled. The decision of the Indian Office was affirmed by the Department of the Interior, as I was then advised, between 10 and 11 o'clock on the night of March 4, 1907, or an hour before the jurisdiction of the department over citizenship cases expired.

I could cite numerous cases of a like nature, as well as many rulings of the department directing the enrollment of applicants for citizenship in these tribes, all to the detriment of the tribes and all over the protests of the local Federal officials. With this knowledge of conditions I am extremely impatient with any charge that the local Federal officials can not be trusted to properly protect the rights of the individual Indian.

Another illustration: As attorney for the Cherokee Nation I contested the enrollment of 29 intermarried whites. Under an erroneous ruling of law by the department, the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes was directed to enroll them. Congress later appropriated certain per capita money for the intermarried whites adjudged entitled to the same under a decision of the Supreme Court, but added a provision giving the Cherokee Nation the right to contest the payment to anyone thought not to be entitled to it in the Court of Claims.

The Cherokee Nation won all of the 29 cases.

The attorneys representing the Choctaws and Chickasaws had the same difficulty. Rulings were made by the department in numerous cases under which a large number not entitled to citizenship would have been enrolled. An appeal was made time after time to the department for reconsideration without effect. An effort was made to have the cases referred to the Attorney General for an opinion on the law involved. This request was denied, and finally the President of the United States was appealed to in person. He directed that the matters be referred to the Attorney General, when a decision was rendered favorable to the Choctaws and Chickasaws, and a very large number were eliminated from their rolls. See volume 26 of Opinions of Attorney General, pages 127 to 165. The men representing the tribes at that time can cite hundreds of errors, both of law and fact, committed by the department. The reason is that the officials in Oklahoma came face to face with the witnesses and made a special study of the questions involved. The matters were often orally presented to them after the witnesses had been heard. They did not decide the cases upon evidence contained in cold typewritten reports. It is upon the same principle that an appellate court seldom reverses the lower court upon a question of fact. Every successful lawyer prefers to bring his witnesses to the stand, if he has a good case, rather than to present the facts through depositions. Certainly the people throughout the country would not for a moment tolerate the bringing of every probate case throughout the country to Washington for some department to take final action. No Member of Congress would stand for such a proposition a minute.

Every member of the Oklahoma delegation is against the present policy of the Indian Office. I think that I can state with certainty that every Member of Congress from States where Indians reside is to a man opposed to the present system, as they must continually take matters of this kind up with the Indian Bureau. Is it possible that every Indian in Oklahoma, all the members of the Oklahoma delegation, and all Members of Congress who have made a special study of the Indian question, are in error? The present system of the Indian Bureau is archaic and should go to the scrap heap. More businesslike methods should be inaugurated.

Again, too much money is spent on the administration of Indian affairs and not enough for the direct benefit of the Indian. This is the universal criticism in Congress of the Indian Office. Take the case of the Seminoles in Florida for an example. When visited by a special committee in March, 1917, the hearings disclosed that while $8,000 had been appropriated by Congress for the benefit of these Indians, with an agent maintained there, practically no money had been expended for the benefit of the Indians themselves.

The House Committee on Indian Affairs passed a resolution that in the future lump-sum appropriations should be discontinued, which will result in Congress exercising a closer supervision over all expenditures.

The present bill contains an appropriation of $85,000 for the payment of probate attorneys to protect the restricted members of the Five Civilized Tribes. Heretofore probate attorneys could go into unrestricted cases, but this legislation provides that they shall go into restricted cases only.

There is no more reason why a probate attorney, paid from the Federal appropriation, should go into a nonrestricted case in Oklahoma than in Kansas, Arkansas, or any other State of the Union. I am anxious to have every protection afforded the restricted Indian, whom we are under both a legal and a moral obligation to assist, and the time and attention of probate attorneys should be centered upon this class.

This probate work should be supervised by as good an attorney as can be employed, and he should be located at Muskogee. He should be acquainted with local conditions, with court procedure, and with the decisions of the State and Federal courts. He should be ready at all times to actually take charge of or assist in the trial of any case. He should be a trial lawyer and not merely an office lawyer, and should be given full authority to act at once, directing those employed under him by telephone, wire, or letter, as the necessities may require. This work should be under the Superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes, so that all the work of supervising the affairs of the individual Indians would go through one office. In addition to this work he should be the general legal adviser to the superintendent, with duties similar to those of Assistant Attorney General for the Interior Department.

An item appropriating $250,000 in aid of the common schools in eastern Oklahoma is contained in the bill. This was made necessary because a large portion of the land there is restricted and nontaxable. This appropriation has been carried for a number of years.

Another item of interest to Oklahoma is a provision making an appropriation of $15,000 for a competency commission for the Five Civilized Tribes. A commission has been at work among the members of the Five Civilized Tribes during the past year, paid from a lump-sum appropriation. It was thought best by Congress to have one commission sent to these tribes, who would make a study of their members and who would know something of their habits and customs, than to have a floating commission going from tribe to tribe, whose personnel is frequently changed. When I was at home last fall, two of these commissions came to my home town of Tahlequah, Okla., at the same time, each claiming to be the one authorized to remain, and neither knew that the other commission was there until it arrived. Then they began to bombard the Indian Office for instructions. Such confusion is inexcusable and expensive to the Government. It is an injustice to the members of the tribes, because members of the commissions so frequently changed can not give such close study and attention to the members of the tribes, their habits and customs, as will enable them to render intelligent and satisfactory service. The work of a fixed commission would be much more satisfactory.

The present competency commission to Oklahoma has removed the restrictions from 1,324 members of the Five Civilized Tribes, as follows:

Cherokee	529
Choctaw	492
Chickasaw	302
Creek	1

In addition to this legislation, to which attention has been invited, that has been enacted during the past three years and that contained in the present Indian appropriation bill, attention is called to a bill pending in Congress, favorably reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs, providing for a quicker determination of the heirs of deceased restricted Indians, and also giving jurisdiction to the district courts in partition proceedings of lands belonging to full-blood heirs of deceased allottees.

There were on March 25, 1918, the following amounts on deposit in the Treasury of the United States and in banks to the credit of the Five Civilized Tribes:

Cherokee	$74,016.70
Choctaw	3,611,830.22
Chickasaw	1,233,725.19
Creek	2,093,252.89
Seminole	574,407.38

As before stated, the affairs of the Cherokee Tribe have been completely wound up. There is some litigation in the courts with reference to certain town lots in the Creek Nation, and also some suits which have for their purpose the cancellation of several patents alleged to have been issued to duplicate or mythical Creek allottees. The Creek capitol building and grounds at Okmulgee remain unsold, and there are some school properties yet belonging to the tribe. These suits must be settled and the town lots recovered and other tribal property sold before the affairs of the Creek Tribe can be finally wound up, but it will be seen that all this work depends upon the outcome of the pending litigation and can not be expedited by legislation. The affairs of the Seminole Nation are about wound up. This tribe has two boarding schools, one in operation and the other in litigation because a part of the property extends across a surveyed line upon some allotted land. When this dispute pending in the courts is settled, the school properties can be disposed of, and the affairs of this tribe will be wound up. Congress can do nothing further at the present time with reference to the Seminoles.

As before stated, $15,631,400 has been paid out and authorized to be paid out per capita to the Chickasaws and Choctaws within the past three years. Nearly all of their unallotted lands have been sold, and there remain but a little timbered land and about 200 tracts of the surface of the segregated mineral lands to be sold. Congress recently passed an act providing for the sale of the coal lands aggregating 445,000 acres. All of this tribal property, including unallotted lands, the surface of the segregated coal lands, the timberlands, and the school lands, is expected to be put up for sale in September or October, 1918.

It will be seen, therefore, that the winding up of the affairs of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes is administrative, and that Congress has enacted all the legislation necessary to wind up these matters.

Under the act of April 26, 1906, supervision is to be retained of restricted Indians for 25 years. This period will expire in 1931, or 13 years from now. Supervision will doubtless be retained over certain members whose restrictions have not been removed by legislation or by the action of the competency commission or the department until that time.

The Indian question is one of very great interest. We can not afford to make a mistake in its solution. My views are well known throughout Oklahoma. In the event an Indian is competent, he should be turned loose from any supervision by the Government. A very large number of Indians in Oklahoma are competent. Most of the restricted Indians are farmers or stock raisers. During the next few years the efforts of the Federal officials should be centered upon this class in an effort to make them useful, productive citizens of the State and Nation. My criticism of the department's policy is that too much attention has been given to the conservation of their property rather than the development of the individual Indian. The ownership of large tracts of unproductive land is not specially desirable and is of but little benefit to the Indian. Of course I would have his property rights protected, but not at the expense of the development of the Indian.

Every parent watches with solicitous care each step in the development of his child, and is far more concerned about his becoming a strong, healthy, intelligent, honest, industrious, and useful citizen than he is in his accumulation of wealth. He encourages him as early as possible "to stand alone," to depend upon himself, and to initiate things himself, and gradually extends the latitude given him with the ultimate purpose of freeing him from all supervision.

The same policy should be pursued toward the Indian, who should not be treated as if he were always to remain a child. You can not develop and inspire self-confidence in an Indian by keeping him surrounded with Federal agents who constantly remind him of his inability to manage his own affairs and who discourage his exercising his own initiative.

No person, Indian or white, would advance, grow strong, and become self-supporting under like conditions, when lack of self-confidence is absolutely fatal to advancement.

Some of the members of the Five Civilized Tribes own very large tracts of land. Their allotments of land are not all contiguous, but oftentimes in separate tracts and in different counties, and many do not have sufficient money to improve their land, place it in cultivation, make it productive, or buy sufficient live stock to cultivate it. The result is that they do not get the experience which comes from cultivating the soil nor the value of the crops produced on it. I believe it would be best for the Indian, where he has large tracts of land, to permit certain parts to be sold and the proceeds used to assist him, under governmental supervision, to build a house upon his farm and place the same in cultivation. The Indian should be taught to make the improvements, how to place the land in cultivation, and to actually cultivate the land, planting it in such crops as are adapted to his particular soil and locality. You will see, therefore, that the Indian question in Oklahoma from now on is an individual question. It will be a hopeless task if all these little details must be directed by heads of bureaus in Washington. Instead of using a large part of the $185,000 appropriated for the Superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes in the payment of stenographers and bookkeepers, I would employ three times as many expert farmers as are now employed and send them out among the restricted members of these tribes to teach them that it is honorable to work and to encourage them to build houses and barns, to make gardens, to raise chickens, hogs, cattle, and horses, and to become useful and productive citizens of their State and Nation. With the young Indians attending the public schools and boarding schools maintained in Oklahoma and elsewhere taught along industrial lines, and with the number of expert farmers greatly increased to help the older members of the several tribes, and with our efforts all concentrated toward helping the restricted members of the tribe, the Indians living in 1931, when their restrictions are removed by existing law, should be able in every respect to protect themselves and to take care of their property interests. These Indians should not be legislated for by Congress or their affairs administered upon by the department as reservation or blanket Indians. They are intelligent, progressive, and patriotic. They have enthusiastically supported the Government and are true to the flag. Along with the other citizens of my State and without distinction they have joined the Army and are fighting in defense of our common country and for the freedom of mankind. They have generously supported the Red Cross, bought war-savings stamps, and have invested millions in liberty bonds, and are ready to make every other sacrifice necessary to their Nation's success. Whether it be at home or on the battle front on the blood-soaked, historic soil of France, they will make such a record as to merit fair treatment by the department and the earnest consideration of Congress. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has used 25 minutes. The gentleman from Kansas privately instructed the Chair to yield the remainder of his time to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD].

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, pending that I would like to ask the gentleman from Oklahoma if he does not think we might put this over now.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. If the gentleman means by that to pass the bill, I would like to dispose of it and put it through.

Mr. CRAMTON. It is getting pretty late, and it will take some little time yet.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, you know——

Mr. CRAMTON. I do not like to make the point of no quorum, but I feel that I should be compelled to do so.

Mr. VENABLE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to get a few minutes, if the gentleman will withhold his point.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, this bill passed the House, as I recall, on January 9—the first appropriation bill to pass—and I certainly would like to dispose of it.

Mr. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I will.

Mr. NORTON. There are a number of gentlemen on this side, three or four at least, who desire to discuss certain portions of the bill at length, and I doubt very much, from what they say, if we will have time, unless we run very late this evening, to finish the bill. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] desires to discuss certain features of the conference report. I think, though, we can finish this to-morrow.

Mr. GARNER. Oh, we could finish on Saturday in case we could not get through to-morrow probably.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman from Texas realizes the time is virtually in control of the gentleman from Oklahoma and that he can move the previous question at any time, but he does not wish to cut off legitimate debate. There are certain gentlemen on this side who desire to discuss the conference report in a bona fide way.

Mr. GARNER. Is there any real opposition to the adoption of this conference report?

Mr. STAFFORD. There is some opposition to the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. GARNER. I have not heard any speeches since we have had it under consideration in opposition to the conference report.

Mr. CRAMTON. That is just a reason why there ought to be a few. We just had a very able speech in support of it.

Mr. GOOD. I desire to say to the gentleman, if he had discovered $75,000 in this conference report that was appropriated for so-called Indians who have not been wards of the Government since 1832 and that money in this time of stress was to be kept out of the Treasury, would not the gentleman be in favor of taking a little time——

Mr. GARNER. I do not know anything about the conference report or its provisions because I do not keep up with the Indian appropriation bill. The question is now as to general debate on various topics. The gentleman from Iowa realizes, I think, and I realize that this conference report is going to be adopted. If the gentleman thinks he has a chance to defeat it I am perfectly willing——

Mr. GOOD. I do not know whether there is a chance to defeat it or not, but I think there are some things in the conference report that ought to be explained, so when Members vote they will know exactly what is contained in the conference report.

Mr. CRAMTON. I will say to the gentleman from Texas, if I can have his attention, that so far as I know there has not been what you might call general debate; that is, debate not germane to the report, and there will not be.

I will have to make the point of no quorum if we can not get an agreement. I hope I will not have to make the point, but that we can get together on it.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I do not believe the gentleman would do it, but his bluff is working pretty well.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman from Oklahoma yield to me?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. In just a moment I will yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. Speaker, we have had nearly a couple of hours' debate on this already, and I think we ought to insist on not more than 30 or 40 minutes' debate to-morrow, at the outside. The business of the House demands that we dispose of this conference report, and would the gentleman be willing to agree to, say, 40 minutes of debate?

Mr. CRAMTON. I want to ask if the gentleman knows that such an agreement would give me 10 minutes? I would really like 15.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I believe the gentlman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] has 40 minutes remaining.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has 35 minutes.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. VENABLE] desires to be heard for some little time, and I would like to know if he can be taken care of out of that 35 minutes?

However, I make this unanimous-consent request, that there be one hour more of debate, all told, on this bill; 35 minutes to go to the gentleman on that side of the House and 25 minutes to this side on to-morrow.

Mr. GARNER. At the end of that time the previous question to be considered as ordered?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The previous question to be considered as ordered.

Mr. NORTON. That will be satisfactory.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] asks unanimous consent that there be one hour further debate on the conference report, he to control 25 minutes and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] to control 35 minutes, and at the expiration of the hour the previous question to be considered as ordered on the conference report. Is there objection?

Mr. CRAMTON. Can the gentleman give any idea as to whether there are 10 minutes in that for me?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

CORPL. SPUD MURPHY.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may be allowed to address the House for five minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I was very much interested to read from the Washington Evening Star a few moments ago the following cablegram from the American Army at the French front, and it gives me satisfaction to read the same for the information of my colleagues:

REMARKABLE NERVE OF WOUNDED MAN—CORPL. SPUD MURPHY KEEPS UP SPIRIT THOUGH DESPERATELY INJURED—TYPICAL UNITED STATES FIGHTER.

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY AT THE FRENCH FRONT, May 15.

Corpl. Spud Murphy, of Fall River, Mass., upon seeing half a dozen forms stealing through the darkness toward his listening post, gave warning to his two companions. Stealthily they crept forward until they had gone 30 yards, when they opened fire on a German raiding party, which scattered immediately. Suddenly a grenade came hurling through the air from an unexpected direction and knocked Corpl. Murphy unconscious.

Fortunately it was dark or the man would have lain bleeding through the day. The section west of Montdidier is too active to expose soldiers to almost certain death by removing wounded in the daylight. Consequently Corpl. Murphy arrived, still unconscious, at a field hospital several miles behind the lines a few hours later. His eyes, head, and face, except the tip of his nose and his mouth, were swathed in bandages. And there were more yards of bandages around his chest and ribs.

ONE EYE GONE, LUNG PUNCTURED.

The tag said that his left eye was gone; that a fragment of the grenade as large as a thumb was in the back of his neck; that his lung was punctured, and that air was escaping through his chest.

Life still existed inside the mangled body, though it was faintly flickering.

"Put him into bed," said the receiving surgeon. "Apply hot-water bottles. We dare not operate now, but we may save him."

Several hours later the major commanding the hospital entered the ward and was surprised to hear the voice of the corporal, who had recovered consciousness. The corporal knew that he was in bed and that there were other soldiers around him and he was puzzled. The major listened and discovered that the voice coming from the bandaged head was saying, "What is your name, Buddy? I'm Spud Murphy. Didn't I know you in the Philippines?"

The same question was put to each wounded comrade near by.

"How are you feeling, Corporal?" asked the major, approaching the bed.

FELT "FINE AND DANDY."

"Fine and dandy," replied Spud. "Have you a cigarette?"

"Better get a few hours' sleep now," said the major.

The next morning the corporal was operated upon. Pieces of iron were taken from his body, the blood was pumped out of his lungs, and the hole in his chest was patched up. When the patient recovered from the effects of the ether, an orderly put a cigarette in his mouth. The corporal stretched on his bed, watched the smoke through one blackened eye, and said: "This is the life, ain't it, Buddy?"

Though the operation took place only a few days ago, the surgeons declare that the man is in a fair way to recover. He is always cheerful, and "fine and dandy" is always his reply when asked how he feels.

"I know that my soldiering days are over, but I got some Boches before I stopped fighting," he says.

FACE KNIFE WITHOUT WHIMPER.

Not all the wounded have the same cheery nerve as Spud Murphy, but he is typical. Most of them face the knife without a whimper, and show calm and fortitude while slowly recovering in the hospitals. This hospital is nearest the fighting front, and is most quickly reached. It handles only the most critical cases which can not be taken farther back to other hospitals.

Four women nurses and the members of two operating teams are ready to work at a moment's notice at any time during the day. The Misses Ida M. H. Ferguson and Bertha Cornwall, of the Harlem Hospital, and the Misses Agnes Kennedy and Laura C. Boecke, of the Harper Hospital, Detroit, Mich., have probably the distinction of being closer to the enemy lines than any other woman nurses.

[Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, "Spud" Murphy is unknown to me by that euphonious title, but he is a citizen of the city of Fall River, Mass., where I reside, and it is a pleasure to me to have his heroic deeds recorded at this time, in order that future generations may realize the sacrifices which he and the men of to-day are willing to make in order that the institutions which our fathers created and established may be preserved and perpetuated for the benefit of the countless millions now living and the vast population that will inherit the rights and privileges which our work here and the greater work and the greater sacrifices which the allied nations made during the early days of this terrible war; and our own boys are now joining with them in order that we may with our united strength and power and by force of arms destroy the attempts of the German autocracy to rule the world.

"Spud" Murphy is the prototype of millions of young men who have left their homes and native land ready to sacrifice their lives in unselfish devotion to the cause which this great war represents.

Their example and their sacrifice should inspire in our hearts and minds a stronger determination to let nothing stand in the way of our "winning the war."

In the Civil War the city of Fall River, Mass., was not lacking in patriotism, and it readily furnished its quota of men and financial aid in that momentous struggle.

In the Spanish War its soldiers and sailors were among the earliest to respond to the call of duty.

I recall the heroic act of one young man named John J. Doran, who was one of our naval brigade, a machinist by trade, who was one of the volunteers when those of the brigade who were willing were called upon to perform the perilous duty of cutting the cable at Cienfuegos, Cuba. Several volunteers attempted the dangerous feat, and their lives paid the forfeit. Young Doran's opportunity came. Undeterred, he took up the task, and successfully he performed it. He destroyed the cable and thereby inflicted upon the enemy the injury which the commanding officer desired. But, alas, after he had completed the work assigned to him, his life paid the forfeit.

His memory is enshrined in the hearts of his fellow men, and the John J. Doran Camp of Spanish War Veterans is one of the permanent organizations of the city of Fall River, Mass.

That city has exceeded its quota of volunteers and drafted men in response to every call of the Nation in the present struggle.

It has exceeded its quota in subscriptions to every liberty loan, standing among the highest in the third liberty loan. It has contributed to the Red Cross, the Knights of Columbus, the Salvation Army, the Masonic, and all other organizations which are unitedly pushing this war to a successful finish.

While the city of Fall River, Mass., has done all of the things I have enumerated in the present war, her courage is still undaunted, and she has a force of fighting men who will respond to any further call, to the end that victory may crown our efforts and all our enemies may be overthrown.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

COURT IN THE WESTERN DISTRICT OF VIRGINIA.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a unanimous-consent request for a minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I wish to ask the House to give me a minute in which to pass a bill. This bill affects a part of the State of Virginia in which there are five Representatives, Mr. SLEMP, Mr. HARRISON, Mr. FLOOD, Mr. GLASS, and myself. It is unanimously reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, and makes certain changes in the public interests, in the arrangement of the terms of the courts for the western district of Virginia. It can be passed in a minute, if the House will give me that minute.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. There is one change in the bill, that provides for a deputy clerk at some county seat that does not have one now?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I am glad the gentleman referred to that provision. The amendment providing the arrangement referred to is reported by the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Unanimous Consent Calendar, for the purposes of consideration and passage, the bill H. R. 9864.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the title, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9864) to amend section 3 of the Judicial Code in respect to the western district of Virginia.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the bill except by title. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I think the bill should be read.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I simply wanted to save the time of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands there is no objection to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. I reserve the right to object until the bill is read, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read is follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3, Judicial Code, in so far as said section relates to the western district of Virginia, be so amended as to read as follows:

"The western district shall include the territory embraced on the 1st day of July, 1910, in the counties of Alleghany, Albemarle, Amherst, Appomattox, Augusta, Bath, Bedford, Bland, Botetourt, Buchanan, Buckingham, Campbell, Carroll, Charlotte, Clarke, Craig, Cumberland, Dickenson, Floyd, Fluvanna, Franklin, Frederick, Giles, Grayson, Greene, Halifax, Henry, Highland, Lee, Madison, Montgomery, Nelson, Page, Patrick, Pulaski, Pittsylvania, Rappahannock, Roanoke, Rockbridge, Rockingham, Russell, Scott, Shenandoah, Smyth, Tazewell, Warren, Washington, Wise, and Wythe. Terms of the district court shall be held at Lynchburg on the second Mondays of January and July, at Roanoke on the second Mondays of February and the first Mondays of August, at Danville on the second Mondays of March and the third Mondays of September, at Charlottesville on the second Mondays of April and November, at Harrisonburg on the fourth Mondays of April and November, at Big Stone Gap on the third Mondays of May and the second Mondays of October, at Abingdon on the second Mondays of June and the third Mondays of December. The clerk of the court for the western district shall maintain an office in charge of himself or a deputy at Lynchburg, Roanoke, Danville, Charlottesville, Harrisonburg, Big Stone Gap, and Abingdon, which shall be kept open at all times for the transaction of the business of the court."

SEC. 2. That this act shall become effective on July 1, 1918.

With committee amendments, as follows:

Page 1, line 3, strike out the word "three" and insert the words "one hundred and eleven."

Page 2, lines 14 and 15, strike out the words "the third Mondays of."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I inquire of the gentleman who presents the bill for consideration whether there is any objection to this rearrangement in Virginia on the part of any judicial officers?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I will say that all of the Members of Congress in that district favor this measure. The district attorney wants it, the judge for that district wants it. In addition the bill has a unanimous report from the Judiciary Committee. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], a member of that committee, is present, and can verify what I say as to the action of his committee.

The fundamental reason for my request that I be allowed to bring up this bill at this time is that it should be enacted into law before the 1st of June, in order that certain readjustments may be made in the judicial district. The bill, if allowed to be taken up, can be passed in a minute. Everybody interested favors its passage.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman states that it must be passed before the 1st of June in order to provide for readjustments. That is a special reason why we should take it up out of order and make an exception to the practice of considering bills under the usual rules by unanimous consent?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. That is a fact, and I would not ask for present action but for that fact. If the bill is not passed before June 1, or some early day in June, then the date at which it will be operative will have to be fixed at August 1 or September 1.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I do not understand exactly what this provides.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. This is a bill to rearrange the terms of court for the western district of Virginia. It does not affect anyone, so far as this House is concerned, save the five Members from that district, Mr. SLEMP, Mr. GLASS, Mr. HARRISON, Mr. FLOOD, and myself.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is the Republican Member, Mr. SLEMP, satisfied with the provisions of the bill?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does it contemplate any increase in appointments, either judicial or clerical?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. No. There is a provision for a clerk's office to be left open at a place of session of the court. This provision was inadvertently heretofore omitted some time ago.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It is a matter of convenience to the litigants in this district?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes; and is asked for by the district attorney and by the judge.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And it does not involve any new offices?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. No. This bill was unanimously reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, as heretofore stated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the committee amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 3, strike out the word "three" and insert the words "one hundred and eleven."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, lines 14 and 15, strike out the words "the third Mondays of."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I am very much obliged to my friends in the House. [Applause.]

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, May 17, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, May 17, 1918.

Rev. J. L. Kibler, of the city of Washington, offered the following prayer:

O God, we desire to come into Thy presence with clean hearts and right spirits, for Thou seekest only such to worship Thee, and we can not deceive Thee, nor can we evade Thy laws. Thou understandest our thoughts afar off and from Thee no secrets are hid. Give us therefore sincere and honest hearts that we may honor our true relation to Thee, and that we may seek to do Thy will at all times. Thus shall we acknowledge Thy claims upon us and accomplish Thy purposes in our lives, whether in times of peace or war. We ask it all for Christ's sake. Amen.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. LEWIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

LAND IN POTOMAC PARK.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 7th instant, a report as to the withdrawal of land in Potomac Park formerly used by Boy Scouts for farm purposes for the laying out of the same in golf links.

Mr. CALDER. That communication is in response to a resolution submitted by me a few days ago, and I ask that it lie on the table and be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The communication is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, May 16, 1918.

To the PRESIDENT UNITED STATES SENATE.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of resolution under date of May 7, 1918, whereby I am requested to inform the Senate what part, if any, of the land in east Potomac Park, which last year was cultivated by the Boy Scouts, is now withdrawn from cultivation to be laid out in golf links, and why the ground east of the railroad track in said park, which is now being made into golf links, should not be allotted for cultivation and production of food and crops during the period of the war.

I have caused an investigation to be made and find that the improvements that are being made and that are proposed to be made are in accordance with plans appropriated for by Congress.

The sundry civil act of June 12, 1917, carried appropriations as follows:

For care and maintenance of Potomac Park, $15,000; for grading, soiling, seeding, and planting that portion of Potomac Park west of the railroad embankment and constructing paths, $25,000; for oiling or otherwise treating macadam roads, $4,000; for care and improvement of the portion of Potomac Park east of the railroad embankment, $50,000.

Of course this act was passed after war was declared, and must therefore be considered as an indication of the desires of Congress in regard to Potomac Park. However, I believe that, due to rush of business and the fact that the sundry civil bill contains so many other items, that it would be unsafe to say that it was the intention of Congress to expend the money authorized no matter what might be the conditions. I therefore consider it within my jurisdiction and also as my duty to discontinue for the present the construction of the golf course upon the grounds of Potomac Park, inasmuch as recreation facilities are offered in many other directions in the city of Washington, and the example afforded by making use of this ground for agricultural purposes would be most excellent.

I have accordingly given orders that the construction of the golf course shall be discontinued, and that the commander of the Boy Scouts be informed that the entire area referred to in the resolution is placed at his disposal.

Respectfully,

NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War.

TAPPING OF TELEGRAPH AND TELEPHONE LINES (S. DOC. NO. 227).

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. KELLOGG. I present a petition from Stereotypers' Union No. 103, of St. Paul, Minn., which I ask may be printed in the RECORD without the signatures.

There being no objection, the petition was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BLINDING THE PEOPLE'S MIND.

Congress at its last session passed a hasty postal law increasing the postage rates on periodicals from 50 to 900 per cent through a "zone" system.

The unfair "zone" system was abolished by President Lincoln in 1863 because of its unjust discriminations.

Some periodicals will be killed—all will be restricted in circulation and crippled. There will be fewer readers, and the habit of reading curtailed. The great function of periodicals is to assist in the spread of ideas by printing the achievements in the world of thought, culture, and science.

Thus to shut out farm journals, as these zone rates will, will lessen the productive power of our country by millions of dollars through loss of better methods. Shut off trade journals, and you decrease the manufacturing power by more millions. Shut off the religious papers, and there are shut off channels that have raised millions of dollars for distressed humanity. Shut off the great periodicals of the home, and there is throttled an avenue that has given expert instruction to hundreds of thousands of mothers and saved their babies to health and citizenship.

Shut off the labor press, and labor's voice is stifled—the orderly betterment of economic conditions will stop.

These national periodicals are printed in the big cities, and the first zone, the cheapest zone, is in or near those cities; there are many educational opportunities near cities, and the cities will read anyway. Small towns and distant districts depend, to a large extent, upon periodicals; thus this law increasing periodical postage shuts off opportunity where it is most needed. It penalizes periodical readers.

Repeal this law. Repeal this 50 to 900 per cent periodical postage increase. Sign the petition below and mail it. Write to Congressmen from your State. Get others to write, if it is only a few lines of protest on a post card. Save the magazines and the work they have done and are doing for national education, patriotism, and progress.

Paste a sheet of paper below and get signers. When about 20 signatures are secured, please send to Charles Johnson Post, 200 Fifth Avenue, New York City, where additional copies of this petition can be had upon request.

PETITION TO CONGRESS.

The spread of education, of culture, of scientific knowledge and advancement, and of our vast internal merchandising and manufacturing has been, and always is, vitally dependent upon the freest and cheapest circulation of periodicals. The penalties resulting from any restriction of the freest possible circulation of periodicals will be destructive to the best interests of our economic life and the opportunities of developing our best citizenship.

The postal amendment passed by the last Congress increasing the postage on periodicals from 50 to 900 per cent will destroy our periodicals at a time when the widest and most extensive circulation of publications is essential to the patriotism, education, and upbuilding of our country.

Therefore, we, the undersigned, do most earnestly demand the repeal of this burdensome periodical postage amendment.

ST. PAUL STEREOTYPERS' UNION, No. 103.
FRANK MITSCH, President.
FRED MUMANE, Secretary.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I present a petition of the Berkeley Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of California, praying for legislation to prohibit the use of foodstuffs in the manufacture of vinous or malt liquors during the war, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD. It is very brief.

There being no objection, the petition was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the Senate of the United States:

We, the Berkeley Woman's Christian Temperance Union, citizens of Alameda County, Cal., believing that the women of the United States are loyally doing their utmost in our national crisis for the conservation of food; and

Realizing that there is still an alarming waste of foodstuffs in the production of vinous and malt liquors,

We most earnestly petition your honorable body to pass a bill to prohibit the further waste of these foodstuffs in the production of vinous and malt liquors during the period of the war and to release the grain and sugar now in the hands of the brewers.

The above was indorsed by vote at a meeting of the Berkeley Woman's Christian Temperance Union held on the 17th day of April, A. D. 1918, and the undersigned was authorized to so attest.

Mrs. C. W. JOHNSON,
President.
Mrs. MELVA S. GREEN,
Recording Secretary.

Number of members, 80.

Mr. NELSON presented petitions of the congregations of the Methodist Episcopal Church of North Mankato, the Swedish Lutheran Church of Eagle Lake, the First Baptist Church of Mankato, and of the Congregational and Christian Churches of Mankato; of sundry citizens of Lewiston, Good Thunder, Kasson, and Howard Lake, all in the State of Minnesota, praying for national prohibition as a war measure, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Stereotypers' Union No. 103, of St. Paul, Minn., praying for the repeal of the present zone system of postage rates on second-class mail matter, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of Muller Crook Post, No. 1, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Minnesota, of Stillwater, Minn., praying for an increase in the pensions of veterans of the Civil War, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. TOWNSEND presented resolutions adopted by the Employers' Association of Detroit, Mich., favoring legislation to provide for the drafting of men between the ages of 18 and 50 years, etc., which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PHELAN presented resolutions adopted by the Board of Trustees of Venice, Cal., refuting charges made against that city by the Board of Supervisors of Los Angeles County, relative to slackers, etc., which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

AIRCRAFT PRODUCTION.

Mr. THOMPSON. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, on the part of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES] and myself, I present a minority report upon Senate resolution 241. I desire to file this report, of which I gave notice yesterday, and I ask that the report be printed in the RECORD together with the resolution and the amendments proposed by the majority of the committee and their report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask the Senator from Kansas if the minority report has been printed so that Members of the Senate can obtain copies.

Mr. THOMPSON. The report has been printed and is on the desks of Senators.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator really want us to have the resolution printed again in the RECORD as it was introduced and as proposed to be amended? It was printed in the RECORD yesterday in full in both ways.

Mr. THOMPSON. I thought it was only fair to have it all printed together.

Mr. SMOOT. It is only a duplication of printing that I was thinking of, but if the Senator desires he can have it that way.

Mr. THOMPSON. I wish to have all the matter pertaining to the resolution printed together.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not object if the Senator wants to have it done, but it is only a duplication of printing.

Mr. THOMPSON. I ask that both the report of the minority and of the majority be printed.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to ask the Senator from Kansas if it would not be wise to have the resolution as introduced and the resolution as proposed to be amended and the majority report and the minority report printed together?

Mr. THOMPSON. I have just made that request.

Mr. KENYON. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. THOMPSON. The request has been granted.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will state that the majority report was a favorable report without going into the facts at all.

Mr. SMOOT. The resolution speaks for itself.

The resolution as introduced, as proposed to be amended by the committee, the report of the majority of the committee, and the views of the minority, are as follows:

Senate resolution 241, as introduced.

"Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to inquire into and report to the Senate the progress of aircraft production in the United States, or into any other matters relating to the conduct of the war, by or through the War Department; that said committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or during any recess of the Senate; to require by subpœna, or otherwise, the attendance of witnesses and the production of books, documents, and papers; to take the testimony of witnesses under oath, either orally or by deposition; to obtain documents, papers, and other information from the several departments of the Government, or any bureau thereof; to employ stenographic help, at a cost not to exceed $1 per printed page, to report such testimony as may be taken; to employ such agents or assistants as may be necessary; and that all expenses, including traveling expenses, contracted hereunder shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate."

Senate resolution 241, as reported.

"Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs, or any subcommittee thereof be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to inquire into and report to the Senate the progress of aircraft and ordnance production in the United States, or into the status of quartermaster's supplies or expenditures in any of these branches of the War Department; that said committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or during any recess of the Senate; to require by subpœna, or otherwise, the attendance of witnesses and the production of books, documents, and papers; to take the testimony of witnesses under oath, either orally or by deposition; to obtain documents, papers, and other information from the several departments of the Government, or any bureau thereof; to employ stenographic help, at a cost not to exceed $1 per printed page, to report such testimony as may be taken; to employ such agents or assistants as may be necessary; and that all expenses, including traveling expenses, contracted hereunder shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate not exceeding the sum of $10,000: Provided, That nothing in this resolution shall be held to authorize the Military Affairs Committee to take over, or in any manner direct or superintend, the executive branch of the Government in the conduct of the war."

"The Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate report S. Res. 241 favorably with the following amendments:

"1. After the word 'aircraft' in line 4, page 1, insert the words 'and ordnance.'

"2. Strike out all of line 5, page 1, and the first word of line 6, and insert the following: 'the status of quartermasters' supplies or expenditures in any of these branches of.'

"3. Strike out the period in line 9, page 2, and insert a semicolon and add 'not exceeding the sum of $10,000.'

"4. After the foregoing add the following: 'Provided, That nothing in this resolution shall be held to authorize the Military Affairs Committee to take over, or in any manner direct or superintend the executive branch of the Government in the conduct of the war.'"

VIEWS OF THE MINORITY.

"Your Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate has had under consideration Senate resolution 241, submitted by the Senator from Oregon, authorizing and directing the Committee on Military Affairs to inquire into and report to the Senate the progress of aircraft production in the United States, or into any other matters relating to the conduct of the war, by or through the War Department, and a majority of the committee, consisting of Senators McKELLAR, SMOOT, and FRANCE, has favorably recommended the same, with certain amendments which have been reported to the Senate. A minority of the committee, consisting of Senators THOMPSON and JONES, are unwilling to join in the report submitted by the majority, and are opposed to the passage of the resolution as amended, as it is little better than the original resolution, and is a mere 'dragnet' proposition, as wholesale inquiries into various branches of the Government are directed whether there is any necessity therefor or not.

"The resolution, as introduced by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] contained very extraordinary provisions which apparently were objectionable to all the members of the committee; certainly to the minority. In these circumstances it is not necessary to discuss at length in this report the many objections which could be stated to the original resolution.

"Briefly stated, the resolution as proposed to be amended by the majority confers no authority upon the Committee on Military Affairs which it does not now possess other than 'the authority to employ such agents or assistants as may be necessary' and to incur expenses, including 'traveling expenses,' to the amount of $10,000, except that it does direct that the various investigations be made whether there is any cause therefor or not. In April of last year the Senate passed Senate resolution 48, which is as follows:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs, or any subcommittee thereof, be authorized during the Sixty-fifth Congress to send for persons and papers and to administer oaths and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not to exceed $1 per printed page, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be pending before said committee; that the committee may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate; and that expenses contracted hereunder shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

"The undersigned minority are not averse to the full exercise of the authority conferred upon the Committee on Military Affairs by the above resolution to investigate the situation with respect to the aircraft, ordnance, appropriations, or any other branch of the War Department, as it may desire. We are favorable to a most thorough and complete inquiry into the aircraft situation, but call attention to the fact that the Department of Justice, which is equipped with every facility, is now most actively engaged in that work, and that the Hon. Charles E. Hughes has just been appointed by the President to assist, which ought to quiet any apprehension that for any reason a full and complete investigation might not be made, even though the Committee on Military Affairs should not continue its efforts in that behalf.

"Under this authority conferred more than a year ago, the Committee on Military Affairs has been conducting investigations covering practically all the activities of the War Department. On April 10, 1918, it submitted to the Senate a majority and a minority report upon the aircraft question. (See Report 380, pts. 1 and 2.)

"Senate resolution 48 has not been rescinded, and the committee retains authority to continue its investigations not only into the aircraft situation, but the Ordnance Department and all other departments of the Government, as well as all expenditures of appropriations.

"In the view of the minority no good reason appears why any additional powers should be granted. No showing or evidence of any character was presented to your committee indicating that the employment of agents or assistants or the incurring of traveling expenses is necessary, although the author of the resolution was given full opportunity to make such showing if he desired to do so. Any necessity for the employment of agents or assistants by the Committee on Military Affairs can only rest upon mere assumption. We know from the records of the Senate that the Committee on Military Affairs has already four assistants and clerks; and Senate resolution 48 gives to the committee full authority to employ additional stenographers without limit as to number, and no request for extra help has been made by the committee. So far as we are advised, the Committee on Military Affairs has taken no action whatever with respect to resolution 241 or with respect to the obtaining of additional assistants. No showing has been made to your committee which would furnish a reason for the incurring of traveling expenses. Provisions in a resolution authorizing a committee of the Senate to employ assistants and incur traveling expenses are unusual and extraordinary, and, in the opinion of the minority, should not be granted, except upon a substantial showing of the necessity therefor.

"The majority of your committee proposes to limit the expenditures of the contingent fund to the sum of $10,000 for the purpose of employing such agents and assistants, and for traveling expenses.

"The moneys in the contingent fund of the Senate, now available for such purposes, and for the purpose of defraying the expenses of the various hearings and investigations now being conducted by all the committees of the Senate, does not exceed the sum of $10,000. Twenty-five committees of the Senate are now authorized to hold hearings and employ stenographers, and a number of such hearings are now in progress. Those now being conducted will probably consume the entire fund available for this purpose, and if the resolution as proposed to be amended should be adopted there would be specific authority for the expenditure of all the available funds, thereby depriving all other committees of the opportunity to continue their hearings. There are very few precedents in resolutions of this character for including traveling expenses, which means in this case that the committee, attorneys, agents, clerks, stenographers, and other assistants and employees may travel to any place in the United States as well as to the war front in Europe if the committee deems advisable.

"It must be noted that the resolution with the proposed amendments not only gives authority, but directs the Committee on Military Affairs to 'inquire into and report to the Senate the progress of aircraft and ordnance production in the United States, or into the status of quartermaster's supplies, or to expenditures in any branch of the War Department.' If attorneys, experts, and agents be employed and undertake the performance of the duties directed by this resolution, in the opinion of the minority the sum of $10,000 will be only a mere advance allowance and that large additional sums will necessarily be called for.

"It is evident that the numerous investigations specified will cause great annoyance and interference with the necessary war work now going on in the most important branches of the War Department. For the department to attempt to answer the requirements which may be made upon it under the terms of this resolution, much of the time of its officers and employees would be required, and the department would be prevented from devoting the time and energy necessary to the performance of essential work in the actual prosecution of the war, so vital to the country at this time.

"Wherefore we, the undersigned, a minority of your committee, respectfully recommend that the resolution do not pass.

"WM. H. THOMPSON,
"ANDRIEUS A. JONES,
"Of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate."

NATIONAL HOME FOR DISABLED VOLUNTEER SOLDIERS.

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 139) for the appointment of three members of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report (No. 445) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. SMOOT:

A bill (S. 4551) for the relief of Ira W. Hatch; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. LEWIS:

A bill (S. 4552) granting an increase of pension to Homer E. Lewis; and

A bill (S. 4553) granting an increase of pension to John Albaugh; to the Committee on Pensions.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. STERLING submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. CALDER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

ISSUANCE OF BONDS BY SEWARD, ALASKA.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I move to reconsider the vote whereby the bill (S. 4021) to authorize the incorporated town of Seward, Alaska, to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $25,000 for the purpose of constructing dikes, flumes, and other works to confine the waters of Lowell Creek for the protection of said town, was read the third time and passed on yesterday when the calendar was under consideration. The bill is identical with a bill which had already passed both Houses and was signed by the President on May 1.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I move that the bill be postponed indefinitely.

The motion was agreed to.

STATE VOLUNTEERS.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, on May 13, in the course of a discussion on the question of the allowance of credits for volunteers in the several States, it developed that the bill was in the hands of the President, and the only appeal, apart from a repeal of the law, was to him.

There seems to be a grave doubt about the fairness of the legislation, because, I believe, a State should be allowed deductions for its volunteers, and thus the equality of contribution of man power by the States would be maintained.

I promised the Senate to make the formal appeal to the President—already printed in the RECORD of the 13th—and the following is the President's reply. He evidently feels that there is an equitable point worthy of future attention, and I agree with him that there is no point in calling upon one State for more man power than another when the only question involved is getting men to win the war.

I ask that the letter of the President be inserted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be inserted in the RECORD, as follows:

"THE WHITE HOUSE,
"Washington, 14 May, 1918.

"MY DEAR SENATOR: I admit that there are two sides to the question about allowing 'credits' for volunteers in conducting the draft, but I have been over the matter several times, and with very great care, with the War Department and am convinced that the interests of the country in the matter of winning the war will be best served by the measure as it stands.

"It is always with genuine hesitation that I find myself differing from men like yourself, to whose judgments I attach a great deal of importance, and I am quite ready to concede that neither solution of this question is entirely satisfactory. We have to take the average best.

"Cordially and sincerely, yours,

"WOODROW WILSON.

"Hon. JAMES D. PHELAN,
"United States Senate."

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 16th instant approved and signed the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 123) providing for the calling into military service of certain classes of persons registered and liable for military service under the terms of the act of Congress approved May 18, 1917, entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States."

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

H. R. 9715. An act extending the time for the construction of a bridge across the Bayou Bartholomew, in Ashley County, Wilmot Township, State of Arkansas, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

H. R. 12000. An act making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

Mr. FLETCHER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 10069, the river and harbor bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 10069) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. STERLING. In view of the fact that we are now to consider the river and harbor bill, I ask that the proposed amendment which I offered a while ago may lie on the table rather than be referred.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered.

Mr. OVERMAN. I wish to say to the Senator from Florida that yesterday afternoon before adjournment was had there was rather an understanding, though I do not think the RECORD shows there was a unanimous-consent agreement to that effect, that the calendar would be called this morning, beginning with a certain number. I ask the Senator from Florida, now that the river and harbor bill has been taken up and will be the unfinished business, if he will not agree to lay it aside temporarily and let us take up the calendar and finish it, because that was the understanding yesterday afternoon, and I should like to have it carried out. It will not take very long. We passed over about half of the calendar yesterday, and we are to begin where we left off. There are some pension bills about to be reached on the calendar which the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] is interested in getting through, and it was understood that the calendar should be called at the close of the morning business this morning.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I take it from the motions that there is something going on upon the other side, but we can not hear what it is.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am sorry I did not make myself heard. I will state that yesterday afternoon I moved that the Senate adjourn at 5 o'clock, after having considered the calendar for about an hour or more. There was some objection to an adjournment at that time. I stated then if the Senate would adjourn, as many Senators desired an adjournment, we would take up the calendar to-day and finish it. It was half finished yesterday, and there was a common understanding and unanimous consent was given that we should take up the calendar at the close of the morning business. I am asking the Senator from Florida if he will not agree to lay aside the river and harbor bill, which will be the unfinished business, so that we can proceed with the calendar and finish it, as some Senators have important local matters upon it that they desire to get through. I hope there will be no objection on the part of the Senator from Florida.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator from Florida consents, I want it understood that we are going to the calendar only to consider bills to which there is no objection.

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes; that is the intention.

Mr. FLETCHER. I was not here yesterday, and of course I knew nothing about that understanding. I was away engaged on official matters. In view of the statement made by the Senator from North Carolina, as there was evidently such an understanding among Senators, I am willing to have the river and harbor bill laid aside so that the remaining bills on the calendar which are unobjected to may be considered.

Mr. SMOOT. Beginning with Order of Business 293.

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask that the river and harbor bill may be laid aside for that purpose.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to laying the river and harbor bill aside that the Senate may proceed to the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar, beginning at Order of Business 293? The Chair hears none.

STEAMBOAT INSPECTORS.

The bill (S. 2104) to amend sections 4402, 4404, and 4414 of the Revised Statutes of the United States was announced as first in order on the calendar, and the Senate proceeded to its consideration as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment was, on page 2, line 9, to strike out "ten" and insert "eleven," so as to read:

There shall be 11 supervising inspectors, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that this request for increased supervising inspectors, and also the request for increase of salaries of certain employees in the Department of Commerce, has been before the Committee on Appropriations a good many times. The legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill has passed the Senate. It is true it is in conference to-day, but that bill provides for only 10 supervising inspectors. We have increased the number in every instance where it was shown to be absolutely necessary. Now, this bill comes before the Senate proposing to increase the salaries of some inspectors, as requested by the department, which was refused in the past by the Senate and by the House on the appropriation bill.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The Senator is evidently mistaken about the action of the House, because the bill now before the Senate is in substance a House bill.

Mr. SMOOT. My reference was to the members of the Committee on Appropriations of the House. I know that that has been done, and I know that the request before the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate to give this increased pay was made upon the legislative appropriation bill and we refused to give more than 10 inspectors. I should like to ask the Senator if any reason has developed since they appeared before the Committee on Appropriations why this increase should be made?

Mr. VARDAMAN. I know nothing about what has occurred since the Appropriations Committee of the Senate considered it. This bill is very urgently recommended by the Secretary of Commerce. These men are very much needed. At this particular time they are performing a very necessary and important function of the Government. It is stated by the American Bureau of Shipping and by the Secretary of Commerce that this is the first time in 40 years that their salaries have been raised. I know nothing beyond that which was detailed before the Committee on Commerce. I know the salaries are now inadequate. I know the duties these men are performing are very necessary. They are the boiler inspectors of steamboats. If I may be permitted, I will read what the Secretary of Commerce says about it in a letter addressed to Hon. J. W. ALEXANDER, of the House of Representatives, dated May 31, 1917:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., May 31, 1917.

MY DEAR JUDGE ALEXANDER: I am in receipt of your letter of May 25, inclosing copy of H. R. 4286, a bill to amend sections 4402, 4404, and 4414 of the Revised Statutes of the United States and asking me to give the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries my views as to the advisability of enacting the bill into law.

This bill has my unqualified support. It proposes to increase the salaries of the inspectors, which I think should be done. The men in that service are thoroughly equipped and trained for this work and, in my opinion, are underpaid. Further, because of the unusual demand at the present time for men outside of the service having the equipment and training of those in it, it will be quite difficult to hold the latter unless something is done to make their employment inviting and their pay commensurate with the duties performed.

I recommend that the bill be enacted into law.

Very truly, yours,

WILLIAM C. REDFIELD, Secretary.

Hon. J. W. ALEXANDER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. OVERMAN. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. VARDAMAN. I yield.

Mr. OVERMAN. The trouble about this sort of legislation is that we do not know where we are or where we are going to end. The Committee on Appropriations had the heads of departments before it and gave them a hearing for weeks and weeks. Then we prepared a bill and brought it before the Senate and got it through.

I agree with the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] that this is very dangerous legislation, and I am going to state why. I say that every head of a department comes before the committee and tells us their needs, and we go through everything and pass on it; and then sometimes when they can not get it from the committee they come before the Senate to get through a bill, doing exactly what the Committee on Appropriations refused to do in the way of increases of salaries and money to be appropriated and force us then by such a measure to make the appropriations.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. OVERMAN. I want to give one example. Two years ago the Senate committee had a matter before it, went thoroughly into it, and refused to make appropriations for certain increases and to provide for certain offices. Somehow or other a bill was gotten through the Senate here increasing the amount and making a number of offices, the appropriation amounting, I think, to $100,000. The bill was passed. It was not discussed. When the department's representatives had gone before the Committee on Appropriations and we had a hearing the committee declined to do it. I think such legislation is very dangerous.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The mistake made by the subcommittee appointed by the Commerce Committee was that they did not take notice of the fact that all the patriotism and all the wisdom possessed by Congress is confined in the committee of which the able Senator from North Carolina is a member. We paid some attention to this matter ourselves. It was considered in the House and was passed by that body after hearings were had upon it. It is my judgment that mature consideration was given the subject matter before action.

Of course, I know nothing of my own knowledge about the inadequacy of pay, and I have no special or expert knowledge as to the service these men render; but when the Secretary of Commerce comes to the Congress and says it is necessary to raise the salary in order to retain the services of men qualified to perform the duties as these men are qualified to perform the duties, when he states that the salaries have not been increased in 40 years, with the duties multiplying an hundredfold, it seems to me that Congress ought to take some notice of it. Whether it ought to be referred to the committee of which the honorable Senator from North Carolina is a member, and let that committee do what it considers to be the right thing, is a matter of no personal concern to me.

The Committee on Commerce has considered this bill; the testimony has been taken; the recommendation for its passage has been made. Now it is a matter entirely with the Senate as to whether or not it will pass the bill. My only purpose or desire is that this great country should do justice by its faithful public servants. No class of men are deserving of more at the hands of this Republic than the steamboat-boiler inspectors. I am very much opposed to every form of extravagance, but I submit that it would be better for the country generally, more just to all concerned, if we would urge economy in larger matters rather than pursue a policy of stinginess or parsimony in the payment of living salaries for the men whose labor keeps the machinery of commerce and the Government running.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, just one word and then I am going to object to the consideration of the bill. I have before me the legislative appropriation bill as it passed the other House and the present law, providing for 10 supervising inspectors at $3,000 each. We had this whole question before the Committee on Appropriations; it was discussed there; and yet we find that this bill now provides, because these officials could not get from that committee what they wanted, for 11 inspectors at $3,450 each. It does seem to me that there ought to be but one source from which appropriations for salaries should come in all of the departments of this Government.

Mr. VARDAMAN. But is that the case?

Mr. SMOOT. It has been true, I will say to the Senator from Mississippi, with one exception.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Is it true with reference to the Post Office employees? Is it true with reference to the employees of other departments?

Mr. SMOOT. The employees of the Post Office Department are taken care of in the Post Office appropriation bill, outside of the employees who are taken care of in the legislative appropriation bill; but this is not an appropriation bill. This is a Senate bill proposing to change the number of employees in the Department of Commerce and also changing their compensation.

Mr. VARDAMAN. To conform to a bill which has passed the other House and has come to the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know as to that; but this is a Senate bill which we are discussing.

Mr. VARDAMAN. As a matter of fact, I will state to the Senator that a subcommittee, of which the honorable Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], the learned Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS], and myself were members, have incorporated in the bill the provisions with reference to salaries that were provided in the House bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. VARDAMAN. That closes the matter.

Mr. FLETCHER. If the Senator will allow me to make a statement before the objection is made, I will say that this bill was introduced in the Senate; it was similar to a bill which had been introduced in the House of Representatives. When the House bill came to the committee, the bill which was introduced in the Senate and the House bill were both referred to a special subcommittee, the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] being the chairman. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] was also on the committee. They looked into all these bills and reported this bill out as covering the House bill and the Senate bill, conforming to the action of the other House. This calls for an amendment to those sections of the law which provide for the number of inspectors and their pay. The situation is very serious.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me for a moment, the point I make is that I think it is very dangerous practice where the Committee on Appropriations by subcommittee and full committee have considered a matter and refused to sanction it, that the same matter should be brought before the Senate with a favorable recommendation from another committee. For example, the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads has its duty to perform. Suppose, after taking action along certain lines, some other committee should come in and recommend something that the Post Office Committee had refused to recommend. The Committee on Appropriations has jurisdiction of many great appropriation bills and holds hearings upon items in those bills. The committee had before it this very matter. I do not know to what extent the pending bill goes, but what I object to is the method of procedure. If one committee is allowed to recommend appropriations when another committee, having jurisdiction, has turned them down, confusion will result.

Mr. FLETCHER. I know the Senator's point is not well taken as to this bill. This is precisely the course that such legislation has always pursued. It is a bill which goes to the Commerce Committee of the Senate, and which goes to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries of the other House. Those committees have always considered such bills. They have never gone to the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. VARDAMAN. They have no place there.

Mr. FLETCHER. The section as originally passed—section 4402 of the Revised Statutes, which this seeks to amend—embraced matters which were handled by the respective committees I have named. The situation is that a number of these inspectors have resigned and a number of others are about to resign unless their pay is increased, and it has not been increased for years and years.

Mr. VARDAMAN. It has not been increased for 40 years.

Mr. FLETCHER. It has not been increased for 40 years, or something like that. We are about to lose the efficiency of this service. I have a letter here from Mr. Thomas H. Foster, of the New York Customhouse, in which he says:

> During the month of March three of the assistant inspectors from the New York office resigned, making a total of seven who have resigned from there recently, and I understand a number from other districts have resigned during the past few weeks. Unless a raise of salary is secured very shortly the personnel of this service will suffer serious deterioration, and even with salaries established by the proposed bill it will, I am sure, be impossible to fill the vacancies with men having the requisite ability.

The service is being crippled. This bill has been pending for some time, and we should have taken it up before.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, a similar letter to the one which the Senator from Florida has just read was before the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, and was also before the full Committee on Appropriations. I wish to say to the Senator that the request was made before that committee for an increase. Now, if we increase the compensation for these inspectors, what can we say to the other tens of thousands of employees who have pleaded here through the heads of their departments for increases? The committee said that under existing conditions, with the increase of 15 and 20 per cent, as the case may be, it was unwise to increase any salaries. In the legislative appropriation bill I think there were but two salaries which were increased from the beginning to the end of the bill.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Florida yield to me?

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator from Utah will note that very considerable reductions have been made by the committee in the amounts originally carried in the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. But they are all increases over what these officials now get.

Mr. NELSON. I should like to ask the Senator from Utah how many thousand increases of salaries have been made in the Post Office appropriation bill which we passed yesterday?

Mr. SMOOT. We made a good many.

Mr. NELSON. How many thousand were made?

Mr. SMOOT. We made a good many increases, but I spoke of the legislative appropriation bill. These inspectors were provided for in the legislative appropriation bill and their salaries have been appropriated for. They were allowed in the legislative appropriation bill $3,000 per annum. Whoever introduced this bill provided for a salary of $3,600, and the Committee on Commerce cut it down to $3,450. That is an increase of $450.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, there are two purposes, if the Senator from Florida will allow me, to be accomplished by this bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NELSON. One is to create an inspection district in the district of Alaska, where they have not had one before. It is essential to have an inspection district for that great big country on the Pacific coast.

Mr. SMOOT. I think that was in this bill, but I will look it up and see.

Mr. NELSON. In addition to that I desire to say that there are two ways of increasing salaries. The legitimate and proper way is to pass a law amending the law creating the office and establishing the salaries. There is another way, and that is the backdoor way, to make such provision in an appropriation bill. We have come forward here with plain legislation, indorsed by two committees, that of the House and that of the Senate, which have jurisdiction of this subject and of this legislation. In a straightforward, legitimate way we have reported in favor of this increase. No man who has investigated this subject will say that the salaries of the men in this service are not low as compared with the salaries of men in other branches of the public service. I know of no salaries so meager, except those in the Lighthouse Service.

Now, we have given them a very moderate increase, compared with the increase given to employees of the Post Office Department in the Post Office appropriation bill, and the salaries of these inspectors have not been increased for years and years. They are working to-day under salaries fixed long before we declared war and long before even Germany declared war. We aim by this bill to give them a reasonable and moderate increase in order that they may meet the necessities of the times.

Why should the Committee on Appropriations object to this because we do it in an open, aboveboard, and straightforward manner in a separate bill, instead of doing it in an appropriation bill? That is exactly what we have done. If we are going to help any employees of the Government, as we have done in the case of the employees of the Post Office Department, why should we discriminate against these men, who are in the present emergency more important than ever, in view of the fact that we are increasing our shipping to such an enormous extent? The steamboat inspectors have to inspect every hull and boiler in the new vessels, and they will have a hundredfold more work to do than they have ever before had in our history.

It seems to me that under these circumstances to haggle about this small increase is, to say the least, unwarranted in view of what we have done for other employees of the Government. We have even made provision to take care of men who have assumed Government contracts and who now find themselves handicapped because of the rise in prices since the contracts were entered into; we have made provision to help those men and to give them relief. Why should we discriminate against these men in the Steamboat-Inspection Service, and why should we raise the technical question between the Appropriations Committee and the Committee on Commerce, the latter committee having jurisdiction of this proposed legislation?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understood that the calendar was being considered for the consideration of unobjected bills. This bill seems to be objected to.

Mr. SMOOT. I have objected to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. I hope the Senator will not insist on his objection. The increase allowed is less than 20 per cent of the present salaries, and it is the only increase that has been made in 20 or 30 years.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in answer to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], I wish to say that there is not an employee of the Post Office Department who is receiving $3,000 per annum whose salary has been increased, and there is not an employee in the service of the United States who is receiving a salary of over $2,500 per annum whose salary has been increased.

Mr. NELSON. Does the Senator know what increase in work there has been in the Steamboat-Inspection Service. There is not any branch of the Government where there has been, owing to the shipbuilding program, such an increase of work as there has been in this service. The hulls and boilers of every new ship that we are constructing must be inspected by this force. The inspection work they had to perform before our entry into the war in "the piping times of peace" was a mere bagatelle compared with the work they must perform now.

Mr. SMOOT. "The Senator from Ufah" is fully aware of the fact adverted to by the Senator from Minnesota, and he is also aware that we have increased the number of employees in that branch of the service. I can not say how many have been added to the force, but we have provided the number requested by the Secretary of Commerce. The increase in employees in the Department of Commerce has been in the same ratio as in other departments of the Government.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. SMOOT. I object to the further consideration of the bill.

Mr. BORAH. Has there been objection to the consideration of this bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection was made some minutes ago. The Chair understands that if objection is made to the consideration of a bill it must go over and is not subject to debate. Hereafter if debate goes on after objection and the Senator objecting takes part in the discussion of its merits, the Chair, at the risk of reversal, will hold that the bill is unobjected to and is before the Senate.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, we ought to have a clear understanding of what is meant by "unobjected bills" as used in the agreements so frequently entered into with reference to the consideration of the calendar. My understanding of the matter always has been that when a bill is called on the calendar any Senator may object to its consideration. The term "unobjected" refers to the consideration of the bill rather than to the merits of the bill. I never understood heretofore that it precluded anyone from urging any objection he might have to a bill or to any feature of a bill; indeed, I have often known Senators to say, "I shall not object to the consideration of the bill, but when it is before the Senate I shall speak against it and vote against it." I do not think that the spirit of the stipulation has been violated at all, much as I regret the extended debate which has attended the discussion of the bill which has been under consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair desires to express this view about these agreements. The Chair is in substantial accord with the views expressed by the Senator from Montana. When a bill is called, if there is objection to its consideration it goes over; but if it is taken up and discussed, discussion of it is not an objection to the bill at all.

Mr. SMOOT. But before a bill is acted upon it has always been the rule that an objection at any time would carry it over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. After the Senator from Utah objected to the consideration of this bill the discussion on the bill proceeded for 10 minutes. It is not material to the Chair what takes place, but if that procedure is followed we will never get through the calendar.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I understand the ruling of the Chair is that the bill is not in order now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under objection, the bill goes over.

Mr. MYERS. I should like to ask the Senator from Florida if he will tell me whether he is going to call up the river and harbor bill at 2 o'clock, or are we to go on after 2 o'clock and finish the calendar?

Mr. FLETCHER. The river and harbor bill, I will state, is already before the Senate and has been laid aside temporarily in order that unobjected bills on the calendar may be considered.

Mr. MYERS. I hope we can finish the calendar; I should like to get through with it.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have no objection to that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the next bill on the calendar.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

The bill (H. R. 7634) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Montana a question, if he will do me the honor to listen. If the bill that is now before the committee, general in character, should pass, would it not dispense with the necessity of bills of the character of the one now before the Senate?

Mr. WALSH. No. If the general bill which is now before the committee should pass, it would operate upon the items included in these bills. It will have no application whatever to the individuals referred to in these bills, however, unless these bills are passed.

Mr. KING. I had supposed that that general bill would cover all cases where persons were entitled to a pension, thus dispensing with the necessity of these special pension acts.

Mr. WALSH. These are omnibus bills made up of many individual pension bills introduced by various Members.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The first amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The first amendment reported by the Committee on Pensions was, on page 2, after line 19, to strike out:

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, in the consideration of Senate bill 3799, a few days ago, an item was dropped from the bill which provided for pensioning Joseph T. Lewis, late of Company G, Eleventh Regiment Indiana Volunteers, at the rate of $50 a month, on the erroneous statement that he had died. A letter was written to Mr. Lewis at the soldiers' home where he was living, and he having left there, the adjutant, through mistake, wrote on the letter that he was reported dead, and returned it. As a matter of fact, he had returned to his home at Parsons, Kans., and I have a letter from the commander of the Grand Army post there stating that the old gentleman is there, and much alive, although he is very aged, 83 years old, and is almost blind, and is lame, requiring to walk with a cane, having been wounded twice in the service, and having served four years.

I ask that this item may be made a part of this bill, in order that the old soldier may yet realize some of the benefits of this pension. The item was dropped through mistake and there should certainly be no objection to it being inserted in this bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kansas offers an amendment, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert in the bill the following amendment:

The name of Joseph T. Lewis, late of Company G, Eleventh Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I have become satisfied that the report which came to the committee after this item was favorably reported upon some time ago, to the effect that the man was dead, was, as in the case of one of our famous humorists, somewhat exaggerated. Inasmuch as it has received the approval of both Houses of Congress, I think no objection should be taken to the consideration of this item as an amendment to the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

AIRCRAFT PRODUCTION.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I observe a statement in the morning papers to which I desire to call attention, because I think the usually accurate reporters have been misled. The statement reads as follows:

It can not be said that the acceptance by Charles E. Hughes of the invitation of the President to participate in the investigation is approved by Republican leaders in the Senate. This may be due to the unpopularity of the recent candidate with Senate Republican leaders. The comment of a group of certain Senators high in the political councils of their party would make most interesting reading in this connection if it were permissible to print it.

Mr. President, I do not assume to speak for the Republican leaders, although I venture to say that the reporter is in error as to his conclusion even as to the leaders. I do say, however, upon the part of some others who are humble members of the party, that they do not look unfavorably upon the acceptance by Mr. Hughes of this position.

Ordinarily, I should not call attention to a matter of this kind; but this whole situation with reference to aircraft is one of extreme sensitiveness throughout the country and of vast moment throughout the world. So far as I am individually concerned, I should not want to be regarded as one of those who look with disfavor upon this appointment, if anyone does. Indeed, I have heard no one criticize it. I think the President did a most wise and patriotic thing in appointing Mr. Hughes, and I think Mr. Hughes was most wise and patriotic in accepting the position. I believe that that is the view of the Republican Members of the Senate, including both the leaders and those who do not assume to be leaders.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, does the Senator know of any Republican Senator who has disapproved the choice of Mr. Hughes or thought otherwise than well of him?

Mr. BORAH. No; the comment I have heard has been all the other way.

Mr. LODGE. That is my own impression.

Mr. BORAH. I simply call attention to it because it would be extremely unfortunate for that kind of a view to go out to the country. The President and Mr. Hughes are both to be commended in this matter.

STATUE OF FREDERICK THE GREAT.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, on yesterday I submitted a resolution which, under objection, went over. I have been engaged in the Committee on Appropriations all the morning, and I now ask unanimous consent that the resolution lie on the table without prejudice and not be placed on the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution will lie on the table.

APPLICATIONS FOR HOMESTEAD ENTRIES.

The bill (S. 3797) validating certain applications for and entries of public lands, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments.

The first amendment was, on page 3, after line 6, to insert:

Additional homestead entry, Rapid City, S. Dak., No. 027300, made by Jesse D. Elliott on April 20, 1912, under act of June 11, 1906 (34 Stat. L., 233), for a tract of 65.49 acres of land situate in sections 29, 31, and 32, township 2 south, range 3 east, Black Hills meridian.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 15, to strike out:

Homestead entries, La Grande, Oreg., Nos. 012078 and 014138, made by Lucy Campbell for the east half of the northwest quarter, east half of the southwest quarter, section 15, and the west half of the northwest quarter, northwest quarter of the southwest quarter, section 15, and the southwest quarter of the southwest quarter, section 10, township 9 south, range 32 east, Willamette meridian.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 11, to insert:

Homestead entry, Cheyenne, Wyo., No. 05288, made by Douglas Jiggetts on November 10, 1909, for the east half, section 20, township 15 north, range 67 west, sixth principal meridian, such patent to be issued to William Smith, devisee of Annie Jiggetts, deceased, widow of Douglas Jiggetts, deceased.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 9, to insert:

Desert-land entry, Denver, Colo., No. 016429, made by John N. Baker on January 25, 1912, for the southeast quarter southeast quarter, section 30, and west half southwest quarter, section 29, township 8 north, range 81 west, sixth principal meridian.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 11, to insert:

SEC. 8. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to allow Alfred St. Michell to make homestead entry for the northwest quarter southeast quarter, section 10, township 21 north, range 24 west, Montana meridian: Provided, That he file a proper application for the land and pay the appraised price therefor within 60 days from receipt of notice from the register and receiver that the land has been opened to entry.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, there seem to be several entries that are proposed to be validated by this bill that are not included in any report from the committee or any report from the Secretary of the Interior; and the present amendment seems to be one of them.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I am told that these bills are all mentioned in the report. The bill is a long one.

Mr. LENROOT. I will say to the Senator that I have checked over the items; we had a similar bill in the House, and there seem to be four entries in this bill that have had no report from the Secretary and are not included in the report of the committee.

Mr. MYERS. If that is the case, I am sure they were introduced as separate bills, and by the committee incorporated in this omnibus bill as amended, and that the report is on the separate bills. I am sure there is not an item in this bill but that has been requested by the Interior Department and recommended by the Interior Department. Many of these items were introduced as separate bills, and recommended by the department, and then by the committee incorporated in this bill. The report would be on the separate bills in that event, and not on this particular bill.

Mr. LENROOT. I will state to the Senator that three of the items upon which there is no report are not in the form of amendments but are in the bill as introduced by the Senator. This is the only amendment proposed by the committee that is not included. The other three that are not reported upon are found in the original bill introduced by the Senator.

Mr. MYERS. This bill was sent to me by the Interior Department with the request that it be introduced to cover certain entries about which there was some technical defect, which the Interior Department thought were meritorious and should be granted by this legislation.

Mr. LENROOT. Upon the assurance of the Senator that all these items have been recommended by the Secretary, I shall not object.

Mr. MYERS. Every one came from the Interior Department. I am not personally interested in a single one.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, after line 8, to insert:

SEC. 9. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to allow Dorothea V. Stillman to make homestead entry for the east half of the northwest quarter, section 32, township 21 north, range 19 west, Montana meridian: Provided, That she file a proper application for the land and pay the appraised price therefor within 60 days from receipt of notice from the register and receiver that the land has been opened to entry.

Barley in person, or, in case of his death, by or in behalf of the decedent's heirs: Provided further, That the land selected shall be of similar general character to that in the original homestead, but if selection is made of land designated or subject to designation, under the enlarged homestead act, double the area of the selection authorized in the foregoing paragraph may be selected: Provided further, That the selection hereby authorized may be made subject to existing laws relating to surface entry, with reservation of minerals to the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GRONNA. I do not know that these amendments have been considered by the committee.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The amendment as to Porto Rico was not considered by the committee, but it was recommended by the Department of Agriculture after the committee had passed on the bill.

Mr. GRONNA. Will the Senator kindly explain to the Senate why this amendment should be inserted in the bill?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I ask the Secretary to read a letter from the Delegate from Porto Rico which will explain the situation. I received this letter from him after the committee had had the bill under consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The letter will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., March 29, 1918.

Hon. MORRIS SHEPPARD,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: I have the honor to request, on behalf of the people of Porto Rico, that the bill introduced by you, S. 3469, providing for the importation of cattle from tick-infested territory under certain conditions, be so amended as to permit the admission into Porto Rico for slaughter within the period prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of the Treasury of tick-infested cattle which are otherwise free from contagion and which have not been exposed to the infection of any other disease within 60 days next before their importation from Mexico, South and Central America, the islands of the Gulf of Mexico and the Caribbean Sea.

As you are aware, Porto Rico is in the tick-infested zone, and if the cattle are otherwise healthful it would seem that no injury could arise from the traffic which is so much desired by the people of our island. I suggest this amendment, because in our country, by reason of the lack of refrigerators and other facilities, it will be impossible to immediately slaughter at one time the entire cargo of cattle imported.

If the Secretary of Agriculture is allowed within his discretion to permit the admission of the cattle for slaughter within a certain period, then it would be possible to make arrangements satisfactory to all.

On behalf of the people of the island, I am therefore addressing you in the hope that you will agree to the incorporation of an additional section, as follows:

"Provided further, That the Secretary of Agriculture within his discretion, and under such joint regulation as may be prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of the Treasury, may permit the importation into Porto Rico for slaughter, within a certain period prescribed by such regulations, of tick-infested cattle which are otherwise free from disease and which have not been exposed to the infection of any other disease within 60 days next before their exportation from Mexico, South and Central America, the islands of the Gulf of Mexico and the Caribbean Sea."

Trusting that it will meet with your favorable consideration, I am,

Yours, truly,

FELIX CORDOVA DAVILA.

Mr. GRONNA. May I ask the Senator if this amendment is approved by the Secretary of Agriculture?

Mr. SHEPPARD. It is. I have a letter here from the Agricultural Department.

Mr. GRONNA. I should like to have it inserted in the RECORD, because the committee is not responsible for this legislation, and some one ought to be responsible for it.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I shall be glad to have the letter from the department inserted in the RECORD. Mr. President, I make a request to that effect.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, April 15, 1918.

Hon. MORRIS SHEPPARD,
United States Senate.

SIR: I have your letter of March 30, inclosing a letter from Hon. Felix Cordova Davila requesting on behalf of the people of Porto Rico an amendment to the bill introduced by you, S. 3469, so as to make possible the importation of tick-infested cattle from Mexico, South and Central America, and the islands of the Gulf of Mexico and the Caribbean Sea into Porto Rico, for slaughter within a reasonable period of time, under such regulations as may be prescribed jointly by the Secretaries of the Treasury and of this department.

You are advised that, in the opinion of this department, there would appear to be no serious objection to an amendment such as that proposed, provided the cattle from those countries are permitted for slaughter and for no other use whatsoever. The cattle of South and Central America are infested with a different variety of fever tick from that in our Southern States, which may be more difficult to destroy or eradicate. Cattle from these countries brought into Porto Rico should not in any case be permitted to mingle with other cattle or live stock in Porto Rico or go on any lands or premises accessible to other cattle and live stock, but should be segregated, handled, and transported under practically the same restrictions as required in the handling and transportation of tick-infested cattle for slaughter.

In compliance with your request that if the attitude of the department is favorable to the proposed measure I prepare an amendment in proper form, I beg to submit for your consideration the following, which if added to the bill as a proviso clause will, I believe, effectuate the purpose desired:

"And provided further, That the slaughter of all such cattle imported into the Territory of Porto Rico may be deferred for such time and under such restrictions as the Secretary of Agriculture may by regulation prescribe."

If it be decided to add this paragraph to the bill, it would be advisable, I think, to amend the bill in the following particular: In line 7 of page 2 of the report of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, dated March 25, 1918, submitting an amendment to S. 3469, after the words "to be designated in said joint regulations," insert the words "except as hereinafter provided." With reference to the original bill, this insertion would occur in line 13 of page 2.

The letter of Hon. Felix Cordova Davila is herewith returned.

Very truly, yours,

D. F. HOUSTON, Secretary.

(Inclosure.)

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I ask, Mr. President, that the bill as passed by the Senate be inserted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill as passed was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A bill (S. 3469) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense by stimulating agriculture and facilitating the distribution of agricultural products," approved August 10, 1917.

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense by stimulating agriculture and facilitating the distribution of agricultural products," approved August 10, 1917, be, and the same hereby is, amended so as to strike out, in section 9, after the words "Caribbean Sea," the following: "into those parts of the United States below the southern cattle quarantine line at such ports of entry as may be designated by said joint regulations and also," so that the section as amended will read as follows:

"SEC. 9. That the act of August 30, 1890, entitled 'An act providing for an inspection of meats for exportation, prohibiting the importation of adulterated articles of food or drink, and authorizing the President to make proclamation in certain cases, and for other purposes' (26 Stat. L., p. 414), is hereby amended so as to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture, within his discretion and under such joint regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of the Treasury, to permit the admission into the United States for immediate slaughter at ports of entry to be designated in said joint regulations, except as hereinafter provided, of tick-infested cattle which are otherwise free from disease and which have not been exposed to the infection of any other disease within 60 days next before their exportation from Mexico, South and Central America, the islands of the Gulf of Mexico and the Caribbean Sea, subject to the provisions of sections 7, 8, 9, and 10 of said act of August 30, 1890: Provided, That the importation of tick-infested cattle from any country referred to in this section in which foot-and-mouth disease exists, which existence shall be determined by the Secretary of Agriculture, is prohibited: Provided further, That all cattle imported under the provisions of this section shall be slaughtered in accordance with the provisions of the act of June 30, 1906 (34 Stat. L., p. 674), commonly called the meat-inspection amendment, and the rules and regulations promulgated thereunder by the Secretary of Agriculture, and that their hides shall be disposed of under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture; And provided further, That the slaughter of all such cattle imported into the Territory of Porto Rico may be deferred for such time and under such restrictions as the Secretary of Agriculture may by regulation prescribe."

Mr. GRONNA. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That section 5 of the act of March 3, 1915, entitled "An act to provide for the appointment of a district judge, district attorney, and marshal for the western district of South Carolina, and for other purposes," as amended by the act approved September 1, 1916, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to amend the act of September 1, 1916, entitled 'An act to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the appointment of a district judge, district attorney, and marshal for the western district of South Carolina, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1915, so as to provide for terms of the district court to be held at Anderson, S. C.,' so as to change the time of holding courts in the western district of South Carolina."

FRED H. GALLUP.

The bill (S. 3945) to authorize the President of the United States to appoint Fred H. Gallup major of Field Artillery in the United States Army was announced as next in order.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Let that go over.

Mr. KENYON. I hope not.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have very great doubt as to the wisdom of this kind of legislation, reinstating an officer in the Army who was dismissed.

Mr. KENYON. I wish to say to the Senator, whether he knows it or not, that his committee reported the bill, and that one of the other officers in the same class has been reinstated by act of Congress. It is a very trivial affair. This man has an untarnished record of 21 years in the service, and it is nothing but a libel on his record. If the Senator will read the report from his own committee——

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have read the report.

Mr. KENYON. Of course, the Senator has a right to object, but he is doing, I think, a great wrong to this man.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Was not this a case where a court-martial was had and he was dismissed?

Mr. KENYON. I do not know. He was discharged from the service. I do not know whether it was by a court-martial or not.

Mr. WADSWORTH. My recollection is that there was a court-martial in his case, but I am not absolutely certain. I would like to be informed on that point. I think he pleaded guilty.

Mr. KENYON. He immediately confessed what he had done. He used some unauthorized assistance in making topographical maps. He should not have done it. He had been under a severe strain for days and weeks. This matter so bore upon him that he attempted to commit suicide. He shot himself. He recovered from that. All the Army officers who were associated with him say that the Army needs him. He was acting under a temporary impulse which he himself does not justify in any way. He made a mistake and promptly confessed it. One mistake in 21 years of service is hardly sufficient to keep a man out of the Army. He is an engineer, a first-class ordnance officer, and he is needed in the Army. At the present time he is employed at a large salary in a munitions factory, and would make a sacrifice financially to go into the Army; but he has that pride a soldier has to go back. Of course, if the Senator wants to look into it further, well and good. I am sure he will be satisfied with the justice of the bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I should like to look into it. I should like to understand whether there was a court-martial; and if so, what was the ground of its finding, because it is a fact that officers have been dismissed from the Army for delinquencies far less serious than this one and never get any opportunity to return to it.

Mr. KENYON. The other officer in the same affair, in making the same map, using unauthorized assistance, has been reinstated by act of Congress.

Mr. LODGE. Has objection been made to the consideration of the bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is what the Chair is trying to find out.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think it had better go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

CONSTRUCTION OF NEW BUILDINGS.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I have received a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury in criticism of a statement I made several days ago in the Senate while the housing bill was under consideration. I send the letter to the desk and ask that it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY,
Washington, May 11, 1918.

DEAR SENATOR CALDER: From the proceedings of the Senate of May 9, 1918, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page 6258, you are quoted as saying:

"At no time in the history of New York have we needed more than at present new buildings for people to live in. We are prevented from having them to some extent because of the attitude of the Treasury Department in advising the banks and mortgage companies against loaning money upon mortgages on real estate. If the Treasury Department changed its attitude, the money could be obtained, new building would be encouraged, and we might then be able to help the housing problem we are facing here."

This statement is so wholly without foundation that I am amazed that you would make it. The Treasury Department has at no time taken any such attitude, nor has it ever advised banks or mortgage companies against loaning money upon mortgages on real estate.

I have advised against the construction of unnecessary buildings during the period of the war, but I have laid emphasis upon unnecessary building. I have stated publicly that—

"Where it is a question of need—be it on account of sanitary conditions or because without such new construction other operations essential at this time for the welfare of the country would suffer—there is no doubt that the work should be undertaken. This applies equally to construction work in cities and towns and in farming districts." (See my letter to the American Lumberman, copy of which is attached.)

In a letter to Mr. Gompers, dated March 15, 1918, in reply to a resolution adopted by the Building Trades Council of San Francisco, I said:

"Building operations which are not required to protect the health or provide for the comfortable needs of our people or to supply facilities necessary for the proper conduct of business essential to the successful prosecution of the war should be postponed."

I inclose a copy of that letter, also.

The attitude of the Treasury Department has been that capital which is needed during the period of the war should not be employed in the construction of unnecessary buildings at this time. But there has never been any suggestion that buildings actually needed for the health and protection of the civil population or for the conduct of essential business of the country should not be constructed during the period of the war.

I hope that you will correct your erroneous statement by the inclusion of this letter in the proceedings of the Senate.

Faithfully, yours, W. G. MCADOO.

Hon. WILLIAM M. CALDER,
United States Senate.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, when I made the statement referred to in the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury just read I believed I was stating the case accurately. Evidently that was the impression also of the American Lumberman and the Building Trades Council of San Francisco when they complained of the action of the Treasury Department on the question of constructing buildings throughout the country.

Early in this year the Secretary of the Treasury or the Department of the Treasury issued a bulletin having to do with the construction of new buildings. Subsequently the Federal Reserve Board issued a statement on the same subject. As I have been deeply interested in this matter, realizing the effect of these two statements, I called upon the Secretary of the Treasury and, in his absence, called upon a member of the Federal Reserve Board. I received the impression there that it was the purpose of the Treasury Department and the Federal Reserve Board to stop, as far as it was within their power so to do, the construction of all new buildings. The bulletins I have referred to evidently had the effect that I stated when I addressed the Senate on the housing problem.

Mr. President, these bulletins undoubtedly reached the banks and mortgage companies of the country, if not directly through the Treasury Department, at least by these institutions reading them in the financial newspapers of the country. I know of my own knowledge that many institutions usually loaning money on real-estate mortgages have stopped loaning money on mortgages of that character because of their belief that the Treasury Department proposed discouraging such mortgages.

In connection with the same subject, Mr. President, on Friday of last week a committee representing the building-material dealers of Greater New York called upon the War Industries Board and was there advised that it was the purpose of that board in the course of a few days to promulgate an order stopping building construction of every sort in the city of New York. When that committee informed me of this fact, naturally I was dumbfounded at the suggestion, but it was in line with the information I had obtained, and I believed I had obtained accurately, from the position of the Treasury Department.

Subsequently I called upon Mr. Baruch, of the War Industries Board, and was glad to receive the assurance from him that it was not the intention of the board to issue any such drastic order, although one of the men in his office had a few days previously so informed the committee interested in the subject.

In connection with the same matter I have a telegram from a prominent builder in New York City, which was sent to me on May 14, in which he says:

NEW YORK, May 14, 1918.

Senator CALDER,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

May we commend you on your excellent presentation yesterday before the War Industries Board on necessity of permitting building operations in New York City? Last October census taken by tenement department showed 1 per cent vacancies in new-law houses. Ex-Commissioner Murphy stated we required 200,000 apartments to meet increased population.

FRED F. FRENCH CO.

Mr. President, I have been much interested in this subject, and very anxious that no steps should be taken here at Washington which would close down the building industry of the country. Senators may recall that when the housing bill was up the other day I pointed out that the building operations this year in the United States would be less than $300,000,000 as compared with $1,500,000,000 in the year 1916, and that in that year it was less than normal. On the very day that I discussed the housing bill I addressed a communication to the governor of the Federal Reserve Board, Mr. William P. G. Harding, which I ask to have the Secretary read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KING in the chair). Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, how long does the Senate continue to act under the unanimous-consent agreement? Does it expire at 2 o'clock?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No.

Mr. CALDER. I will say to the Senator from Massachusetts that I very seldom occupy the floor with matters of this kind.

Mr. LODGE. I was not finding any fault with the Senator, but we are acting under a unanimous-consent agreement, which I dislike to see set aside.

Mr. CALDER. I shall conclude in a moment or two.

Mr. LODGE. I am not interested in it, but I dislike, as I have said, to see the unanimous-consent agreement set aside.

Mr. CALDER. I send to the desk the letter of Gov. Harding, and ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I feel very sure that the Senator from New York must be laboring under a misapprehension concerning conditions here. We are proceeding by unanimous consent with the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar, and the time allotted to that work will expire at 2 o'clock. The matters which the Senator from New York is now presenting to the Senate can just as well be taken up after we are through with the present order.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Montana is laboring under a mistake when he states that the time expires at 2 o'clock. The unfinished business was temporarily laid aside for the purpose of considering the calendar.

Mr. WALSH. I understand the purpose of the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] is at 2 o'clock to move to take up the unfinished business, and I merely rose to apprise the Senator from New York of the situation of affairs. I felt perfectly certain that he would not have interjected this matter at this time if he were acquainted with the situation of affairs.

Mr. CALDER. This is really a matter of personal privilege, Mr. President, and although I did not, when I rose, ask to address the Senate for that reason, I did ask for and obtained permission to proceed by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised that the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] has not formally objected. So the Secretary will read as requested by the Senator from New York.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if it is a case of personal privilege, of course the Senator from New York is entitled to the floor. I was not aware of that fact.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

MAY 8, 1918.

Hon. WILLIAM P. G. HARDING,
Governor Federal Reserve Board,
Treasury Department.

MY DEAR GOV. HARDING: I am addressing you as the governor of the Federal Reserve System, and also as a member of the War Finance Corporation, in relation to the building operations of the country. I know that the Federal Reserve Board has given some consideration to this subject and has issued several bulletins dealing with it.

I have been much concerned over the fact that the building operations in the country, aggregating $1,500,000,000 in the year 1916, which was below the average, will this year fall to less than $300,000,000—private construction. The result of this will be that, as already indicated in the larger cities of the country, we are going to be exceedingly short of housing facilities.

The Government is taking up this subject in so far as it applies to people employed directly on Government work, but unless some further relief comes we will face a serious situation next spring. For that reason I would be glad if the Federal Reserve Board and the War Finance Corporation will take under advisement the question of whether it would not be best to encourage the construction of some new buildings, particularly homes. My opinion is that the situation will be difficult in a short time, and we ought to get ready for it.

Inquiry in New York indicates that the banks and mortgage companies are not loaning any money on building operations and very little on real-estate mortgages. This situation would change if there was some encouragement from the Federal Reserve Board and the War Finance Corporation.

I would be glad to drop in and talk with you regarding the matter and see if something can not be done to protect for the future.

Sincerely, yours,

WM. M. CALDER.

Mr. CALDER. I ask that a letter addressed to me by Gov. Harding be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the letter will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD,
Washington, May 10, 1918.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 8th instant, which I brought to the attention of the Federal Reserve Board and which I shall also bring to the attention of the War Finance Corporation at the first meeting of the directors.

I would be glad to have an opportunity at any time convenient to you of discussing with you steps that should be taken to make private building operations possible, and I would suggest that you also discuss this subject with the new Capital Issues Committee, which I presume will take office within the next few days.

Very truly, yours,

W. P. G. HARDING.

Hon. WILLIAM M. CALDER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I am firmly convinced that with the slightest encouragement on the part of the Government the great building industry of this country can proceed. Within a few days I have received letters from representatives of the brick-making industry on the Hudson River, advising me that they had in their brickyards over 300,000,000 bricks ready to be used, and that there was no place to use them. I have letters from cement manufacturers, from lumbermen, and from numerous builders, stating that the attitude of the Government here in discouraging building operations has completely paralyzed their business throughout the country. They tell me that both men and material are available.

So, Mr. President, I have brought this matter to the attention of the Senate to-day, first, in compliance with the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, and then to justify my statement on the floor of the Senate when the housing bill was under consideration. I regret that I in some degree misquoted the attitude of the Department of the Treasury; but perhaps, after all, it is best that I did so, because the matter has been to some extent cleared up. I hope that as a result of what has occurred this morning the country will understand that it is not the purpose of the Treasury Department or of the War Industries Board or of the Federal Reserve Board to discourage building operations where they are necessary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 34, after line 12, it is proposed to strike out:

The name of George J. Trask, late of Company I, Fifty-sixth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I take it for granted that the items which have been stricken from the bill have been eliminated because of the death of the proposed beneficiaries since the bill was reported to the Senate.

Mr. WALSH. They are cases of that character.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I heard the name "Logan Russell" read. I am aware that he is dead, and I inquire if the purpose of the amendment is to strike that item from the bill?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CUT-OVER PUBLIC LANDS.

The bill (S. 2714) authorizing the removal of stumps from cut-over Oregon and California lands was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to grant within his discretion free permits for the removal of stumps from cut-over timberlands embraced within the former grant to the Oregon & California Railroad Co. and revested in the United States by the act of June 9, 1916 (39 Stats., p. 218), subject to such terms and conditions as he may impose for the protection of all rights and interests of the United States and such others, if any, that may be affected thereby, and the Secretary is further authorized to make any and all regulations found necessary to carry into effect the provisions of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WYOMING NATIONAL FOREST.

The bill (S. 1847) to authorize the addition of certain lands to the Wyoming National Forest was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that any lands within the following-described areas, found by the Secretary of Agriculture to be chiefly valuable for the production of timber or the protection of stream flow, may be included within and made a part of the Wyoming National Forest by proclamation of the President, such lands to be thereafter subject to all laws affecting national forests: All of township 29 north, range 118 west; all of township 29 north, range 119 west; sections 5, 6, 7, 8, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, and 33, township 30 north, range 118 west; all of township 30 north, range 119 west; sections 7, 18, 19, 30, 31, and west half of section 32, township 31 north, range 118 west; sections 19 to 36, inclusive, township 31 north, range 119 west; all of the sixth principal meridian, Wyoming.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SOLDIERS AND SAILORS' CIVIL-RELIEF ACT.

The concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 39) to authorize the printing of 250,000 copies of the soldiers and sailors' civil-relief act, approved March 8, 1918, etc., was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The concurrent resolution will be passed over.

COOSA RIVER ISLAND, ALA.

The bill (S. 1760) to authorize the sale and disposal of an island in the Coosa River, in the State of Alabama, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, on page 2, line 5, after the word "navigation," to insert "or of water power"; and in line 8, after the word "improvement," to insert "or of the development of water power," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That, with the assent of the Secretary of War, that certain island in Coosa River, St. Clair County, Ala., known as Rock Island, and described upon the official plat of survey as lot 1, section 24, township 14 south, range 5 east, and lot 1, section 19, township 14 south, range 6 east, Huntsville meridian, containing 2.55 acres, may be restored to entry, and that the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized, in his discretion, to sell and convey said land to the Rock Island Fishing and Hunting Club, at $1.25 per acre: Provided, That the aforesaid land shall forever be and remain subject to the right of the United States to overflow same or any part thereof in the improvement and development of navigation or of water power on the Coosa River; and no claim or right to compensation shall accrue from the overflowing of said land on account of said work of improvement or of the development of water power: Provided further, That in any patent that the Secretary of the Interior may issue for said land the right to overflow without liability for damage shall be expressly reserved to the United States: Provided further, That if said Rock Island Fishing and Hunting Club should at any time use or attempt to use said tract of land for any other purpose than that of recreation or club purposes, or should attempt to sell, lease, or convey said tract the said land shall revert to the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not understand from the reading of the bill whether a condition is to be placed in the patent that the lands shall continue to be used for the purposes of a gun club, although I think reference is made to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Provided further, That if said Rock Island Fishing and Hunting Club should at any time use or attempt to use said tract of land for any other purpose than that of recreation or club purposes or should attempt to sell, lease, or convey said tract the said land shall revert to the United States.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is what I wanted to make sure was in the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SIBLEY ISLAND, MISSOURI RIVER.

The bill (S. 1889) revoking authority to lease Sibley Island, in the Missouri River, to the city of Bismarck, N. Dak., was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It repeals the provision contained in an act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes" (29 Stat. L., pp. 413–435), reading as follows:

That the city of Bismarck, in the State of North Dakota, by and through its regular city council, shall have authority to use, upon lease from the Government by the Secretary of the Interior, Sibley Island, an island in the Missouri River near said city of Bismarck, for a public park: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to authorize the felling of timber on said island for sale or consumption, nor shall any timber be cut save for the purpose of improving or beautifying the grounds.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WATER SUPPLY FROM RECLAMATION PROJECTS.

The bill (S. 3392) for furnishing water supply for miscellaneous purposes in connection with reclamation projects was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of the Interior, in connection with the operations under the reclamation law, to enter into contract to supply water from any project irrigation system for other purposes than irrigation, upon such conditions of delivery, use, and payment as he may deem proper, provided that no such contract shall be entered into except upon a showing that there is no other practicable source of water supply for the purpose, and provided further that no water shall be furnished for the uses aforesaid unless the delivery of such water shall not be detrimental to the water service for such irrigation project.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LANDS FOR SCHOOL PURPOSES.

The bill (S. 3570) granting lands for school purposes in Government town sites on reclamation projects was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, on page 1, line 7, after the word "district," to strike out "any lands within a Government town site situated within such school district as may be required by said district for school buildings and grounds," and insert "such unappropriated undisposed of lands within any Government reclamation town site situated within such school district as, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior, are necessary for use by said district for school buildings and grounds," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be hereby authorized upon application by the proper officers of a school district located wholly or in part within the boundaries of a project of the United States Reclamation Service, to issue patent conveying to such district such unappropriated undisposed of lands within any Government reclamation town site situated within such school district as, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior, are necessary for use by said district for school buildings and grounds.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MILK RIVER VALLEY GUN CLUB.

The bill (S. 2460) authorizing the issuance of patent to the Milk River Valley Gun Club was announced as next in order.

Mr. LENROOT. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over, under objection.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wisconsin state his objection? I might explain the bill to his satisfaction or the bill might be amended so as to overcome the objection.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I will state to the Senator that I should have no objection to the bill if it had in it the provision recommended by the Secretary with reference to the use to which this land is to be put, and the reversion, as in the bill just passed in the case of an island.

Mr. MYERS. I am willing to have any reasonable amendment made. May the bill be read?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the bill will be read, although objection has been made to its consideration.

Mr. LENROOT. I will withhold the objection.

Mr. MYERS. The Senator is willing to withhold it temporarily, I understand.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I believe the objection of the Senator from Wisconsin is because the bill does not provide that if the land ever ceases to be used by this club it is to revert to the United States. I wish to say in explanation that personally I would have no objection to having the bill so amended as to meet that objection, but the matter was before the committee, and this question was discussed there: Should the bill provide that if the land should ever cease to be used for the purposes designed it should revert to the Government and nothing be charged for it, or should the full price be charged without the reversionary clause? Now, I do not object to either provision, or both; but without my suggestion the committee of its own accord, I think unanimously, took the view that it would not be right to make the members of this club pay the full price that any entryman under the reclamation project would have to pay, and then provide that if they ceased to use the land for their purposes it should revert to the Government. The committee was willing to have the reversion clause without the price or to have the price without the reversion clause, but was not willing to exact both, and I think there was justice in it. This land is under the Sun River reclamation project, and the price fixed in the bill is what any entryman would have to pay.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. MYERS. With pleasure.

Mr. CURTIS. I want to ask the Senator if the committee found out the cost of putting in the irrigation project per acre?

Mr. MYERS. They had some information on that point. An estimate of that was before them from the department, I believe. Yes; they arrived at a conclusion as to that, and had before them information on which to base it. The committee decided to make these people pay the full price for the land, just what an entryman would have to pay, and it does seem to me there is justice in this; that is, if these parties pay the full price for the land, just what anybody else would pay, they ought to own the land in fee simple, and have a patent to it, and not have it revert to the Government upon any contingency.

The land involved is mostly covered by water. There is a lake on it. That portion covered by water is not fit for agricultural entry at all. For many years it has been used by people of that section as a hunting preserve, a place to shoot ducks, and the people who constitute this club want to put up a boathouse and make some little improvements there, and they do not care to do it unless they can get title. The land for which they are to pay $1.25 per acre is under water the year around, and is fit for nothing but duck shooting. It can never be farmed. It would never be entered for agricultural purposes. The land for which $50 per acre is to be charged is a few acres of dry land, without any water right, adjacent to the lake. The committee took the view that if they were required to pay the full price, the same as anybody else would pay, they ought to hold the land outright, the same as anybody else; but if the Senator wants to add a reversionary clause, if he thinks it right and just to so amend it, I shall not object.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I will say in reply to the Senator that no one else would have the privilege of buying this land at the price that is fixed in the bill. They would have to comply with the provisions of law with respect to this land being within an irrigation project; and we certainly ought not to permit a gun club to secure this land under conditions under which no other individual could secure it, and the next day, if they saw fit, sell it.

I have no objection to the bill if those provisions are inserted that we are inserting in all bills of this kind.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, does the Senator observe that this land, or 30 acres of it, is required to bring a payment of $50 per acre? Fifty dollars per acre for land that has not a water right is an enormous price. It is not ordinarily salable for any such amount as that. In our country the school land that has not a water right generally sells on the average for, I think, $11.50 an acre. Here is a charge of $50 an acre. That is what the committee took into consideration, I remember, when we considered this bill. If a man has to pay $50 an acre for land that is in an arid country, without a water right, it does seem to me that he ought to have title to it.

Mr. LENROOT. The answer to that, if I may suggest to the Senator, is that if $50 an acre is too great a sum to pay for this land, the committee should have reduced the price; but Congress ought not to establish the precedent of conveying land to a gun club or a fishing club with the right to sell that land the next day. If we are to give them any rights, it should be for the purpose for which they seek the land; and if they do not desire to use it, the land ought to revert to the Government.

I shall insist upon the objection unless this amendment is made.

Mr. MYERS. I am not going to make any objection to the amendment suggested, but I want to explain a little further. I will say, in reply to the statement made by the Senator from Wisconsin a moment ago, that $1.25 is the price to be paid for the land under water, the price paid for all Government land without any water right—land that can not be irrigated—while $50 an acre is the estimated cost of putting water on the land embraced in this reclamation project. Therefore the parties are to be charged $50 per acre for the thirty odd acres of dry land provided for in the bill, just what an entryman who would get absolute patent to it would have to pay. That is all that an entryman would have to pay for this land, and he would get his title in fee forever, and the committee thought that that was all it was fair to require of these people. However, in view of the fact that the Senator from Wisconsin says he will object unless such an amendment as he suggests is offered, I move that it be amended by inserting, at an appropriate place, the amendment to which the Senator from Wisconsin refers. I will ask him to suggest the language, inasmuch as he is demanding the amendment.

Mr. LENROOT. I have it here:

Provided, That if the land is ever used for any purpose other than that herein authorized, the title thereto shall revert to and revest in the United States.

Mr. MYERS. I have no objection to that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana offers an amendment, which will be stated by the Secretary.

Mr. MYERS. I should prefer that it be offered by the Senator from Wisconsin.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add, at the proper place in the bill, the following proviso:

Provided, That if the land is ever used for any purpose other than that herein authorized, the title thereto shall revert to and revest in the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, there should be one other amendment. After the word "acres," in line 1, page 2, I move to insert the words "for a game preserve."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 1, after the word "acres," it is proposed to insert the words "for a game preserve."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The committee reports certain amendments, which will be stated.

The first amendment was, on page 1, line 9, after the words "per acre," to insert "and the further payment of $50 per irrigable acre for the construction of irrigation works for the Milk River irrigation project, the irrigable area being fixed at 30 acres," so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue patent to the Milk River Valley Gun Club for lots 5 and 6 and the southeast quarter of the southwest quarter of section 32, township 31 north, range 31 east, Montana meridian, Montana, containing 76.69 acres, upon payment of $1.25 per acre and the further payment of $50 per irrigable acre for the construction of irrigation works for the Milk River irrigation project, the irrigable area being fixed at 30 acres, for a game preserve.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 14, after the words "ten hundred and ninety-five," to insert "and the patent shall also reserve to the United States right of way for canals, ditches, and telephone lines heretofore or hereafter constructed by the authority of the United States," so as to read:

Provided, That said Milk River Valley Gun Club shall apply for patent and tender full payment within six months from the date of approval of this act: Provided further, That patent issued hereunder shall contain a reservation to the United States of all gas, oil, coal, and other mineral deposits that may be found in said land, and the right to the use of the land for extracting the same, and shall be subject to all rights under the T. E. Brady Canal and Bowdoin Lake Reservoir, approved by the Secretary of the Interior October 23, 1901, under the act approved March 3, 1891 (26 Stat. L., p. 1095), and the patent shall also reserve to the United States right of way for canals, ditches, and telephone lines heretofore or hereafter constructed by the authority of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONSOLIDATION OF NATIONAL-FOREST LANDS.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, yesterday when Senate bill 93 was reached the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] objected, and later said that he would withdraw his objection. I should like to ask to return to that bill, as the objection to its consideration has been withdrawn. It is Order of Business 158.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will return to Order of Business 158.

The bill (S. 93) to consolidate national-forest lands was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of the Interior, for the purpose of consolidating the Government lands within national forests, and where the public interests will be benefited, to accept title to nonmineral lands within the exterior boundaries of the national forests, and, upon recommendation of the Secretary of Agriculture, to exchange nonmineral Government lands within any national forest, or timber within such forest, for privately owned lands of equal value and chiefly valuable for national-forest purposes within the exterior boundaries of the same national forest, and, upon the acceptance of title, lands deeded to the United States within national forests shall become parts of the national forests in which they are situated, provided that not more than 200,000 acres shall be exchanged within any calendar year.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

KATHERINE MACDONALD.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, yesterday in my absence the bill (S. 2975) for the relief of Katherine Macdonald was passed over on objection. I am sure that the Senator who objected to it simply did so because I was absent. He has no personal objection, because I have talked to him about it. I ask unanimous consent that we recur to that bill and see if there is any objection to it to-day; and if not, that it may be considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Montana? The Chair hears none.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, on page 1, line 5, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$9,819" and insert "$9,117," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $9,117 to and for Katherine Macdonald, of Butte, Mont., for and on account of unpaid claims held by her on account of work and services performed on or supplies furnished for the construction of the Corbett Tunnel, a part of the Shoshone reclamation project in the State of Wyoming.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, what is the bill?

Mr. MYERS. I ask that the entire bill be read, so that the Senator may hear it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill as amended.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, is this the bill that has been up every year for the past four or five years?

Mr. MYERS. Oh, no; this is not the same bill. I can explain it to the Senator, if he desires an explanation besides the reading of the bill.

Mr. KENYON. It sounds very much like a similar bill.

Mr. MYERS. Does the Senator desire a brief explanation of it?

Mr. KENYON. Yes.

Mr. MYERS. I will explain briefly. Here is all there is to it: For years and years Mrs. Macdonald has been trying to get Congress to appropriate enough money to pay all legitimate claims on account of the construction of the Corbett Tunnel, a part of the Shoshone reclamation project, in Wyoming, arising from the failure of a contractor who quit and failed, owing nearly everybody who had done any work or furnished any supplies, and leaving it to the Government to take hold of the project and finish it. First there was an appropriation of $42,000 asked for, on the understanding that that was sufficient. It was voted by both branches of Congress, after a great deal of delay, and that sum was appropriated, and the Secretary of the Interior was authorized to audit claims presented and order the Treasury to pay the claims of all claimants who could prove to his satisfaction that their claims were just. He was to do this under rules and regulations to be prescribed by him, and one of the rules decreed by him was that all claims presented must be verified as to their genuineness and good faith by the affidavit of the original claimant, just as a claimant has to support his claim by his affidavit before a county court or board of county commissioners or board of supervisors when presented for payment.

The Secretary of the Interior set a certain time for thus proving and filing claims, which limit was extended several times, and finally he fixed a certain arbitrary definite time limit and by that time everybody had to get in with the required proof. A great many people did file their claims. Mrs. Macdonald held a large number of claims—some ten or twelve or fourteen thousand dollars of claims—by assignment, for which she had paid a bona fide consideration. A few of her claims, perhaps two or three thousand dollars' worth of her claims, were verified in the manner required by the Secretary of the Interior—that is, by the assignor—and were paid, along with the others; but there were more than $9,000 worth of her claims which Mrs. Macdonald swears are just and bona fide claims and for which she paid a full and valuable consideration, but in support of which she was unable to get the affidavits of the original claimants because, on account of the great delay occasioned by the dilatoriness of Congress in making appropriations, they had scattered from Alaska to Africa and could not be located. These claims are all right in every way, except that she could not get the formal affidavit of the original claimants required by a rule of the Secretary of the Interior.

She makes affidavit as to what they were rendered for and the fact that she paid for them full consideration, and now she is shut out from payment of them on account of a technical rule of the Secretary of the Interior that by a certain time she had to produce the affidavits of each and every one of the claimants, hundreds of them in number, as to the validity of the claims, and she was not able to do it. She was not able on account of causes beyond her control and not her fault.

This bill was referred to the Interior Department, and it has made reply that it had no objection to the making of the appropriation, and that if Congress saw fit to appropriate the money it had nothing to say against it. Everyone interested has gotten his money except Mrs. Macdonald, and she has been out thousands and thousands of dollars of expense in being down here for years working on this, not only for herself but for others who have benefited at her expense, and the other people for whom she worked got dollar for dollar, a hundred cents on the dollar, of their claims without being at a cent of expense, and she has not gotten more than a very small part of what is due her. The people who have benefited at her expense, too, benefited as a result of her tireless labor and they will not compensate her in one cent. It is terribly hard, a gross injustice.

Mr. FALL. As I understand, this lady was here in Washington and instrumental in securing the appropriation of $42,000.

Mr. MYERS. She was. It was due to her labors solely.

Mr. FALL. For the payment of these claims?

Mr. MYERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. FALL. Undoubtedly, then, her claims were estimated for in the $42,000.

Mr. MYERS. I want to cover that point. I forgot to make mention of it. It was discovered, after the sum of $42,000 was appropriated and after it became known that the claims were to be filed with the Secretary of the Interior and would be paid, that that sum was not sufficient and a subsequent appropriation, solely through the efforts of Mrs. Macdonald, was made of $13,000, and that was to include and did include the $9,000 in this bill, but Mrs. Macdonald was not able to make the technical proof required by the Secretary of the Interior—that is, was not able to locate the claimants and furnish their affidavits—and the money has never been paid to her, and this bill is to pay it to her in spite of her inability to provide the affidavits of scores of scattered assignors, required by the rule of the Secretary of the Interior. It is intended to remedy a very great and unjust hardship.

Mr. FALL. Does the bill provide that the $9,000, or whatever the amount is, shall be paid out of the unexpended balance of that $13,000?

Mr. MYERS. It will be tantamount to that. That has reverted to the Treasury, because it was not called for in the time set. This is just as though she had been able to make her required proof within the required time. Then, the $9,000 would have been paid out of the $13,000. It was not, through no fault of Mrs. Macdonald. The $9,000 remained in the Treasury, and this bill simply reappropriates it. It is an act of plain, simple justice.

Mr. FALL. Does the report of the Secretary show that $13,000 was not used and did revert to the Treasury?

Mr. MYERS. The report of the Secretary of the Interior is short and I will read it. It states everything which he deemed necessary to say about the matter. I will turn to it immediately. I can find it in a second. Here is the report. I have it now.

Mr. FALL. It is just upon that specific proposition that I made the inquiry.

Mr. MYERS. It will not take me long to read it:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, December 1, 1917.

MY DEAR SENATOR: By reference of your committee dated October 9, 1917, receipt is acknowledged of copy of S. 2975, Sixty-fifth Congress, first session, for the relief of Katherine Macdonald. Your committee requested that this department submit information as to the law and facts in relation to the subject matter of the proposed enactment, and for such suggestions as this department may see fit to offer.

Under public resolution No. 56, approved August 24, 1912, the sum of $42,000 was appropriated for payment to those persons who have and hold, and who have presented or may present, claims remaining unpaid on account of labor, supplies, materials, or cash furnished to the contractor or the subcontractor and used in the construction of the Corbett Tunnel, as a part of the Shoshone irrigation project in the State of Wyoming. Under the express authority contained in public resolution No. 56, this office made a careful investigation to determine all valid outstanding claims against the contractor or subcontractor, and in the course of such efforts resorted to the fullest possible publicity in securing direct evidence and testimony from the holders of all such claims. It is noted that the bill now pending contains provision for the appropriation of the sum of $9,819 for and on account of unpaid claims held by Mrs. Katherine Macdonald, of Butte, Mont., on account of work and services performed on or supplies furnished for the construction of the Corbett Tunnel, a part of the Shoshone reclamation project in the State of Wyoming.

During the negotiations looking toward settlement of claims under public resolution No. 56, of August 24, 1912, Mrs. Macdonald appeared at frequent intervals and was kept fully advised of the progress of settlement under the claims in question. She held power of attorney from a number of the claimants, and held assignments for collection from a number of others. Certain rights and interests owned by Mrs. Macdonald in connection with certain of these claims were submitted to the department and, after careful investigation, were by this department certified with the other claims to the Secretary of the Treasury, and were paid from the fund provided by said resolution.

The present bill proposes to appropriate, from any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum mentioned for Mrs. Macdonald. Inasmuch as this department has completed the settlement of claims under the appropriation made by public resolution No. 56, and as the present bill makes no appropriation out of the reclamation fund chargeable to the water users, but, as indicated, proposes an appropriation out of general funds in the Treasury, I do not feel that this department should express an opinion as to whether or not payment should be made, the matter being one wholly for the consideration and determination of Congress.

Cordially, yours, FRANKLIN K. LANE,
Secretary.

HON. HENRY L. MYERS,
Chairman Committee on Public Lands,
United States Senate.

I can say to the Senator that I am positively sure that this $9,000 was included in the $13,000, the second appropriation made. I know it for the reason that Mrs. Macdonald held by assignment all these claims at that time, and the $13,000 was intended to cover all her claims held by assignment, as well as the claims of all others; but her claims were not paid along with the others, for she was not able to make the formal technical proof required. Yet she swears herself the claims are just, true, and bona fide, and wholly unpaid and assigned to her for valuable consideration. I think that enough proof.

I have in the committee room a further communication from the Secretary of the Interior, giving the names of original claimants and amounts of every claim not paid and now held by Mrs. Macdonald and the nature of the claims, which this money would cover. The bill as introduced called for a little more than the claims held by Mrs. Macdonald on file in the Interior Department, as shown by the department files, and for that reason the committee amended it and cut down the amount to exactly the amount of unpaid bills held by Mrs. Macdonald and on file in the Interior Department, as shown by the letter of the Secretary of the Interior. The amount now conforms to the figures of that official. Mrs. Macdonald is a most worthy woman, and it would be grossly unjust not to pay her this money.

Mr. FALL. The report does not show that there was any lack of money to pay the claims that the department found to be just claims.

Mr. MYERS. There was no lack of money. That was not the trouble. There was a surplus of money, but Mrs. Macdonald could not get what was due her through inability to find scattered original claimants.

Mr. FALL. The department says that they investigated all the claims and reported to the Secretary of the Treasury all those that should be paid.

Mr. MYERS. That investigation meant this——

Mr. FALL. Pardon me. The department, as I understand the report, says that they have nothing to do with it and refused to advise the Senate committee upon this matter, because if the Senate wants to appropriate out of the general funds money for Mrs. Macdonald the department has nothing to do with it. If it were to be paid out of any reclamation claims or out of any fund which the department has under control, or which the Senate might trust to the department, I infer there might be a different result. In other words, suppose the appropriation was made now directly to the department to be used in the payment of any claims which they found just which were overlooked under the original claim or resolution, what would the report of the department be upon that proposition?

Mr. MYERS. It would probably be adverse, for the reason that their determination of what is a just claim is what is supported by an affidavit of the original claimant. That was their sole test of what was a just claim. No matter how just a claim, unless so supported it was rejected. That is why these assigned claims of Mrs. Macdonald's were rejected.

Mr. FALL. I presume, although that might be true, the department would admit other proof of the validity of the claim.

Mr. MYERS. No; it would not, most positively. I know, as a matter of fact, the department required absolutely that claims must be supported by the affidavit of the original claimant, and these claims were rejected for the sole reason that they were not so supported. No other proof was permitted.

Mr. FALL. There is no question about the fact. The rule of law will provide for the best evidence, and before you can introduce any other evidence you must show that it is impossible to produce the best evidence. That is required.

Mr. MYERS. The original resolution provided that the money appropriated should be paid out under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior might prescribe, and he prescribed the rule that a claim must be verified by the affidavit of the original claimant or it would not be paid. Mrs. Macdonald was simply unable to comply with that in the case of all her assigned claims, because the original claimants were scattered from Alaska to Africa. That is the gist of the whole matter. It was not her fault. The claims are honest, bona fide, and all right, and I ask Congress to order them paid. It has the power.

Mr. FALL. I have no interest in this matter further than that the department does not recommend the payment.

Mr. MYERS. No; it does not recommend the payment and it does not object to it. It leaves the matter to Congress, and I trust the fairness of Congress. Lots of you know all about this. Let us do justice to this worthy woman.

Mr. FALL. It is simply an appropriation out of the general fund. I should like to know if, in the list of claims the Senator has in his committee room, to which he has referred, there are any for attorney fees.

Mr. MYERS. Absolutely none whatever; not one.

Mr. FALL. What are the claims for?

Mr. MYERS. Work, labor, and supplies furnished; not a cent for attorney fees; not a cent for lobbying or expenses of collection, nor anything else whatever. Everything is for labor performed, supplies furnished; just as were the other claims that were paid. They are legitimate, honest, bona fide.

Mr. FALL. So far as I am concerned I will not vote for the appropriation made in the bill, but I shall make no further objection to it.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator from Montana yield to me?

Mr. MYERS. With pleasure.

Mr. LENROOT. Is it not true that in investigating these claims the department had access to the books of the contractors and most of the subcontractors and used that means of evidence to determine what claims were just?

Mr. MYERS. I could not say as to that. I do say, however, that one absolute, ironclad requirement of the department was that every claim should be accompanied by the affidavit of the original claimant, and Mrs. Macdonald, as to these particular claims, was unable to find the original claimants, and for that reason, and that reason only, these claims were rejected.

Mr. LENROOT. May I ask the Senator what was the total amount of Mrs. Macdonald's claims?

Mr. MYERS. She had gotten, I think, $3,000 or $4,000 of her own claims, and those, together with the claims held by assignment, amounted to $12,000 or $15,000, all told, I think; something like that sum. She has not gotten nearly enough out of it to pay her expenses here, by which others profited. Nobody would have gotten a cent had it not been for her.

Mr. LENROOT. Does not the Senator think it is a little peculiar that out of $13,000 worth of claims she could only present the required proof in three or four thousand dollars' worth?

Mr. MYERS. No; I do not think that is peculiar at all, for this matter was delayed by Congress for years before any payments were made. The claims now held by Mrs. Macdonald are assigned claims. A man who works in a tunnel or on a canal or something of that kind is liable to be in Alaska in 30 days from that time. The laborers were largely floaters. They came and went, nobody knows where.

Mr. LENROOT. Is it not a fact, may I ask the Senator, that the great bulk of these alleged claims were for supplies and not for work and labor at all?

Mr. MYERS. Some of them were for supplies. I can not say whether the bulk of them were or not.

Mr. LENROOT. In furnishing these supplies, how did it happen that all the people who furnished the supplies suddenly disappeared to Alaska, Africa, or elsewhere?

Mr. MYERS. The people who furnished the supplies did not disappear suddenly. I think as to this particular $9,000 of claims most of them are for labor performed. I can send to my committee room and get the list in a minute, if the Senator desires to have it submitted. I am sure most of it is for labor; some doubtless for supplies. A man may sell a load of hay, he may furnish some tools or implements, and in six months or a year he may not be in that part of the country at all. There is nothing strange about that in the West. It is common.

Mr. LENROOT. I object to the bill, Mr. President.

Mr. MYERS. Did the Senator object?

Mr. LENROOT. I object.

Mr. FLETCHER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 10069, the river and harbor bill.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Will not the Senator from Florida let us proceed with the calendar? We have been waiting here to reach some bills that have been reported. We have had but one call of the calendar.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am perfectly willing to go on with it later, but I have waited now from shortly after 12 o'clock until a quarter after 2, and I think the Senator will agree that that is about all I could do.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Does the Senator mean that after he gets started on his bill he will agree to lay it aside temporarily?

Mr. FLETCHER. I may not be able to do that, but I will suggest that to-morrow morning the calendar can be taken up.

Mr. MYERS. I did not understand what was the objection made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STERLING in the chair). Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. MYERS. Was objection made to my request?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There was.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think we ought to go on with the river and harbor bill now. It would take the whole afternoon to go through with the calendar. We have spent too much time in discussion.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The Senator does not expect to take up the morning hour to-morrow with his bill?

Mr. FLETCHER. I hardly think so. We can pass the bill in a little while I think.

LAND AT OLYMPIA, WASH.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I wish to ask to have one bill transferred to the calendar under Rule IX.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have no objection to that.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I make this request so that the bill will not be likely to come up when I am absent. It is the bill (S. 3434) prohibiting the issuance of patent under lieu selection 2904, serial 1034, Olympia, Wash., reported adversely. I desire to discuss it at some length before the Senate at an opportune time. So I ask that it be transferred to the calendar under Rule IX.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 10069, the river and harbor appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 10069) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I make the point of no quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Baird	Fletcher	Kellogg	Nelson
Bankhead	France	Kenyon	New
Beckham	Gallinger	King	Norris
Borah	Gronna	Kirby	Nugent
Calder	Harding	Lenroot	Overman
Culberson	Hardwick	Lewis	Page

Shields	Sutherland	Walsh

Mr. BECKHAM. I wish to announce that my colleague, the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES], is detained by illness.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. THOMAS] on account of illness.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. My colleague [Mr. GOFF] is absent owing to illness.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I desire to announce that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] is necessarily absent on official business.

Mr. LEWIS. I rise to announce that the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] is absent on important public business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-four Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that it be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments be first considered.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is not a lengthy bill. I think it ought to be read first in the ordinary way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is objection to the request of the Senator from Florida, and the Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 8, line 7, after the words "Mobile Harbor and Bar," to strike out "$200,000" and insert "$340,000"; and, in line 8, after the words "in all," to strike out "$360,000" and insert "$500,000," so as to make the clause read:

Mobile Harbor and Bar, and channel connecting Mobile Bay and Mississippi Sound, Ala.: For maintenance, $160,000; continuing improvement of Mobile Harbor and Bar, $340,000; in all, $500,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, line 10, after the word "maintenance," to strike out "$98,850; continuing improvement and for maintenance of Fox River, $22,500; in all," so as to make the clause read:

Manistique Harbor, Mich.; Menominee, Oconto, Green Bay, Algoma, Kewaunee, Two Rivers, Manitowoc, Sheboygan, Port Washington, Milwaukee, Racine, Kenosha, and Waukegan Harbors, Sturgeon Bay and Lake Michigan Ship Canal, and Fox River, Wis.: For maintenance, $121,350.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, line 17, after "$100,000," to insert "for improvement in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 1072, Sixty-fifth Congress, second session, and subject to the conditions set forth in said document, $204,000; in all, $304,000," so as to read:

Los Angeles Harbor, Cal.: Continuing improvement in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 896, Sixty-third Congress, second session, and subject to the conditions set forth in said document, $100,000; for improvement in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 1072, Sixty-fifth Congress, second session, and subject to the conditions set forth in said document, $204,000; in all, $304,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, on behalf of the Committee on Commerce, I now desire to offer some further amendments. On page 18, line 19, after the word "cost," I move to insert "taking into account overhead expenses, depreciation, and interest on capital invested, properly chargeable to such work."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 4, page 18, line 19, after the word "cost," it is proposed to insert "taking into account overhead expenses, depreciation, and interest on capital invested, properly chargeable to such work," so as to read:

SEC. 4. That no part of the funds herein or hereafter appropriated for works of river and harbor improvement shall be used to pay for any work done by private contract if the contract price is more than 25 per cent in excess of the estimated cost, taking into account overhead expenses, depreciation, and interest on capital invested, properly chargeable to such work, of doing the work by Government plant.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER. On page 21, after line 19, I send to the desk an amendment to be inserted as a new section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 21, after line 19, it is proposed to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 8. That if the Secretary of War shall determine that any of the contracts for work of river and harbor improvements entered into but not completed prior to April 6, 1917, the date of the entrance of the United States into the war with Germany, have become inequitable and unjust on account of increased cost of material and labor and other unforeseen conditions arising out of the war, he is hereby authorized, in his discretion and with the consent of the contractors, to modify and readjust the terms of said contracts in such manner as he may deem equitable and just: Provided, That said modifications and readjustments shall apply only to work under said contracts remaining to be done hereafter and shall not include any relief for work performed heretofore under said contracts, and any such sum as may be necessary to provide for the increased cost of the contracts due to said modifications and readjustments, not exceeding the sum of $2,000,000, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided further, That as a condition of any such contract be so modified, the Secretary of War shall have the right at the end of any fiscal year until the contract is completed to make such further modifications as in his judgment shall be advantageous to the United States and just to the contractor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Florida.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER. I send to the desk another amendment to be inserted as section 9, and ask that it be read by the Secretary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. After the amendment just agreed to it is proposed to add as a new section the following:

SEC. 9. That hereafter when the expenses of persons engaged in field work or traveling on official business outside of the District of Columbia and away from their designated posts of duty are chargeable to appropriations of the Engineer Department, a per diem of not exceeding $4 may be allowed in lieu of subsistence when not otherwise fixed by law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. Might I ask the Senator in charge of the bill if it is his object to continue its consideration, if he desires to hold a session to-morrow in the event that the bill should not be completed to-day, or is he willing that the bill should go over until Monday if the bill is not completed to-day?

Mr. FLETCHER. I will say to the Senator from Illinois, Mr. President, that I see no reason why the bill should not be completed in 30 minutes. The amendment which I have just offered is the last committee amendment, and that has just been agreed to. I therefore think the bill will be completed very shortly. I do not know why it should not be.

Mr. KENYON. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee in reference to the following item, on page 6 of the bill:

For improvement to provide a channel 40 feet deep and 1,000 feet wide, extending from the sea to the Charleston Navy Yard, $1,500,000.

Is there any connection now between the sea and the Charleston Navy Yard?

Mr. FLETCHER. Well, there is, of course, but this is to make the channel 40 feet deep and a thousand feet wide. It is to widen and deepen the present channel.

Mr. KENYON. What are the dimensions of the present channel?

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not know that I can give precisely the width and depth of the present channel, but I think it is 30 feet deep and probably 400 feet wide—something like that. In connection with that improvement, I will say to the Senator the naval appropriation bill provides for a dry dock being built there, and this appropriation, as the Senator will observe, is on condition—

That this work shall not be undertaken until the proposed new dry dock at this navy yard, carrying a depth of 40 feet of water over the blocks, has been authorized; in all, $1,610,000.

So that this appropriation is really conditioned upon the dry dock being built there, and such a dry dock as will require a depth of 40 feet of water over the blocks. Of course, if the dry dock is built we ought to provide a channel to it of the depth that is required to make it useful.

Mr. KENYON. I understand that; but I was a little curious from the wording to know whether there was now any connection between the sea and the navy yard.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] hands me the Report of the Chief of Engineers, which states that—

The existing project provides for securing and maintaining, by the construction of jetties and auxiliary dredging, an entrance channel across the harbor bar 30 feet deep at mean low water, with a width of 500 feet between the jetties and of 1,000 feet to the seaward thereof.

That is the existing project, as found on page 641 of volume 1 of the Report of the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, for 1917.

Mr. KENYON. Then this appropriation will only be in force, as I understand, if an appropriation is made in the naval bill for the dry dock?

Mr. FLETCHER. Precisely.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the Senator tell us how far the navy yard is from the sea?

Mr. FLETCHER. I can not say precisely as to that. As I understand the situation, the Navy Department recommends this improvement; in fact, the establishment of a naval base at Charleston; and upon the recommendation of the Navy Department that it was essential as a war measure, the Secretary of War certifies this improvement to Congress as a war measure, and it is included in this bill. Just how far that navy yard is from the sea I am not prepared to state; I only know that it is claimed by the Navy Department, and by the War Department as well, that this is a necessary improvement to make as a war measure.

Mr. LENROOT. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add as a new section the following:

SEC. 10. That no new work of improvement appropriated for in this act, involving an expenditure during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, of more than $100,000, shall be undertaken until the Secretary of the Treasury shall first certify to the Secretary of War that the condition of the Treasury is such that such expenditure can be made without injury to the war needs of the Government: Provided, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to any expenditure heretofore specifically recommended by the Secretary of War as a war emergency.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, this bill in peace times would be considered a very moderate bill, a bill to which there could be very little objection. The bill carries a total of $19,227,000. Two million three hundred and fifty-eight thousand dollars of this sum is for maintenance and $16,669,000 is for further improvements. These improvements may be divided into three classes: First, improvements recommended by the War Department as war-emergency measures; second, improvements to complete existing works; and third, improvements involving appropriations for the beginning of new work, and this amounts to about $8,000,000. It is this $8,000,000 to which the amendment which I have proposed will apply. Under the amendment which I have proposed before this $8,000,000 for new work can be expended the Secretary of the Treasury would be required to certify to the Secretary of War that the condition of the Treasury is such that these expenditures can be made without injury to the war needs of the Government.

Now, I wish to take two or three illustrations of the class of improvements to which the amendment that I have proposed will apply. One of them is the Ohio River. The bill appropriates $5,000,000 for the further improvement of the Ohio River. According to the report of the Board of Engineers, of that $5,000,000, $3,632,000 will be utilized for beginning the construction of two locks, the completion of which will take two or three or four years. The remainder of the $5,000,000 will be utilized for completing the construction of locks already begun.

Mr. President, it does seem to me that at this time, when we are attempting to mobilize all the resources of our Nation to prosecute this war, when we are asking private industry to suspend all nonessential work, the Government itself ought not to undertake the expenditure of millions of dollars upon work that is not essential in the carrying on of the war. No appropriation that is carried in this bill or in any other bill, except for maintenance—maintaining the existing Government or, in the case of rivers and harbors, maintaining existing rivers and harbors and completing improvements already begun—ought to be made, unless it can be shown that there would be an immediate and direct benefit in the prosecution of the war. That can not be done in the case of the Ohio River; it can not be done in the case of the Missouri River, the Mississippi River, and a number of other items in the bill.

In the case of the Missouri River the bill carries an appropriation of $500,000 for further improvement and maintenance. According to the report of the Board of Engineers, $100,000 of this sum will be used for maintenance of the Missouri River from Kansas City to the mouth. Four hundred thousand dollars will be utilized for the further improvement of the river, an improvement that can not be for a number of years of any substantial benefit to the commerce of that section, because it will require many millions of dollars in the future to be expended upon the Missouri River before the $400,000 that is proposed to be expended in the next fiscal year will be of any substantial benefit, if it ever is of any benefit; and indeed, Mr. President, it is a serious question whether the improvement of the Missouri River ever will be of any benefit to the commerce of this country.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes, sir.

Mr. KING. Does not the Senator know that the greater the appropriations for the Mississippi and the Missouri and many of these other rivers the less commerce is carried upon the waters of those rivers?

Mr. LENROOT. That seems to have been the fact as to both the Ohio River and the Missouri River. In the case of the Ohio River we are carrying upon it to-day a commerce 50 per cent less than was carried upon the Ohio River before the Government made any improvements at all upon it. In the case of the Missouri River, upon which we have already expended a number of millions of dollars, the commerce last year upon all parts of that stretch of the river amounted, as I recollect it, to only about 28,000 tons, costing the Government $4 a ton in maintenance alone, saying nothing of any return to the Government upon the capital cost of the river.

With reference to the Missouri River, the Board of Engineers frankly confess that this expenditure upon the Missouri River is nothing but a commercial experiment; that they will not venture any prophecy, even, as to whether there will ever be any return to the United States for the millions of dollars that have been, and are proposed to be, expended upon the Missouri River.

I wish to read from the hearings before the committee. I asked Col. Newcomer this question:

This whole improvement is an experiment, is it not?

Col. NEWCOMER. Yes, sir; that is, it is an experiment in the sense that the economic justification for it in the utilization of the waterway remains to be determined.

Senator LENROOT. That is what I mean.

Col. NEWCOMER. Of course, we do not consider the improvement experimental.

Senator LENROOT. No; not the engineering; I understand that.

Is there any more reason to believe that this will be successful, or any more successful, than the improvement of the Mississippi River from the Ohio River to the mouth has been, as a commercial proposition?

Col. NEWCOMER. That has been the disturbing thing, of course, to us, to find a waterway of such good capacity so little used, at a place where it might be used. We believe that under the modified conditions of railroad control—railroad regulation—these through waterways, when completed, will have a very substantial use; and the Government has committed itself to the experiment of going ahead and providing this system of waterways.

Mr. President, with reference to the Government expending millions of dollars upon experiments I submit that the experiment that has been completed, the Mississippi River from St. Louis to the mouth, should show its justification before we go on to similar experiments elsewhere, especially at a time like this when the money that comes into the Treasury is needed for the prosecution of the war. The upper Mississippi River is another illustration of this matter. Col. Newcomer, of the Board of Engineers, testified before the House committee, and his attention was called to the testimony in the hearing before the Senate committee. Speaking of the estimate of $500,000 for the improvement and maintenance of the Mississippi River from the mouth of the Ohio to Minneapolis, he said:

Of course, this is not really so much a question of accommodating commerce as it is to provide for the operation of forces now organized for carrying on this work. We have quite an extensive Government plant and, of course, several contracting plants also, and it is very advisable to provide enough funds to keep them at work, as the plant is of special type, quite expensive, and should be kept in use. Of course, the commerce is not extensive.

Col. Newcomer was then asked, before the Senate committee, what percentage of the expenditure was labor cost, and he replied:

I judge that in that case, as in the others, it would run about 60 per cent; we estimate ordinarily from 50 to 60 per cent; I think this would be near the upper limit.

So, Mr. President, we have a proposition here, in the case of the Mississippi River, to appropriate $500,000, $400,000 of which will be spent for the improvement. Col. Newcomer testifies that it will not affect commerce, but he wants $400,000 for what purpose? To keep up the plant and pay more than one-half of that amount to keep labor employed, when we all know that labor in this country from one coast to the other is necessary to be employed in war purposes and not for the purpose of keeping up any organization or any equipment.

Mr. President, in all private industries private contractors are compelled to suffer suspension of work because of the war conditions that prevail, and the Government itself ought to set an example by doing likewise. However, I realize the situation that exists. The only thing that I suggest in the amendment that I have proposed is that before such works as are suggested shall be entered upon the Secretary of the Treasury shall certify to the Secretary of War that the condition of the Treasury is such that these expenditures can be made without injury to the war needs of the Government.

Mr. President, this amendment that I have proposed was proposed in the committee, and it was submitted, very properly, to the Chief of Engineers, and the Chief of Engineers made a report to the committee upon this and other amendments that had been proposed in the committee, and I wish to read the report of the Chief of Engineers upon the amendment that is now pending. He says:

This amendment is deemed unnecessary in view of the moderate amount carried by the bill, as compared with the enormous expenditures for war purposes that the Government is undertaking and its undoubted ability to provide for this work to the extent that the public interests require.

Mr. President, it was with great surprise and much more regret that I found the Chief of Engineers taking this position with reference to an expenditure to be made by the Government. The effect of it is that the Engineer's Office says that because we are spending billions upon billions of dollars in prosecuting the war, therefore there should be no objection to our spending a few million dollars upon nonessentials in war prosecution.

Why, Mr. President, the reason why there is need of the greatest economy, the reason why we ought not to go on with many of these improvements that are in themselves meritorious, is because we are spending these billions of dollars for the purpose of prosecuting the war, because we will need, as time goes on, every dollar for war prosecution. Ah, but it may be said, $6,000,000 or $8,000,000 is all that is covered by my amendment, and that is a small sum compared with $30,000,000,000. Yes; but, Mr. President, $8,000,000 is one hundred and sixty thousand $50 liberty bonds. Four hundred thousand dollars for the improvement of the upper Mississippi River is eight thousand $50 liberty bonds. Mr. President, suppose we should in our next liberty-loan campaign say, "We want eight thousand $50 liberty-bond subscriptions for the purpose of carrying on, on the upper Mississippi River, an improvement that can not be of public value or benefit for years and years to come, and we want so many thousand $50 liberty-bond subscriptions for the purpose of beginning the construction of locks upon the Ohio River. We want eight thousand $50 liberty-bond subscriptions for the purpose of carrying on a commercial experiment on the Missouri River." Mr. President, how many subscriptions do you think we would get for purposes of that character if they were advertised?

We shall need, as I said a moment ago, as time goes on, every dollar that we can get, both from voluntary subscription and through taxation, for the purpose of carrying on the war; and it seems to me that it is a very reasonable proposition that the Secretary of the Treasury, who knows the condition of the Treasury, should be required to make this certificate that I have proposed, which means only that, as to the money in the Treasury, it shall be used first for the prosecution of the war, and that these improvements, which are unnecessary at this time, shall be undertaken only if the condition of the Treasury shall warrant it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I notice on page 6 that the appropriation for Brunswick Harbor, for maintenance, is $20,000. The appropriation heretofore has been $33,250. That amount, it has been estimated over and over again by the engineers, was necessary for yearly use to dredge the channel over the bar. I notice, further up upon that page, the appropriation of $1,500,000 to dig a canal up a river from Charleston to a navy yard.

The harbor of Brunswick certainly has no superior upon the Atlantic coast south of Norfolk. It is a landlocked harbor, large enough to float upon its waters the American Navy. It is probably the least expensive harbor on the coast to maintain. In 1857 the Government spent $130,000 to buy part of an island fronting that harbor for the purpose of placing upon it a navy yard. The Government still owns that property, with an area of 1,100 acres and a water frontage of 1½ to 2 miles. Why the navy yard was not built at Brunswick, where there is no necessity to dig a canal to get up to it, I do not know. Why this splendid piece of property in the best large harbor on the coast, bought by the Government for the purpose, was neglected, I do not know. I do know that this harbor has not received the attention its importance justified.

I understand that the reason for not giving more in the present appropriation is that the engineers have not used what was appropriated for last year. I wish to call attention to what have been the consequences of not using the small appropriation that was made.

It appears that on the bar a foot and four-tenths of depth has been lost by failure to give it attention. It appears that the channel at that point has narrowed 100 feet. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee what is the reason for reducing this appropriation, and I shall appreciate his giving it to the Senate. Then I wish to ask him what is our remedy?

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, in connection with Brunswick, I may say that the sentiment of the committee was that this is an important channel and one that ought to be properly maintained. We made a special effort to inquire as to the necessity there and the amount needed to maintain the channel at its proper depth, and we were assured by the Chief of Engineers that the $20,000 carried in the bill as it came from the House, together with what was on hand, would be ample to do that and all that the department would require for maintenance.

The question was raised before the committee by both the Senators from Georgia and the board of trade at Brunswick as to whether that $20,000 would be sufficient, and the committee referred the matter to the Chief of Engineers for a special examination and report, and this is what he says. His letter of May 6, 1918, explains fully the amount on hand and the amount required, and I will read it:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
Washington, May 6, 1918.

Hon. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
Chairman Committee on Commerce, United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: 1. In response to your letter of May 4, 1918, inclosing a letter from Senator HARDWICK, together with papers submitted to him by Mr. Smith, secretary of the Brunswick Board of Trade, Brunswick, Ga.—

And in response, also, to the appearance before the committee of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH]— indicating the need of additional funds for maintenance in that harbor, and suggesting that the item of $20,000 for this work in the pending river and harbor bill be increased to $33,250, which is said to be the annual cost of maintenance in that harbor, I have the honor to state that Mr. Smith is incorrect in his statement of the available balance. He gives this as $31,828.57 on March 31, from which a reservation of $8,000 has been made for special purposes, leaving only about $23,828.57 for maintenance dredging. As a matter of fact, the available balance the 31st of March was $39,828.57. Moreover, at least $5,000 said to be reserved for the extension of the east river training wall can be devoted to dredging, if necessary, so that with the additional amount of $20,000 carried in the pending bill there will be substantially $57,000 available for maintenance work between this time and the beginning of March next year, when the funds appropriated at the next session of Congress will become available. This amount is more than has ever been spent for maintenance in one year, and is but little less than the total expended in the two fiscal years 1916 and 1917, and it is therefore believed that it should suffice for the necessary work for one year. No increase in the estimate for this harbor is therefore recommended at this time.

2. Senator HARDWICK's letter and its accompanying papers are returned herewith.

Very truly, yours,

W. M. BLACK,
Major General, Chief of Engineers.
By H. C. NEWCOMER,
Colonel, Corps of Engineers.

Based upon that report, the committee did not feel justified in adding to the $20,000, the view being that you do not maintain a channel or improve a channel by simply appropriating money for it. The money must be used. The department now has on hand and available $39,828, and all that is necessary, if there is filling to do there, is to have the engineers use the money they have, and, of course, we can not accomplish that by simply adding to the amount of money which they have on hand.

That is the situation.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It seems, then, that although the money was appropriated by Congress the engineers neglected to use it, and let the channel fill up.

Mr. FLETCHER. They apparently did not use all they have. They have now on hand something like $39,000, and they say that the $20,000 carried by the bill will give them a total of $57,000 for the next year.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But part of that is the appropriation for the present fiscal year which they have not used, and the nonuse of which has caused the channel to narrow and fill. That is the situation, is it not?

Mr. FLETCHER. Of course, I do not know precisely the situation as to the channel. It is reported that it has been filling somewhat; that it has not been maintained. That, of course, is a condition of which I have no knowledge.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Can the Senator, as chairman of the committee, suggest to me some remedy to compel proper attention to the harbor after we appropriate the money?

Mr. FLETCHER. I can only suggest that the Senator see the Chief of Engineers and impress upon him the importance of having that work continued there, and diligently prosecuted, whatever is required. It is a matter entirely in the hands of the Chief of Engineers, because he has the money with which to do it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. He had $33,000 to be used last year to keep this channel clear. The money is on hand because he did not use it, and he let the channel fill, and now he says he does not need the appropriation because he did not use the last appropriation; but the channel is filling.

Mr. FLETCHER. I presume, if the Senator will allow me, that the Government dredge is there, and at work. Whether they would require another dredge or not, I do not know.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; there is no dredge at Brunswick.

Mr. FLETCHER. There is none?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Government never has bought a dredge for Brunswick.

Mr. FLETCHER. Then it is a question of contracting for the work to be done outside. There may have been some trouble about letting the contract. I do not know as to that. I have never inquired into it. But if a contract can not be let, if there are no bidders for the work, then I take it that the only remedy would be for the Government to bring a dredge there.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, we had a dredge there for a while. They took it away, on the ground that they did not have enough money to keep it there very long.

Mr. FLETCHER. Of course, this will give the money. This $20,000, in addition to what they have, will give $57,000 to be used between now and next March. I should think this would give an ample appropriation. At least, it is all the department asks.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Can the Senator suggest no remedy to a port of that character, which, after we make the appropriation, is neglected by the Engineer Department?

Mr. FLETCHER. I can only suggest that the Senator take it up with the Chief of Engineers. I believe the Senator will find that the matter can be satisfactorily looked after there. I believe the Chief of Engineers will either see that a dredge is brought there or that a contract is let to maintain it.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to his colleague?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do.

Mr. HARDWICK. I want to make this suggestion: The Senator from Florida is familiar with what has happened down there. I think my colleague and myself will be willing not to make any too great insistence at this session of Congress about this item, but here is exactly what has happened:

We appropriated money for maintenance of this harbor—no very great amount, $33,250 a year—for a number of years. Year after year they did not spend all of it, and during the time when they did not spend it all the harbor shoaled 1 foot in some places and 4 feet in other places. This year they cut the appropriation $20,000, on the recommendation of the Chief of Engineers. When we asked to have it restored to the usual amount—$33,250—the reply was:

> Well, we have a certain amount of unexpended balance that can be used which will give you more than if $33,250 were appropriated and there were no unexpended balance.

In other words, the Chief of Engineers lets that harbor shoal by not expending the money that Congress appropriated for its maintenance, and then, when we ask for a larger appropriation, in order to cope with the shoaling he says:

> You do not need it, because I have money on hand.

I think the trouble is that the engineers have not spent the money that Congress has appropriated, and in accordance with the policy that Congress has established with respect to this matter. As the Senator from Florida knows and as other members of the committee know, the harbor of Brunswick is one of the greatest on the whole Atlantic coast—one of the three best, I think, on the entire Atlantic coast. You are proposing to spend in this bill $3,000,000 to dig a channel in Charleston Harbor. I am not particularly objecting to that, although it is a proposition that well deserves the attention of the Senate—to make an artificial harbor, as it were, so that you may appropriate $5,000,000 more to build a navy yard in Charleston—a total of $8,000,000, when the experts, as I understand the question, say that it can not be completed in three years, and yet you are doing that as a war measure, although the probability is that the war will be over long before we get the work completed. But here is a great natural harbor, where if you had your navy yard located it would not take $100,000 to enable every navy in the world to anchor therein, and we can not even get $30,000 a year just to maintain it!

Now, I can not understand that sort of a situation, and I must say that I think the Committee on Commerce ought to see to it, if they can, that these men spend the money that we appropriate, and that they are not allowed to come up here year after year and defeat adequate appropriations by saying:

> Oh, well, you gave us an adequate appropriation last year, and you ought not to require one this year, because we did not spend all you gave us last year. We have some of that left over.

That is the situation.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield; yes.

Mr. KING. Under the statement just made by the Senator, it seems to me that it would be not only the duty of the Senate but the duty of those in charge of the executive branches of the Government to abandon the Charleston plan and to establish a harbor and a navy yard at the point indicated by the Senator from Georgia, if that is so much superior.

Mr. HARDWICK. There is no doubt in the world about that.

Mr. KING. If there is a harbor there that will be adequate to hold the navies of the world at a comparatively small expense, and at a great expense an artificial one has to be constructed at Charleston——

Mr. HARDWICK. They will have to dig it out.

Mr. KING. What is there to justify the Government in building the artificial one when a natural one is available?

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator has asked a question that it is difficult for me to answer. The facts are as I have stated. I do not see the explanation. We have not asked for this navy yard to be established at Brunswick, and are not asking it now. It is not a question of diverting the improvement from one State to another or from one harbor to another, but the fact is that the Brunswick Harbor is one of the three or four best on the entire Atlantic coast, and that at the expense of $100,000 it can be made one of the greatest harbors in the world. Already we have practically 30 feet of water up to the very streets and wharves, and we can get more than that, I think.

Mr. RANSDELL. Will the Senator from Georgia yield to me?

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield.

Mr. RANSDELL. I simply want to say in reply to what the junior Senator from Georgia has said about the Charleston project that the Committee on Commerce has not taken any steps at all in regard to this navy yard. If you will look at the proviso in the bill, on page 6, in the first paragraph, in regard to this appropriation for Charleston Harbor, it reads:

> Provided, That this work shall not be undertaken until the proposed new dry dock at this navy yard, carrying a depth of 40 feet of water over the blocks, has been authorized.

If Congress authorizes the appropriation and decides to build a dry dock at Charleston and makes the appropriation for it, then our appropriation becomes available. Otherwise it is not available. The Committee on Commerce was assured that that item had already been agreed upon, at least tentatively, in the naval appropriation bill, which is being prepared, and that it would be in the bill when it passes Congress. Of course, we do not know anything about that, and we save our faces by putting in the proviso. If Congress in its wisdom establishes the dry dock, I think the Senator will admit that there ought to be a channel to it.

Mr. HARDWICK. Undoubtedly; but the Senator from Georgia doubts the wisdom of establishing a dry dock at a place where you have got to dig a channel, practically, when there are so many good places where nature has already done the work.

Mr. RANSDELL. I suggest to the Senator that that will more properly come up when we discuss the naval bill than at this time. It is only tentative in this bill. If the naval bill passes with that item in it, then our provision here is a wise one. If it does not pass, of course this item goes out. It seems to me we ought to thrash it out when the naval bill is under consideration.

Mr. HARDWICK. Of course, the Senator is defending the committee. It needs no defense as far as I am concerned. I am not making any assault upon the committee.

Mr. RANSDELL. I understand that.

Mr. HARDWICK. I agree with the Senator from Louisiana that if we are going to build a $5,000,000 dry dock at a place where nature has not put water, we shall have to dig out a channel to get to it. There is no doubt in the world about that; but I am questioning the policy and the wisdom of selecting a place for the establishment of a dry dock where you have got to dig a $3,000,000 channel to get to it.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I wish to say, in justification of the position taken by the committee, that this appropriation was inserted in the bill conditionally, at the request of the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, as a war measure.

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes; and I wonder what sort of a war measure it is.

Mr. VARDAMAN. That is the position of the committee.

Mr. HARDWICK. I am not assailing the committee, of course. The committee put it in in such a way that if we do not build the dry dock there this money will not be available and it will not be spent; but as it will take two years to do this work, the chances are that the war will be over before it is done, and I wonder why we should expend $8,000,000 on these two items to establish a dry dock, under the circumstances, at Charleston.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I want to say to the Senator that I do not think it is a war measure.

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not, either.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. The committee were kind enough to put in an item of this kind. What is it proposed to do?

Mr. RANSDELL. The item in the bill reads:

For improvement to provide a channel 40 feet deep and 1,000 feet wide, extending from the sea to the Charleston Navy Yard, $1,500,000.

Mr. NORRIS. This is to build a channel to the dry dock, depending upon its establishment?

Mr. HARDWICK. It is to dig out a 40-foot channel to get to it.

Mr. NORRIS. I was wondering if there was a good place for a dry dock in my State whether the committee would put in some provision for a channel to it.

Mr. HARDWICK. A 40-foot channel?

Mr. NORRIS. A 40-foot channel.

Mr. HARDWICK. For a hundred miles or so?

Mr. NORRIS. And run the risk that the Naval Committee would provide for putting in a dry dock.

Mr. RANSDELL. Will the Senator yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield.

Mr. RANSDELL. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Nebraska that if he can get the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy of this great Nation to strongly urge the adoption of a provision for his State similar to the provision here, I think the Committee on Commerce would recommend it.

Mr. NORRIS. I am very much obliged for that suggestion, because that shows just how it is done. All we have to do is to stand in with the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy. They tell the committee what to do and the committee does it, and the Senate does what the committee thinks should be done, and the House does what the Senate does.

Mr. HARDWICK. I wonder if we have not a right to say we had better put it at some place better suited by nature instead of putting it where we must dig a channel 40 feet deep—I do not know how many miles—to it.

Mr. RANSDELL. Will the Senator yield to me just a moment more?

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield.

Mr. RANSDELL. I suggest to the Senator that I for one would be very glad to watch this provision carefully when it comes in the naval bill, and if he can show to the Senate or show to me, as one individual Senator, that the harbor of Brunswick is better I would be very glad to vote for a dry dock there. I imagine the Naval Affairs Committee is not a prejudiced committee, and I do not think the Secretary of the Navy is especially prejudiced in favor of Charleston. He is a North Carolina man, and I do not see why he should favor Charleston. The Secretary of War has no prejudice in the matter.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President——

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I think I can tell the Senator from Georgia what is the matter with the Brunswick Harbor and the reason why the money has not been expended and the channel properly maintained. For years it has been the policy of the Engineering Department of the Government to drive out of business all private dredging. They have sought to build dredges everywhere where they could get an appropriation to build one. I have no objection to that, but the result has been that private dredgers that have heretofore done work of this kind are practically out of commission. They have gone. Why? Because the river and harbor bill for two years has carried a provision that no private dredge should be permitted to do dredging work at a cost of more than 25 per cent of the cost of the Government dredge. My opinion is that when they have made an estimate of the cost of Government dredges they have taken no account whatever of overhead charges, depreciation, repairs, and interest on the capital invested. It has been stated that they have taken care of that, but I believe that is the trouble. The Government has not the dredges with which to do the work. They have no dredges at Brunswick?

Mr. HARDWICK. No.

Mr. BANKHEAD. They would have to go somewhere to get a dredge to maintain that harbor. They have not a Government dredge to carry on dredging there, and it could not be done without neglecting other very material work. We have put a provision in the bill trying to remedy that to some extent by providing that when the estimate for dredging is made they must take these matters into account. The amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota was a very proper one, and it was adopted unanimously by the committee.

Mr. President, I venture the guess that the department will be able to get private dredges to do this work when they are willing to pay a reasonable price for the work done. Everybody knows that the cost of dredging, like everything else, has materially advanced in the last two or three years in labor, material, and everything of that kind. Private dredgers do not feel inclined to go around and dredge for nothing. They would rather tie up to a dock somewhere than use their dredges and wear them out unless they get fair compensation.

I have not a doubt in the world that that is the main reason why the harbor at Brunswick has not been maintained and the appropriation expended. The Government could not expend it because they could not get anything to expend it on. The Government have no dredges of their own and could not get one under the provision of the law which provided that they should not pay more than 25 per cent above the cost to the Government. There is the trouble.

Mr. HARDWICK. Does the Senator think that will be remedied by this bill?

Mr. BANKHEAD. We hope to remedy it. We have inserted a provision intended to remedy it.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, I have said about all I want to say. I believe these places ought to be selected on their merits, in accordance with the endowment of nature. When we come to select a harbor at which to establish a navy yard or build a dry dock, we ought to take a real harbor, not one we have to dig out. Of course, I will not say what the war necessities of the country are, because I do not understand it.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator will permit me, I understand the committee and the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy do not go on that theory. Their theory will equalize things. The Senator wants to go on the theory that we should improve harbors nature has made. A community that has a harbor has a double advantage over a community that has no harbor at all. But the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy and the committee want to equalize things, and they say if nature has given one community a good harbor, far ahead of other places that have no harbor, we will give you a harbor by artificial means so as to equalize you with the harbor that God gave.

Mr. HARDWICK. It seems to me that in a time of war if we need a dry dock at all we need it at once, and it should be put where it can be put the quickest instead of having to wait two or three years to get a channel dug out to it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think it is a wise suggestion the Senator made, that if we are going to build dry docks for war purposes we ought to put them where there is water. Three or four years ago I offered an amendment providing an appropriation for an additional dry dock at Portsmouth, N. H., where we have 60 feet of water, but it got lost in the shuffle and I have not heard from it from the day I offered it until the present time.

Mr. NORRIS. I wish to ask the Senator from New Hampshire a question. I understand the Senator is in favor of building a dry dock where there is water.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. In that respect he conflicts not only with the committee but with the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. GALLINGER. Apparently so.

Mr. NORRIS. Why do you want a dry dock where there is water? The very name implies that it should be located where there is no water. [Laughter.]

Mr. GALLINGER. Possibly that is an interpretation the officials would put on it, but ordinarily we want dry docks where there is water. We want to float ships into the dock.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I should like to ask the Senator from Nebraska if he means that it must be bone dry? [Laughter.]

Mr. NORRIS. There are places where they could be located that would be bone dry. The Senator from New Hampshire had reference to water only.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I am afraid we are speaking rather lightly on a matter that is very important and very serious. In the first place, as far as the Committee on Commerce is concerned, we have not made any change in the bill as it came from the House. This provision regarding the improvement at Charleston Harbor and a dry dock is in the House bill and we reported it accordingly. There is no recommendation by the Commerce Committee with reference to it except that we agreed to the House bill.

In the next place, with regard to Charleston being the proper place for one, of course a great deal might be said in considering that which it is not appropriate to say now because this does not involve the question of a dry dock at all, nor the question whether a naval base should be made at Charleston or not.

If we got into a discussion about splendid harbors and where these dry docks ought to be placed other people might be very well heard from on the subject. I do not think myself that there is a finer harbor in the country either at an Atlantic, Pacific, or Gulf port than the harbor of Pensacola. You can float the United States Navy in the harbor of Pensacola. A ship can come limping over that bar and into that channel on the darkest night drawing 35 feet of water. It costs practically nothing to maintain that channel. There is no need of any expenditure, not even of $10,000 a year.

Mr. POMERENE. Why would it not be a good idea in view of what the Senator said about Pensacola Harbor to take the one and one-half million that goes to Charleston and divert it to Pensacola?

Mr. FLETCHER. I am coming to that in a moment. I should like to have a million and a half appropriated for that purpose if I could, but I am afraid I can not.

Mr. VARDAMAN. If the Senator will permit me, I should like to say when ships float into that harbor they are in sight of one of the most beautiful cities in the world.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am obliged to the Senator for adding that. Not only that, but there was a navy yard at Pensacola. The former Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Von L. Meyer, painted white lead over it and sealed up the keyholes, and closed down the navy yard, and took away the dry dock that was there, I think, to the State of my friend, the Senator from New Hampshire. He took it to some place in the North.

Mr. GALLINGER. No; we have not any second-hand navy yard or dry dock.

Mr. FLETCHER. It was a splendid dry dock. I think we paid $80,000 or $100,000 to Cuba for that dry dock, and it was brought to Pensacola. For some reason or another the Secretary of the Navy decided that that was not the proper place for it, and it is somewhere in the North or Northeast now. It really ought to be at Pensacola.

Aside from that this question of locating the dry docks where there is a naval base has been before a special committee known as the Helm committee for some years. They have investigated every port on the Gulf and the Atlantic.

Mr. GALLINGER. I sympathize very much with Pensacola having lost a dry dock. It floated out to sea apparently, either with help or without help. The proposition, as far as Charleston is concerned, is to use a dry dock where it can not be moved out.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think it would be a very good idea to locate it to stay if you do locate it at this time. I take it this dry dock will have to stay, because I think it is of the kind that can not be moved. It will have 40 feet of water. There is a special commission composed of officers of high rank and standing which has made a study of the question of where the naval base really ought to be in this country, and that commission, it seems, has reported that that base ought to be on the Atlantic, and on the south Atlantic. I was inclined to believe it ought to be on the Gulf, because I rather thought that the next great conflict in this portion of the world would be in the Caribbean, and the base ought to be in the vicinity of that region, or as near to it as our coast would afford. At any rate, the experts of the Navy Department have declared that that naval base ought to be on the Atlantic coast instead of the Gulf coast, and they have decided that it ought to be at Charleston instead of somewhere else. They have passed upon that question, and they had undoubtedly good reason for it. We can go into that when the time comes to consider the naval appropriation bill if the Senate desires to pursue the subject further. I am just stating in a general way that it is not because Charleston wants it, it is not because a Representative or a Senator from South Carolina wants it at Charleston, it is not because a Senator from some other State was not as active as he might have been for his State. That is not the reason why he did not get it. It is for the very excellent reason that it has been recommended to go to Charleston, and that reason is based upon years of study of the subject by the experts of the Navy Department. The report of the Helm Commission is accessible, of course, and the details can be found there.

With reference to the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], which is really now the matter before the Senate, I will say that this provision in the bill respecting the Ohio River improvements came to us from the House and it has not been changed by the Commerce Committee. We have adopted the House provision. In the House hearings on that subject, at page 105, you will find what Col. Newcomer had to say in reference to it at the outset. He said:

Col. NEWCOMER. You will notice that in this instance there has been put in the committee book quite a complete statement of the situation, a table taken from the annual report, showing the completed works and the percentage of completion for other works in progress. This item of $5,000,000, as you, of course, recall, is the regular annual appropriation that Congress has been making for this improvement, upon the basis of completing it within a period of 12 years. The work now has made very substantial progress. The funds in hand will practically complete the canalization from Pittsburgh down to Lock and Dam No. 29; that is, in the neighborhood of Portsmouth, Ohio.

Mr. BOOHER. Above or below Cincinnati?

Col. NEWCOMER. Above Cincinnati. Dam 37 is the one that pools the harbor at Cincinnati. We considered this project one on which, in view of the increasing importance of furnishing all possible means of transportation in that region of very intense industrial activity, the work should proceed at the full rate which Congress has authorized.

It is not a new project at all; it is an old project that has been under way for years. The Government is doing a great deal of the work itself with its own plant, its own organization. The question is, Ought we to stop the work there and scrap the plant, and let it rot and go to pieces, and dismiss the whole organization, and it may be that when the war is over at some future time—nobody knows when—take it up again and carry it on in pursuance of the order and direction of Congress heretofore made? We have adopted the project. We undertook to complete the whole business in 12 years. We have gone on with a great deal of it. Considerable work has been done. It is proposed now to give a depth of 9 feet from Pittsburgh to Cincinnati, and undoubtedly that would mean a very great deal in the way of transportation facilities in this active industrial region of the country, a thickly settled portion of the country, and now at a time when we especially need the waterways for carrying coal and heavy freight of that sort in order to relieve the railroads.

The engineering department strongly insists that the work should go on. There would be considerable loss if it is not continued, loss in the way of depreciation of plant, the loss of a good deal of material on hand, loss in the way of leaving work undone which was partly under way, loss in the dissemination of the organization, so that you could not pick it up and go on with it again as effectively as you can continue now that it is in progress.

It is a large appropriation, I will admit. The total appropriation for the Ohio River adopted in that project was $63,000,000, and, as I said, a good deal of the work has been done.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator has given a good deal of attention to the matter of commerce upon the rivers. During the last winter in my investigation of this subject I found as a matter of fact that there was very much less coal transported down the Ohio River within the last year or two than for years preceding. Is the Senator able to give any explanation of that?

Mr. FLETCHER. I should say with reference to that that, of course, until you get the improvement extended to a point where it will take care of the commerce that would move on the river when it is completed you have not put it in a condition to do business. For instance, if there is one shoal place in the whole river across which the boats can not move, it is just the same as if the whole river was not navigable.

Mr. POMERENE. I appreciate that there is a good deal of force in that. Still that does not answer the question I asked. The transportation of coal during the last year or two on the Ohio River has been less than it was three or four years ago, and the shoals were there then just the same as they are there now.

Mr. RANSDELL. Will the Senator permit me to answer that?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. RANSDELL. I will say in response to the question of the Senator from Ohio that I understand there has been very great development of industrial enterprises in the city of Pittsburgh and vicinity during the last two or three years which has consumed the coal which used to go down the Ohio River. There was, as the Senator doubtless knows, a very large amount of coal mined on the Monongahela River and in West Virginia near the banks of the Ohio River. All the coal, practically, along the Monongahela River is now consumed at Pittsburgh and its immediate vicinity and large quantities from some distance below the city of Pittsburgh up to that region are there consumed. This coal used to go down the Ohio River. It went, much of it, as far, I may say, as the State of Louisiana. We do not get coal any more in that section from that region. It is now taken from the mines of Alabama. It is taken largely by rail, and there is a very cheap rail rate. So we do not carry it down as we used to. That answers the question to that extent.

Mr. POMERENE. I do not think it answers it very fully or very satisfactorily, because the coal is taken from West Virginia down the Ohio River and the coal barges this winter have been tied up along the Ohio River banks.

Mr. RANSDELL. Some of it has gone down, but the large quantities that used to go down are now taken to Pittsburgh. The coal is consumed at Pittsburgh that used to go down the river.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think one reason of the lack of commerce on that river has been the lack of terminal facilities. This bill is intended to remedy that. There are provisions in the bill which I think will materially change that situation and cause arrangements to be made by municipalities and transportation lines for terminals along the river. The report of the engineer upon that point, signed by Col. Lansing H. Beach, one of the most experienced and one of the best engineers in the service, says:

> 4. It will be seen, therefore, that with funds at present available and $1,368,000 of the expected appropriation of $5,000,000 all work in the Pittsburgh and Wheeling districts can be completed, as well as all dams in the first Cincinnati and Louisville districts now under consideration.
> 5. This office can not urge too strongly the total appropriation of $5,000,000 asked for, as the past season has indicated the necessity for completing the slack-water improvement of the Ohio River at the earliest practicable date. Were the improvement completed only as far as Cincinnati, the present serious coal situation in this locality would not exist, and not only would the present great handicap on production be largely removed but manufacturers and others would be enabled to move large quantities of freight, impossible at present owing to congestion on the railroads.

So, in view of that situation, it seems to me it would be very unwise not to continue this work and to fail to make this appropriation. The amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin would leave the matter where Congress having decided, and having jurisdiction to so determine, that the improvement ought to be made, and making the appropriation for it, must then go and submit that question to some other body to pass upon it before it can utilize the funds which are available.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. FLETCHER. I do.

Mr. LENROOT. If the condition of the Treasury is such that the money in the Treasury ought to be used for ordnance, for aircraft, and for equipping our soldiers in the field, does the Senator think in that event that money should be used for the construction of locks in the Ohio River or in the other improvements which have been specified? Ought not the Secretary of the Treasury have the right to determine the prior need of the money which is in the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, in the first place, I agree with the Senator that, of course, we must not fail to recognize the first importance of the things which the Senator mentions as being absolutely and immediately necessary—the production of munitions and the things we need for the conduct of the war—but this country is amply able to take care of its internal public works. We are not living from hand to mouth, and we can not afford to neglect these great public improvements even in the stress of actual conflict. The countries of Europe have found it necessary to keep up the improvement of their inland waterways. France has done it; Germany has done it; England, right in the midst of the most terrible time they have ever had in the history of their people, is talking now of opening up old canals that were abandoned years ago. There is a movement on foot to appropriate money to open up and develop canals that have not been used for years and years in England. Even if we do have to look after these other things—and we can look after the other things as well—we can not afford to abandon our waterways and internal improvements of this sort.

I do not live on the Ohio River or in that section; but I realize the importance of that great public transportation facility. It seems to me that it is incumbent upon us to see that this work goes on. We can provide the means for doing it and for doing the other things also. Congress ought not, when it determines to do a thing like this, when it has the power to do it, and when it has the jurisdiction to do it and to make the appropriation necessary for it, and when we have a department that controls it like the War Department, to be required to ask some other department or some other board or some other commission whether it will be permitted to do what its judgment and its conscience is that it should do.

Mr. VARDAMAN and Mr. LENROOT addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield, and if so, to whom?

Mr. FLETCHER. I first yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I want to suggest to the Senator that the purpose of river and harbor improvements is to enable the people to meet the enormous demands upon them by reason of the war. You might just as well say that you are going to stop building roads over which the farmer carries the products of his farm to the towns. This is no donation. These waterway improvements are for the purpose of facilitating commerce and encouraging and stimulating production.

Mr. FLETCHER. Precisely.

Mr. VARDAMAN. And if we are to meet the great expenses that this Government is now assuming, we have got to make these improvements and do everything else that will encourage production and stimulate trade and commerce.

Mr. FLETCHER. We have got to do this work in order to get the money and the revenues with which to do the other things.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Of course.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator from Mississippi is quite right about that; and I think he has answered the inquiry of the Senator from Wisconsin better than I could have done.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator whether he realizes that the effect of my amendment is that if we have the money in the Treasury to do both, the amendment will not interfere in the least with carrying out these improvements, but if we have not, my amendment merely proposes that the money shall be taken first for purposes which are actually necessary in carrying on the war.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, the items of this bill are all items of that kind; the bill is framed upon that basis. That is a matter that we can pass on here without leaving it to a department. However, I do not care to prolong the discussion. I think it would be unfortunate to adopt the Senator's amendment, because it would be an unheard of thing and unwise.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I wish to add just a word or two to what my colleague on the committee [Mr. FLETCHER] has stated with regard to this amendment.

The amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] it seems would be limited to new projects. There are only two new provisions in this act. One is an item of $204,000 for the Los Angeles Harbor and the other is for Crescent City Harbor, Cal. The other items in this bill the Senator may call new projects, but they are not really new projects. The project for the improvement of the Ohio River was adopted a long time ago, practically in 1876. I am sorry to say that the work has gone on in a most unbusinesslike manner since that time. The present project of 9 feet of water from Pittsburgh to Cairo was adopted in 1910, and we have been carrying it on at the rate of about $5,000,000 a year since that year. This is simply carrying forward a great project voted by Congress a number of years ago. So if we are going to limit the bill to new projects, the only ones of which I know would be those in California, and they are strictly emergency war items.

It seems to me that in considering this very diminutive river and harbor bill, carrying an appropriation of about $20,000,000 for all the great rivers and harbors of this Nation, we might hark back a few weeks, when about $500,000,000 were readily appropriated by Congress—and I was glad to vote for it—to enable the Director General of Railways to take the very best care of the transportation systems of this country. We gave him $500,000,000 to help along transportation, a part of which he is expected to use in putting boats and barges on our waterways.

It would be suicidal and most unbusinesslike to stop improving our harbors and our rivers altogether when we need transportation more than anything else right now, or as much as we need anything else, if we are going to carry on this war successfully.

We suffered terribly last winter from a lack of coal, and that suffering was caused by shortage of transportation. Many of the best students of that subject think we are going to suffer next winter as much as we did last winter, unless the season is mild, merely because of improper transportation.

This little bill—a very small bill by comparison with many others, for we have been dealing in billions here and in this bill we are dealing in the insignificant sum of $20,000,000—this little bill, I say, is to help along transportation by water. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] would cut that down and limit us on this $5,000,000 item; he would limit us on items for many other places of $1,000,000; in others to a million and a half dollars; and in some cases to two and a half million dollars and in other cases he would cut us off entirely.

His voice may have been raised against it when we were giving the railroads $500,000,000, but I did not hear it. I think we should be fairly liberal to this great transportation agency when we are so exceedingly liberal to the railroads. I favor them all; I voted gladly for the $500,000,000 for the use of the Director General of Railways, and I will vote a reasonable sum for our highways. I want to see not only the railroads developed but also the waterways and the highways. I want to see the auto trucks used to a very great extent in helping us along in our present transportation emergency. We need all these agencies. We ought to help them all. We ought not to check any.

As the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] has so well said, the people in Europe, who are carrying on this war, if we are correctly informed about it, especially the Germans and the French, have never ceased to prosecute work of waterway improvement, and it has been most beneficial to them. I sincerely hope that this amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I do not understand all about this bill nor all about some other legislation proposed in the Senate. I was born inland and I have never been down to the sea. One Senator says I ought to go. It may be so. I am on the Commerce Committee, however, and I was struck with singular force by the proposal to build dry docks at Charleston and at Los Angeles and the proposed appropriation for digging a deep channel in order that the dry docks can be used when built.

I wondered how the matter was going to be finally determined. Let us attempt to surmise the course of such an appropriation. Doubtless these progressive cities were insistent upon these improvements being made, presented the matter to the departments and engineers, and finally procured recommendations that they were necessary to the conduct of the war, notwithstanding the improvements will not be finished for two or three years. They probably then went to the House committee and had the provision for an appropriation for the dredging of the channel at Charleston inserted, making it conditional and contingent on the fact that a dry dock would be constructed there. They then go to the Shipping Board with the proposition that a dry dock is greatly needed and will be constructed down there if an authorization be made and money loaned for the purpose, insisting with that board that arrangements have already been made for the dredging of the channel to facilitate the use of the dry dock. Then the decision of the whole matter, the entire improvement, finally devolves upon the Shipping Board in authorizing the construction of the dry dock, and each department, Congress included, is but deciding the matter in effect partially and passing it on, and not as the situation really demands but according to a condition that may develop if all other departments decide in accordance with the program and procedure indicated.

I was curious to know how the provision for dredging the channel for the use of a dry dock got into the bill before there was an authorization for the construction of the dry dock, and there was this same old explanation that it was necessary for the conduct of the war. Finally there came before our committee this man, Hurley, who is in charge of the shipbuilding program, and I then thought I would find out something directly about it. I said: "Mr. Hurley, what is the purpose of building a dry dock in a harbor where the channel must be deepened in order to get to and use the dry dock? Is that the best method of procedure?" He said he had not done it yet.

But you easily see that the entire pressure for appropriations for the whole improvement will fall on Hurley and he may not be able to resist it.

It may be asked, What is the remedy for all this? I may not know, but I will tell you the remedy for a great many of these things—and the lack of it is the trouble with this country now—it is intelligent thinking upon the part of the voters and intelligent and courageous action upon the part of officials representing them here.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

Mr. KIRBY. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Does the Senator remember how much it was estimated it would cost to really complete this ditch up that river?

Mr. KIRBY. I will say to the Senator that I do not.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Was it not $5,000,000, and was it not to take some two years?

Mr. KIRBY. I do not remember that; I am trying to get down to this other proposition.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] asked a very pertinent question, a question that ought to have disturbed the minds of the Senate and the people behind the Senate for years and years. It was an intelligent question, that will come up forever if the condition continues to exist as it does now. He said: "We have improved the Ohio River, spent vast sums of money on it, and there is not half the commerce upon it now there was before it was improved. Why?" If you improve the Ohio River and the Mississippi River and every other river in this country and do not change the system of rate making and the schedule of railroad rates, you will not have any more commerce on the rivers. Perhaps I can cite you an example. We have the greatest deposit of bauxite in the United States in the State of Arkansas. Bauxite is the substance from which aluminum is made. That bauxite has to be taken to St. Louis to be refined and manufactured after the ore is mined. They could have taken that bauxite under the established railroad rates in my State to White River at Devall Bluff and installed a line of barges and carried it on to St. Louis and made money in the carrying of it by the barge line on the rates which were established and in force in Arkansas for years and years, but as soon as they proceeded to do that the railroads immediately increased the rates from the bauxite plant to the White River station to such an extent that it could not be done. That stopped the water transportation.

In the Mississippi River there is plenty of water to get goods down to Memphis, but there is not any such commerce on the Mississippi River there as there ought to be. Why? Because Memphis is a competitive water-rate point, and the railroads have been allowed to put down their rates so low that they can shut out the river competition and transportation, and they have done so. They have not only done so there, but they have done it at other places, and they will continue to do it as long as they are allowed to proceed as they have heretofore; and our rivers will never be used under such conditions until the railroads are not able to carry all the traffic and refuse to make rates as they are made now.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. KIRBY. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HARDING. The Senator has just said that the failure of water transportation in one instance was due to an increase of railroad rates, and he says that the failure in another case was due to the decrease of the railroad rates. I should like to have him say which is the specific evil—the increase or the decrease?

Mr. KIRBY. I say, with the railroads authorized to fix such rates of transportation as will preclude the building up of the river transportation, we will never have water transportation; and that has been the effect of dividing this country into zones and allowing the railroads to carry the freight as it has been carried. That has been the effect of sending different products throughout the country to this place, that place, and the other place, where they would not naturally go. I am not complaining about that; but I do not believe, if we had all our rivers improved now, with the railroad rates made and adjusted as they have been, with rates controlled by the railroads, that we could materially increase commerce upon the rivers until after the railroads get all they want to carry.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KIRBY. Yes.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Does the Senator think that Government ownership and operation would cause a change in that condition?

Mr. KIRBY. I think it ought to cause a change in that condition, but I do not think it will. Why? Because the same men who have been making the rates heretofore for the railroads and for the railroad interests are now continuing to make the rates as heretofore for them under Government control.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. KIRBY. Yes.

Mr. POINDEXTER. If the Senator from Arkansas will allow me, I should like, in just a word, to answer the question that has been asked by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING]. The Senator from Ohio asked whether or not the lowering of the rates by the railroads or the raising of the rates by the railroads is the cause of shutting out water transportation.

Mr. KIRBY. They are both responsible.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I should like to say that it is both the lowering and the raising of rates that is the cause of it.

Mr. KIRBY. Certainly.

Mr. POINDEXTER. In this way: The railroads lower the rates at water competitive points; they lower the rates to those points to a less amount than will return interest on the investment. Under the specific permission of the Interstate Commerce Commission the railroads have been allowed to put down the rates at the water competitive points to such a rate as will only reimburse them for the actual expense of transporting the goods, without regard to paying interest on their bonds and dividends upon their stock. The consequence is that, in order to pay interest on the bonds and dividends on the stock, they have raised rates to an unreasonable amount at the interior points, where there is no water competition. They shut out water competition to get that business and reimburse themselves by imposing extortionate rates upon all that section of the country which has not water transportation. So that it is both the lowering and the raising of the rates, the combination of the two, which has destroyed water transportation.

Mr. KIRBY. That is true. As I have said, the raising of the rates to the point where the shipment was destined in order that it might take the water route cut out the water transportation in one instance. It is exactly like the answer of the old nigger to the question of the court. He was testifying about a particular incident which had something to do with a stairway. He seemed to be equivocating a little about it, or the judge thought so, and said to him, "Now, look here, Sam, you tell the court the truth. How did that stairway run?" He said, "Marse Jedge, it is diss-a-way: It 'pends on whar you is at. If you is upstairs, de stairway runs down, and if you is downstairs, de stairway runs up." [Laughter.] So, like the stairway which runs both ways, up and down, the raising and lowering of railroad rates is what has shut out water transportation.

I am not going to talk a very great while about that. I accepted the statements of members of the committee and of the War Department engineers. I do not know where they got their views and facts, but I voted in the committee for this provision as it stands and I expect to vote for it in the Senate.

Now, in regard to the matter of which the Senator from Georgia spoke. He said, "We need $33,000 at Brunswick, and you are only allowing us $20,000." We discovered on examination of the $33,000 item appropriated last year that there was enough of it still remaining on hand unexpended to give them more than $33,000 this year, and on that account no more was appropriated than $20,000, because that left all the money on hand that was needed or that could be spent.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Let me say to the Senator, however, that the failure to expend the appropriation during the present fiscal year made the amount of work that would be required that much more.

Mr. KIRBY. There might be something to that, but the engineers did not think so, and I took the word of the engineers. I have been taking somebody's word—have had to do it—for nearly everything since I have been here. [Laughter.]

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Did the engineers explain why they neglected to do the work during the past year?

Mr. KIRBY. They did not. They came in and said, "We have all the money we can spend; there is so much left." I said, "All right, if you have all you can spend, that ought to be enough."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Perhaps they did not think about the amount of work that would be caused by neglecting to do the work the previous year.

Mr. KIRBY. That is along the line of what I said a while ago—we are not doing enough thinking for our constituents, and our constituents are not doing enough thinking for themselves. I can hardly get used to the way things are done here.

Just to show you an instance, I had a little experience back some years ago when I was a youngster in the Arkansas Legislature, in the house and senate. The constitution of the State provides that upon the passage of every bill, or when any bill is placed on its final passage, there shall be a roll call and record vote. The other day a proposition came into the Senate appropriating $600,000 for some kind of a garbage plant in the District of Columbia. I did not know anything about it. I tried to find out something about it, but nobody else seemed to know anything about it. The question, however, was put and carried. I was on the floor twice trying to get recognition. Nobody voted for it, and nobody voted against it, but it was passed. [Laughter.] That is the procedure here. It only involved $600,000, however——

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, it seems to me that was one of the times the Senator ought to have voted, and he either would have carried it or defeated it. [Laughter.]

Mr. KIRBY. I thank the Senator. As I have said, I tried twice to get recognition; I did not know but that it might be a good thing, but yet when the bill was passed it was done so rapidly I could not get in a vote. [Laughter.]

But, to go back a little further. Not long ago a deficiency appropriation bill came up here appropriating $7,000,000,000 or $9,000,000,000. I have forgotten which. Of course, the difference does not amount to a great deal, but when the question was put upon the passage of that bill I was the only Senator who voted for it; no Senator voted against it. [Laughter.] And there were only 19 Senators in the Chamber. That is exactly what happened. My vote passed it, and the bill would have passed if I had not voted for it. [Laughter.]

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, will the Senator confide in the Senate to the extent of stating whose word he was taking when he voted for that bill? [Laughter.]

Mr. KIRBY. I was taking the word of everybody—the word of the newspaper reports, the War Department's and the committee's recommendations. I did not know about it then and I do not know much about it yet. [Laughter.]

There is another thing, Senators, which I think it is time for us to get down to business about: There is no man in the United States of America to-day who knows how much money is required for the conduct of this Government in all its activities and how it is going to be raised. It is about time somebody found out how much money is to be required, and what for, and where it shall come from, before all these great appropriations continue to be made. No other business on earth can be run successfully without such knowledge, and the operation of this Government to-day is the greatest business that now is or ever has been in the world.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KIRBY. Yes.

Mr. KING. I think I can enlighten the Senator as to the source from which it will come. It will come from taxation and from bonds.

Mr. KIRBY. There is no doubt but that it must come from taxation or it must come from bonds; but we ought to find out, at least with reasonable certainty, how much is necessary, what can be dispensed with, and when and where we are going to get it, so that we may have the whole thing in mind, if it can be done, when we start in. That has not been done; it is not done now, and until it is done the Government is going to continue to suffer by reason of reckless appropriations.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. KIRBY. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator were a member of the Committee on Finance, he would find that the Secretary of the Treasury regularly comes to that committee and tells the committee how much money is wanted; and I presume the Chief Executive approves of what he tells the committee. So we think we have reasonably definite information on that subject.

Mr. KIRBY. I am not complaining about that, I would have the Senator understand. I am taking the Senator's and the committee's recommendation about it myself. I do not know; members of the committee come in and say, "This is what we need"; but it is about time somebody understood all these matters, and it is about time they were brought before us in such a shape and in such a condition as that we would understand more about them and be able to act more intelligently upon them and not have to vote as some one else says we ought to vote.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me further, when the last revenue bill was under consideration the committee sat patiently for, I think, five or six weeks in the committee room listening to the Secretary of the Treasury, to the Federal Reserve Board, and to other gentlemen who claimed to be informed on the subject. The committee printed its hearings; the committee made an elaborate report, a report which is in print, and the matter was then discussed in the Senate. I do not think the Senator could possibly ask for any further information than was presented to him in connection with that great bill.

Mr. KIRBY. They did not show the financial program of the country nor the financial needs of the country. The committee said, "We have got to have this revenue bill; we need the money"; that is all. Furthermore, most of these hearings are drawn out to such length and the testimony is so voluminous that a man could not read the hearings through before the session adjourned. I am not complaining especially; I merely make these few observations.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. KIRBY. Yes.

Mr. KENYON. Will not the Senator join with other Senators here who have been working for years to try to secure some budget system for this Government?

Mr. KIRBY. Why, that is what I have been talking about for 20 minutes here. [Laughter.] Yes; we have got to do that sooner or later.

Mr. KENYON. I did not hear the Senator; he spoke so low.

Mr. KIRBY. I did not call it a budget.

Mr. KENYON. I will say to the Senator that we are the only civilized nation in the world that has not some budget plan.

Mr. KIRBY. Yes; I understand so.

Mr. KENYON. No business concern of any consequence could be run for 30 days the way the Government is run. I hope the Senator will join in that movement.

Mr. KIRBY. The Senator need have no doubt about that. I shall be glad to do that. I am trying to find out something about it before I have to do it.

Now, I am going to vote for this bill just as it came from the committee, because they had all the recommendations there and they thought that was the thing to do, and they voted to do that; but I am replying now to the suggestion about the improvement of our waterways that we say is so absolutely necessary, when they never will carry a greatly increased amount of the commerce of this country so long as the railroad transportation is as it is and so long as the railroads are allowed to control the transportation of the commerce of these United States.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, my friend, the able Senator from Arkansas, says he is going to vote for this bill.

Mr. KIRBY. Yes.

Mr. VARDAMAN. His attack upon it is for the purpose of making it as unpalatable as possible to the balance of us, is it? [Laughter.]

Mr. KIRBY. Not at all. I was just trying to answer the question of the Senator from Iowa. I think it is about time we got to thinking about some sort of a system that would utilize the waterways after they are improved, and that never will be done so long as the railroads control transportation; not even if you have docks and wharves every mile on every river in these United States.

Mr. VARDAMAN. But that is not the question that is at issue before the Senate now. In order to have rivers and harbors over which to carry the freight, appropriations are required to dig them out and keep the channels clear, and so forth. I agree with the Senator that our system is altogether wrong in permitting the railroads to make that distinction from competing points. I think the fault is in that, and not in the system of waterways, and not in the system that this bill proposes to carry out. I will join with the Senator in an effort to regulate the railroads, and to use both these systems as a means of transportation to move the commerce between the people of the different States; but that has no bearing on this bill.

Mr. KIRBY. It has a bearing in this way—and if the Senator is insisting that I am not confining myself directly to the question and keeping within the record all the time, I might say that I have distinguished precedents, for no other Senator in the Senate has ever done that since I have been here. [Laughter.]

Mr. VARDAMAN. I did not ask the Senator to do that. That would not be fair.

Mr. KIRBY. The main thing about it, Mr. President, is this: I submit that the people must do more intelligent thinking, and so must their Senators and their Representatives. I say that great reforms and great changes come about slowly, all come of necessity, and until there is such necessity as requires that a particular thing shall be done it never will succeed, whether it is done sooner or not.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question or two, if he will permit me.

Mr. KIRBY. Certainly. I had about finished what I was expecting to say. The Senator has the floor.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The Senator seems to think that there ought to be some system concerning these appropriations. I am not a member of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, but I take it that the Senator is.

Mr. KIRBY. Yes.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I have on several occasions presented an amendment to the river and harbor bill providing that before any appropriation becomes available the people who are interested, either as private individuals or as corporations or as counties or as cities, shall pay a certain percentage—I think 33⅓ per cent—of the amount of the appropriation into the United States Treasury, to be applied in the construction of that improvement. I will ask the Senator whether that is the kind of a measure that he thinks ought to be adopted?

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I do not think so. Very frequently it is just like the case of the people on the lower Mississippi River. We come to Congress and say, "We need a little money for flood control." You say, "Well, why don't you take care of it yourselves?" We say, "Over half the States of the Union are pouring their waters down this river on us, and we are too small financially to take care of the condition." You could not expect only the people whose house burned to pay for the entire upkeep and operation of the fire department. No; you can not do that. The others whose property is not destroyed are more benefited than they.

Mr. SHAFROTH. If all the parties interested in having their docks and their rivers and their harbors enlarged or improved were to unite together, would not that be the way in which to do it?

Mr. KIRBY. That would be better; but you would get no uniform system under that plan; and the rivers belong to the Government, and likewise the sea within our jurisdiction.

Mr. SHAFROTH. We have a law concerning highways, and we provide that when a highway is to be constructed the United States shall contribute not exceeding one-half of the amount and that the people of the States and the counties that are benefited shall make up the balance. There is not any difficulty in getting their part raised for that purpose. Why would not that apply also in the case of rivers and harbors?

Mr. KIRBY. That might be. I am not discussing that, and I do not care to take issue with the Senator on that. I have said about all I care to say on this other matter. I am going to vote for the bill as it is, just because it has been put together and recommended as I have understood and told you.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I am in favor of the amendment submitted by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT]. With reference to this controversy as between the railroads and the rivers of the country, I have no disposition to occupy any time. We all remember that the railroads of this country have been under criticism, denunciation, and legislative action for the last 15 years, until finally they were passed over to the Government of the United States, and the Government of the United States is now running them. I noticed the other day that while the transportation had been very much interfered with, to the discomfort of the traveling public, there was a loss of something over $2,000,000 during the last quarter, which the taxpayers of the country will have to be responsible for, sooner or later. So I think we might dismiss this question of the railroads in their relation to the water transportation of the United States, at least during the time that they are under Government control.

I think the Senator from Wisconsin is absolutely correct when he takes the position that during the war we ought not to spend on the rivers of the country any money that we possibly can save. Why, Mr. President, the Secretary of the Treasury and the Federal Reserve Board have gone to the extent of advising even municipalities that they ought not to make any improvements during the war that possibly could be postponed. They have said that the States ought not to continue to build good roads during the continuance of the war, and the situation is such now that the banks will not loan money for these purposes, and the Federal Reserve Board recommends that no money shall be loaned from the Public Treasury for those purposes.

I have taken some interest in this matter of water transportation. Some years ago—a good many years ago, indeed—a committee of the Senate, at the head of which was the distinguished Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], traversed the Mississippi River from its source to the Gulf, making investigations, holding meetings, and inquiring as to the matter of commerce on the Mississippi River; and we also took into consideration the commerce on the Missouri River. That report is in print, and it is a very interesting report. Among other things, we recommended that the appropriations for the Missouri River should be discontinued, and in response to that recommendation the appropriations for the Missouri River were discontinued, I think for several years; but a little while after the appropriation appeared again, and it has appeared every year since. We discovered that there was not any commerce on the Missouri River. We discovered that there was practically no commerce on the Mississippi River; and yet we had expended $100,000,000, more or less, on the Mississippi River, and we have continued to pour out the money from the Treasury in improvements on the Mississippi River ever since.

I have stopped combating those appropriations. I felt it was not worth while to worry over them, and I apprehend that the appropriations in this bill will be passed. It carries only thirty millions, they say—just a bagatelle, not worth considering! The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] suggests that that is just a little appropriation. It is not as big as it used to be when it was $100,000,000 or more, but it is $30,000,000 in time of war; and if we can save a portion of those millions to provide means for our soldiers to fight on the battle front, I think it is desirable to do it.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? I know he does not want to make a misstatement.

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly; I yield.

Mr. RANSDELL. It is about twenty millions. I did not say thirty. There is about twenty millions carried in the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is only twenty millions, then; and when we are appropriating billions, as the Senator from Arkansas says, without a vote of either yea or nay on the question, the twenty millions is not of much consequence. But if there is a proposed improvement on a river or a harbor or in any other direction in this country that can be held up, without doing great damage to the interests of the country, until after this war is over, it ought to be done. All that the Senator from Wisconsin suggests is that it shall be submitted to the Secretary of the Treasury. If the Secretary of the Treasury says that the finances of the country are such that this appropriation can be made, then it will be made. If the Secretary of the Treasury should say, "The finances of the country are in such a condition that this matter ought to wait a year or two years," then I think it ought to wait a year or two years. So I think the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin is a proper amendment and ought to be agreed to by the Senate.

We have been going along very recklessly about appropriations. The fact is that the finances of this country are in a deplorable condition at the present time. We can not wink that ought of sight. It is a very difficult matter for any man to get credit at a bank or to borrow money from a bank to-day, and that condition has been such that we have created an association that controls $500,000,000, with the privilege of multiplying that by 8 and making it four billions of dollars, so that in great emergencies they can come to the rescue of corporations and individuals who are in financial straits. Under those circumstances we ought to be very careful about our appropriations, and I think the suggestion made by the Senator from Wisconsin is so reasonable and so just and so much in the interest of the public that it ought to be agreed to without discussion. But I have little faith that it will be agreed to, because these river and harbor bills have been so adjusted that they go through, no matter what the conditions are or what the arguments may be that are presented against them.

I am going to speak, before the bill passes, upon another phase of the river and harbor bill, upon the method that has been adopted now. In place of letting appropriations be for specific purposes, for specific rivers, for specific creeks, as they used to be, they have now bunched them, and they come in here with an omnibus provision, putting 8 or 10 or 12 rivers together and making a lump appropriation for those rivers, so that it is almost impossible for us to differentiate and discuss each individual item as we used to do. But some method will be discovered whereby these bills will be passed through Congress and become laws, and it is of very little concern to those of us who do not agree to them to waste time in discussing them.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I suggest to the Senator, in connection with grouping the items, that I think it is fair to say that that does not mean any mystery about the appropriation, because the estimates of the engineers are all itemized. The aggregation of the items that make up one group enables the engineers, if the total amount estimated as necessary to go to one particular creek or river or improvement is not used, to use it on some other creek or river or improvement within that group.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is exactly the case.

Mr. FLETCHER. That is the purpose of it.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is the purpose, and it is a very shrewd purpose indeed.

Mr. FLETCHER. It seems to me it is a very wise purpose. Otherwise you might have too much for one item in the bill and not enough for another.

Mr. GALLINGER. But why should we have too much if the engineers make an investigation and report the amount of money that is needed?

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

Mr. FLETCHER. The estimates will show the items for each one of the groups. That is in the estimates, and precisely what they recommend can be found there.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will discuss that later.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield to the Senator with pleasure.

Mr. NELSON. I want to say that the Senator will find that in all those cases of grouping the appropriation relates simply to the question of maintenance, and nothing more. It is to keep the channels in order, and does not involve any new improvement in any of those cases. Those are the cases in which groupings have been made.

Mr. GALLINGER. But those of us who have somewhat undertaken to analyze the river and harbor bills heretofore have discovered that there were appropriations for the maintenance of miserable little creeks that would not float a cake of Ivory soap [laughter], and yet they appear in a group; and they can be appropriated or not, I suppose, according to the wish or view of the men who are going to make these improvements. I think it was a better system to have each individual item in the bill, so that we could understand and see exactly what was wanted for those waterways that have not any water in them. In the case of a waterway that we discussed two years ago, upon which more than a million dollars had been expended and for which they were asking for a further appropriation, at the headwaters there were only 8 inches of water! I should like to see that item in this bill, if it is here—and I presume it is in one of these groups—disassociated from this provision, so that we could take it up and discuss it as we used to do.

That is all I care to say about the matter at present. It is a very clever way of getting rid of a kind of legislation that is subject to attack, as it has been attacked before and as it ought to be attacked again.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, about an hour ago I was calling the attention of the Senate to the discrepancy in this bill between the appropriation for the great harbor of Brunswick, which is reduced to $20,000, and the appropriation of a million and a half dollars to dig a canal up in the neighborhood of Charleston.

I wish to go just a little further, and call the attention of the Senate to the fact that in the early fifties the engineering deparment of the United States studied the south Atlantic harbors and determined that Brunswick was the great harbor of the South Atlantic coast; and at the instance of the engineering department in 1857 the Government bought in that harbor an island 1,100 acres in size, and with from a mile and a half to two miles front available for navy yards and for other improvements with very little work to be done; less than $500,000 would probably have been sufficient with a little over $30,000 a year for maintenance. This harbor—large enough, as my colleague [Mr. HARDWICK] says, to take upon its waters the navies of the world, landlocked, with a narrow channel over the bar where the principal part of the work is required—is so situated that it has required only $33,250 a year to keep the channel in shape; and yet the engineers have recommended that the appropriation for this year be reduced to $20,000. Why? Because they have part of the appropriation for former years unused, not because the use was not needed but because they had no dredge at Brunswick and neglected to get one. It is unexpended because they have neglected the harbor. It is unexpended because they have taken no dredge to the harbor to put it in shape. In consequence I have here the figures which show, from the engineer's report that it has filled up a foot and a half in parts of the channel. All they need to do is to fail to use this year's appropriation and come to Congress next year and say: "Do not make any appropriation at all."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. KING. In the light of the statement made by the Senator from Georgia a short time ago, as well as the statement made by his colleague [Mr. HARDWICK], and also in view of the statement just made by the Senator, I am disposed to move to strike out from this bill the entire appropriation which is provided for Charleston Harbor. I think the Senator from Georgia could do no greater service to the Senate, at least, if not to the country, than to explain fully the reasons, with a harbor so superior as the Brunswick Harbor appears to be, so much better than the Charleston Harbor, a harbor which was recommended, as the Senator says, many years ago, why the change has been made; why the Government is not expending its money at Brunswick Harbor instead of trying to dig an artificial harbor at Charleston. Some of us who have not had the advantage of knowing of these things, I am sure, would be glad to know.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not know. I think work started at Charleston. It probably started with a small appropriation. Now, if they are really to make a navy yard and dry dock of size, they must have this enormous sum to spend to make practicable the handling of ships to the navy yard and dry dock.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. So far as Brunswick is concerned, would it not be perhaps proper to suggest that the men representing the State of Georgia so ably to-day slept at their post during these long years since the first appropriation was made?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. They probably thought that the engineers would investigate the question solely upon merit and neglected to bring the facts to the attention of the engineers. The truth is I never knew that the Government had bought and owned this land at Brunswick until some time after I entered the Senate.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, if my colleague will pardon me——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. HARDWICK. I should like to say in response to the suggestion of the Senator from New Hampshire that, while the responsibility, or a part of it, has been mine for only a short time, Brunswick's claims have been well presented for many years to the different departments of the Government, not by me.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, I have greatly wondered in former years why that magnificent harbor there—and I have seen it—should not have been utilized for the purpose of a navy yard and a dry dock.

Mr. HARDWICK. Let me say, if my colleague will further permit me, that for many years the congressional district in which Brunswick is situated was represented by an eminent citizen of that State, Hon. William G. Brantley, a Member of Congress from the eleventh district of Georgia, one of the most brilliant and able Members of Congress who ever served from any State and who made it almost a life work to endeavor to get proper recognition for Brunswick. Somehow or other, however, it has always failed. He always thought that the merits of his case were so great that he relied entirely on them.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, it never came so forcibly to my attention until this suggestion was made to cut $13,250, the small sum necessary to maintain the harbor. It was a harbor so easily maintained that its people may not have made special fight to protect it; but when the engineers neglected entirely for months to do anything on the harbor and allowed the channel to begin to fill by failing to use the money appropriated and now come to Congress and say, "That the unused money will be enough, cut the appropriation," it very forcibly attracted my attention to the neglect that has taken place in the failure by the Government to utilize certainly the greatest harbor south of Norfolk on the Atlantic Coast.

Now, I grant that Pensacola has a splendid harbor. I join the Senator from Florida in paying tribute to it as one of the very best in the United States; but that is on the Gulf. They wanted a south Atlantic harbor, and they have neglected their very best large harbor. I am determined, Mr. President, that during the balance of the time I am in the Senate the Senate shall know something about Brunswick, and I hope the engineers will find out that the Senate knows something about it, and I hope the chairman of the committee will notify the engineering department that the neglect is appreciated. I think it might be well now, although that is not the subject that is primarily upon my mind, to reject the million and a half appropriated to Charleston. I shall vote to reject it if the motion is made.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. KING. In the light of the information that has been given by the Senators from Georgia I shall move to strike that item out of the appropriation bill; and I think, if the Senator from Georgia will pardon me for so stating, that he ought to suggest an amendment requiring the proper officials to make a full and complete report to Congress as to why the recommendations of the Government made years ago with respect to Brunswick Harbor were not followed and why so much money has been spent and so much has been recommended for Charleston. It seems to me that the injustice of turning to a harbor that has to be constructed, when there is a natural one there, is so glaring that it ought to attract the attention of Senators, and that the officials of the Government ought to be required to state the reason why they have abandoned their natural harbor and are spending, or propose to spend, millions to construct an artificial one.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I appreciate very much the suggestion of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. HARDING. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. HARDING. I have just listened to the suggestion of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], and it occurs to me that we are going at this matter in the wrong way. The location of the navy yard and dry dock at Charleston is an authorization by the Department of the Navy, which must have the sanction of Congress before it can be carried out, and is not to be vested in the War Department. If Congress sees fit to withhold the appropriation for digging the channel the Navy Department would not want to build a dry dock which is inaccessible. It looks to me as though we were going at it in the wrong way.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator from Georgia allow me?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. KING. I do not know that I quite comprehend the import of the Senator's remark, but what I had in my mind was this: I understood that the bill carried with it a large appropriation for the construction of a harbor at Charleston and for the building of a dry dock at that point.

Mr. HARDING. That is not correct.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator is entirely mistaken. The bill carries only an improvement of the channel, where there are already 30 feet, to a depth of 40 feet and a width of a thousand feet, provided the dry dock is built under the naval appropriation bill. This appropriation is conditioned on the building of the dry dock. We have nothing to do with the building of the dry dock. As the Senator from Ohio has said, this is a matter that must be taken care of when the naval appropriation bill is up.

Mr. KING. I understand the bill provides for an appropriation, conditioned or otherwise.

Mr. FLETCHER. On condition that the dry dock is built.

Mr. KING. My idea was to strike out the appropriation and to amend the bill so as to require the engineering department of the Government that has this matter in charge to report why they have abandoned Brunswick as a harbor for Government use and have apparently selected Charleston.

Mr. HARDING. I am not responsible for the Navy Department. I think the recommendation in the bill does not come from the engineering department in its initiative, but it is a part of the scheme to improve the navy yard and build a dry dock at Charleston.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The recommendation of a million and a half as a starter toward deepening the water up to a dry dock or navy yard comes from the engineering department.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. HARDING. I think the Senator might reasonably strike it out of the bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Did the Senator state how much has been appropriated for deepening the harbor at Charleston up to the navy yard?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. So far I do not know.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Is it not a fact that last year an appropriation something like $700,000 was carried in the naval appropriation bill?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think there was quite a large appropriation made.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Can the Senator state how much was expended?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not know. I was desirous to find from the chairman of the committee what the estimate was as to the ultimate cost of accomplishing this project. My impression is that the navy yard is quite a distance up the river.

Mr. RANSDELL. I should like to say to the Senator we can not give him the ultimate cost because it was brought before us as a war-emergency proposition, and no survey has ever been made. The universal rule of the committee is not to adopt a project until it has first been surveyed in the most elaborate manner, the survey submitted by the local engineers to the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, and by them submitted to the Chief of Engineers. None of those elaborate details have been worked out in this instance because of the fact stated to us that it is an exceptional war emergency. That is why it was put in, and none of us can tell what it will cost.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I wish to ask the Senator, who interrupts me with my full approval, if it is not true that the rough estimate was that it would cost $5,000,000 and take three years to finish it? If so, how is it a war emergency?

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. RANSDELL. I think some one said it was roughly estimated that it would cost several million dollars, possibly as much as $5,000,000, and that it will take some years to finish it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Three years or more.

Mr. RANSDELL. In further answer to your question, Why is it a war emergency? I wish to heaven the war would close in three years, but I think it will last a great deal longer than three years, and if it lasts longer than three years, which I firmly believe it will, and if this great work be finished inside of three years, it may well do a great work as a war-emergency proposition.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Does not the Senator think if the dry dock is a war emergency it ought to be placed where it can be used soon?

Mr. RANSDELL. Ordinarily that is true; but I was not a member of the great naval board which studied this thing, nor have I had an opportunity to examine carefully that report. I understand that it was studied, and studied for years, and studied very thoroughly, and I believe the Senator himself will be satisfied when this matter is thrashed out at the time the naval appropriation bill is considered on this floor.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I simply want to suggest to Senators who are opposed to this item that the simplest way to defeat it is when the naval appropriation bill comes before the Senate providing for the building of a dry dock. If you can eliminate that from the naval bill, and if no provision is made for the building of a dry dock in Charleston Harbor, this appropriation will not be available.

Mr. HARDWICK. If we eliminate this appropriation now, the other would not perhaps come up.

Mr. NELSON. That would not prevent the building of the dry dock.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. They would not wish to put a dry dock where ships can not get to it.

Mr. NELSON. If the naval bill provides for a dry dock, certainly we ought to make it accessible; but if Senators think a dry dock is not a war emergency and is not needed now, the place to make their objection is on the naval bill.

Mr. HARDWICK. But many Senators may think it could be better located where it would not be so expensively located, nor would it take so long to build it as a war measure.

Mr. NELSON. I take it the Senator from Georgia, if they established a naval station at Brunswick, would want the channel deepened to the extent of 40 feet to make the dry dock and navy yard at Brunswick available and within reach.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the Senator realize that there is a dry dock at Charleston now?

Mr. NELSON. There may be a little dry dock, a small one, but they are going into extensive schemes now and there are a good many shipyards down in the south Atlantic—I think one or two near Charleston. The Navy Department and the Shipping Board feel that a dry dock is necessary at that point. That is a question that has to be determined when the naval bill comes up; and if you decide not to build a dry dock there, that ends this appropriation—it is not available at all.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Or if defeated now, that ends the dry dock.

Mr. NELSON. No; not necessarily. You can have a dry dock anyway.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. We would hardly vote several million dollars to build a dry dock where it was so dry that no vessel could reach it. If full investigation shows the dry dock must be built at Charleston, the naval bill could carry the appropriation for digging the channel, and then perhaps we might know what the entire project would cost and how soon it would be finished.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am satisfied that if the provision is stricken out of this bill it will not settle the question of establishing a naval base at Charleston and building a dry dock at Charleston. That is not going to be settled by any action taken in reference to this item. On the contrary, the naval appropriation bill will probably carry that item in it, and if this provision is stricken out of the pending bill with reference to the improvement of the channel the naval appropriation bill will probably include that item. I suggest, as the Senator from Minnesota has said, that we defer the Charleston discussion until the naval appropriation bill is here and the item with reference to a navy yard and dry dock or a naval base and dry dock comes up.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President, I only wish to answer the question of the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] and other inquiries. The total appropriation for the Charleston Harbor to June 30 last year was five and one-third million dollars, while the appropriations for the Brunswick Harbor up to the same period were three million and a half.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT].

Mr. CURTIS. Let it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add as a new section, at the end of the bill, the following:

SEC. 8. That no new work of improvement appropriated for in this act, involving an expenditure during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, of more than $100,000, shall be undertaken until the Secretary of the Treasury shall first certify to the Secretary of War that the condition of the Treasury is such that such expenditure can be made without injury to the war needs of the Government: Provided, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to any expenditure heretofore specifically recommended by the Secretary of War as a war emergency.

Mr. CURTIS. I should like to ask the Senator from Florida if he desires a vote on this amendment this evening?

Mr. FLETCHER. I think some Senators want an executive session, and I am going to move an executive session, and afterwards move for a recess.

Mr. CURTIS. And not ask for a vote this evening?

Mr. FLETCHER. Not ask for a vote this evening. I give notice that I shall move for a recess at the close of the executive session.

I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

RECESS.

Mr. FLETCHER. I move that the Senate take a recess until to-morrow at 12 o'clock noon.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Saturday, May 18, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, May 17, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rev. G. I. Keirn, D. D., superintendent of the Universalist Japan Mission, offered the following prayer:

Our Father, who art in heaven and who art here, grant, we pray Thee, that all that is done and said here to-day may be done and said out of the consciousness of Thy presence. Be Thou with us as a Nation, with its Executive head in the heavy responsibilities which Thou hast placed upon him, and with each department of our Government. Grant that in the great struggle in which we are engaged victory may come to righteousness. We desire nothing more, and we ask nothing less; and we ask it with assurance, because Thou art the God of righteousness. Grant that universal brotherhood may be the principle of all government, and that the peace of righteousness may come and abide in all the world.

We ask it in the spirit and in the name of Christ our Savior. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

INDIAN APPROPRIATIONS.

The SPEAKER. The unfinished business is the conference report on the Indian appropriation bill, H. R. 8696. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER], chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, is recognized.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I believe it was agreed just before adjournment last night that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] has 35 minutes remaining and I 25 minutes. I will ask the gentleman from Kansas to use some of his time.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON].

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, with all due respect to the very able gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER], who is chairman of the Indian Affairs Committee, I desire to suggest that this bill is too largely an Oklahoma bill and that it ought to be sent back to conference to have somewhat of the Oklahoma eliminated.

I am aware that when one attempts to speak upon this floor on the question of what we are to do with or for the Indian he is likely to be reminded immediately how little he knows on the subject by those who are seeking, even without such intent, not only to do something with the Indians and for them, but to them as well.

This bill is not an Oklahoma question alone. It is a national question, because not only are we spending $11,000,000 nationally for the Indians, but the disgrace of any unfair treatment of our Indians is a national disgrace and not alone a local one.

I should like to say something about that provision at the end of the bill which takes the immense funds of the Indians of the Five Civilized Tribes and places them subject to deposit only in Oklahoma banks, eliminating any possibility of outside competition for those funds, thereby to some extent forcing down the rate of interest that those funds will draw; and in times when there is not a demand for that money in Oklahoma I do not know whether they will get any interest or not. I refer to the concluding proviso of Senate amendment 92.

But for the little time that I have I want to speak simply about amendment No. 60, which proposes to take from the Federal Government, so far as it is located in Washington, a large share of its control over the affairs of Indians who are wards of the Government. Senate amendment No. 60, as last agreed upon in conference, is as follows:

SEC. 18. For expenses of administration of the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes, Oklahoma, and the compensation of employees, $185,000: Provided, That a report shall be made to Congress by the Superintendent of the Five Civilized Tribes, through the Secretary of the Interior, showing in detail the expenditure of all moneys appropriated by this provision: Provided further, That hereafter no part of said appropriation shall be used in forwarding the undisputed claims to be paid from individual moneys of restricted allottees, or their heirs, or in forwarding uncontested agricultural and mineral leases, excluding oil and gas leases, made by individual restricted Indian allottees, or their heirs, to the Secretary of the Interior for approval, but all such undisputed claims or uncontested leases, except oil and gas leases, now required to be approved under existing law by the Secretary of the Interior shall be paid, approved, rejected, or disapproved by the Superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes of Oklahoma: Provided, however, That any party aggrieved by any decision or order of the Superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes of Oklahoma may appeal from the same to the Secretary of the Interior within 30 days from the date of said decision or order.

This is a fine example of an effort to legislate in conference. Any rider on an appropriation bill is liable to be objectionable, but in this case the legislation to which I object is not only being carried as a rider upon an appropriation bill, but every effort has been made to radically extend and expand it in conference.

In the first place, when the bill passed the House there was in the above section simply the first clause carrying the appropriation of $185,000. In the Senate they inserted an amendment, substantially as above, providing that—

No part of said appropriation shall be used in forwarding the undisputed claims to be paid from individual moneys of restricted allottees, or their heirs, or in forwarding uncontested agricultural and mineral leases, excluding oil and gas leases, made by individual restricted Indian allottees, or their heirs, to the Secretary of the Interior for approval, but all such claims or leases, except oil and gas leases, now required to be approved under existing law by the Secretary of the Interior shall be paid, approved, rejected, or disapproved by the Superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes of Oklahoma.

You will note therein the important exemption "except oil and gas leases." In conference the conferees struck out that exemption, with the result that if their report had been adopted every oil and mineral lease would be subject to final action by an official out in Oklahoma, the Superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes.

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. I regret that I have not time. I will yield if the gentleman will get me more time, not otherwise.

Mr. HASTINGS. I just wanted to correct a misstatement.

Mr. CRAMTON. It is true there was an appeal provided in the following proviso:

Provided, however, That any party aggrieved by any decision or order of the Superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes of Oklahoma may appeal from the same to the Secretary of the Interior within 30 days from the date of said decision or order.

But no Indian would ever appeal, and those immensely valuable oil and mineral deposits of Oklahoma in the hands of the poor Indians were in danger of being swept into private white ownership. Let me quote from a letter handed to the press in 1912 by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS], who now fathers this legislation:

Everybody who is familiar with the Indian, his history and tradition, knows that he needs assistance in the management of his lands. Sixteen hundred and eighty full-blood Cherokees who were arbitrarily allotted land refused to take the patents sent to them through the mails out of the post office, and they refused to go upon the land or accept any proceeds therefrom. Will any intelligent person say that these poor, misguided people do not need assistance, that they are able to care for themselves, or that they will protect themselves? The truth is that everyone knows, who is at all familiar with the Indian, that he will not assert his rights in a civil suit.

Mr. CHANDLER of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. I regret that I have only 10 minutes. If the gentleman will get me more time, I will yield; otherwise not.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. CRAMTON. That was what they tried to do in conference, to eliminate the exception of the immensely valuable oil and gas leases, and thereby notably expand in conference the scope of the legislation; but by a point of order in the other body the conference report was sent back to the conferees, and they had to restore that exemption of oil and mineral leases, so that is not before us, not because of the protection of the Indian Affairs Committee, but because of the rules of the Senate. But the conferees went back and put in the word "hereafter" in order to make this provision permanent legislation instead of temporary; but by the ruling of Judge CRISP on yesterday—and I have great confidence in his parliamentary judgment—he holds that their effort was futile, because the intended effect of the word "hereafter" is nullified by the attendant words "no part of said appropriation."

Now, we have before us the proposition, quoted by me in the beginning of my remarks, to allow the Indians to make leases of their lands other than oil and mineral, and to prosecute other business, and have the final decision in the hands of the superintendent in Oklahoma, with no appeal to Washington, except as I have above indicated. A great deal of the harm has been taken out of the provision, but not all of it. And grave possibilities of danger remain, for it is difficult to forecast what authority may be assumed by the Superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes by virtue of it or what disorganization in the work of protecting these Indians and husbanding their resources may result.

But the proposition is wrong in principle, and I warn the House that this is simply the opening wedge. The camel has his nose under the tent and he will soon have his whole body in if this House is not watchful.

The gentleman in control of the Indian Affairs Committees of this Congress have not done what they want to do, and they have been held down to this minimum by the rules of Congress. They have had the Hastings bill before the House Committee on Indian Affairs for two Congresses and have reported it once, but have never brought it up for consideration and free and full discussion in the House. It will be wise for this House to begin to take notice of what the gentlemen from Oklahoma think is best for the Indians. Having squeezed through this limited success for the coming year, they will be bolder hereafter and urge more complete demolition of Washington supervision of Indian affairs and of Washington protection of the interests of the Indians from local pressure, political and otherwise. The Hastings bill is the next step, and then will come demand for complete divorce of the Interior Department from supervision of Oklahoma Indians. All they will want from Washington will be appropriations to care for destitute, landless Indians, who have disposed of their birthrights for miserable messes of pottage.

The Hastings bill, as reported from the House Committee on Indian Affairs June 29, 1916, by the able chairman of that committee, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER], reads as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma shall, after the passage and approval of this act, have and exercise all the authority now conferred by law upon the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior, or either of them, respecting the lands allotted to the enrolled members of the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma and their individual moneys: Provided, That any party aggrieved by any decision or order of the Superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma may, within 30 days from the date of said order or service of such decision, appeal from said order or decision to the Secretary of the Interior.

That is where the gentlemen from Oklahoma are leading Congress in their direction of Indian affairs. Shall we follow them? Shall we even start on the way by accepting the principle which they seek to establish in this conference report?

Is local control of these matters better than detached control? Is it better to have final decision in a political appointee in Oklahoma rather than in the experienced Bureau of Indian Affairs, containing many skilled advisers holding their positions under civil service, and rather than in the Secretary of the Interior, entrenched in the support of national sentiment for justice to the Indians, and unaffected by local pressure for rape of their rights?

Why is so radical a change urged in case of the Five Civilized Tribes? They have an immensely valuable heritage of agricultural and grazing lands, of land rich in oil and minerals. Why is it sought to give to an Oklahoma political appointee the final decision in all matters pertaining to their vast estates?

Yesterday we heard much about——

Mr. CHANDLER of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CRAMTON. I am sorry that I have not the time. We heard yesterday much about the Indians of less than half Indian blood, and of their capacity for business. To that we must subscribe. We all know the gentlemen from Oklahoma, Mr. CARTER, Mr. HASTINGS, and Mr. CHANDLER, and others, and their capacity. But there are thousands of Indians whom they did not talk about yesterday, the Indians of more than half Indian blood. I would be glad to quote a little from the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS] in what he said about some of these Indians in a letter in 1912:

We might as well be frank about it. Everybody who is familiar with the Indian, his history and tradition, knows that he needs assistance in the management of his lands. * * *

Mr. HASTINGS. I trust that the gentleman will yield.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman had 25 minutes last night.

Mr. HASTINGS. The gentleman does not want to misquote me, does he?

Mr. CRAMTON. This is a signed letter.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman further says:

Through my veins courses Cherokee blood. I trust that I will not live long enough to see the full-blood members of my race homeless in their own country, wanderers in their own land. They thought they were protected by the old treaties, binding upon them and sacred to them; they resisted the change in their form of government; they did not invite the individualization of their lands, because they had never been used to an individual title, and they appreciated that they had never had any experience in dealing with the title to lands. Their fears were justified, for the records show that thousands of leases, deeds, and other evidences of encumbrances in violation of protective provisions of law for little or no consideration have been gotten from them and placed of record.

The gentleman does not want them to be wanderers in their own land, he said, and I am sure that is his sincere desire. But, unfortunately, if Congress follows him in the legislation he proposes and which the House Committee on Indian Affairs, headed by another gentleman from Oklahoma, indorses, we are likely in the end to find many full-blood Indians of the Five Tribes landless and destitute.

The Deputy Commissioner of Indian Affairs, Mr. Meritt, stated before the Committee on Indian Affairs at the hearings last session upon the Hastings bill:

The act of May 27, 1908, removed the restrictions on more than 10,000,000 acres of land. There were originally belonging to the Five Civilized Tribes 19,525,266 acres, which were classified and appraised by 40-acre tracts. It will be seen that restrictions have been removed from practically two-thirds of the enrolled members of the Five Civilized Tribes. It is estimated that 90 per cent of the enrolled members of the Five Civilized Tribes who had their restrictions removed by legislation are to-day without any lands whatever. In other words, more than 50 per cent of the membership of the Five Civilized Tribes have, within the last 10 years, passed from landlords to tenants.

The gentleman says there is nothing in the legislation to bring that about, but I say that is what the gentleman's bill, the Hastings bill, would be very likely to bring about. The Hastings bill points the next step. So Congress might well watch the tendency of these gentlemen and clip their wings before it is too late.

Mr. Meritt further said in connection with what I have above quoted:

In view of the great loss of property which has resulted to those members who have had their restrictions removed by legislative enactment, it is clearly the duty of the department to see that every precaution is taken to protect the property rights of the 35,000 Indians, most of whom are full bloods, whose restrictions have not yet been removed. Some of these restricted Indians have oil allotments valued at hundreds of thousands of dollars. The records show that there was an oil production on Indian lands of the Five Civilized Tribes last year amounting to 27,098,994 barrels, and royalty interest paid thereon to Indians amounting to $1,537,727. Revenue derived from agricultural and nonproducing leases approved by the department during the last fiscal year amounted to $354,571. These restricted Indians owned on June 30, 1915, 3,318,370 acres of land. There are deposited to the credit of restricted Indians approximately $5,000,000, accruing from rents, royalties, and the sale of lands.

Why lodge all the responsibility for protection of these interests in an official stationed in Oklahoma, a political appointee, subject to intense local pressure?

It is said the Indians suffer grave inconvenience by reason of existing regulations; that all leases and expenditures must be sent to Washington for approval, and that tedious and unending delays result.

But in the hearings on the Hastings bill the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS], in his very interesting and illuminating statement as to present requirements, stated that a restricted Indian can now make an agricultural lease of his homestead for one year or less, and of his surplus lands for five years or less, without reference of same to Washington for approval. This must take care of multitudes of such leases.

On the other hand, to make such a lease for a longer period, or to make an oil or mineral lease of his land, or to sell any of his land, approval of the Secretary of the Interior is necessary; and in the case of untutored and incompetent Indians such questions are of such fundamental importance to their welfare that such approval should be required.

That serious delay commonly results from such reference to Washington does not appear to be true. At the hearings from which I have quoted, the Indian Bureau furnished a detailed report which showed that of 1,058 restriction cases received approximately 90 per cent had department action taken thereon and were mailed to the superintendent within 10 days from the date of receipt by the Indian Office. In the other 10 per cent of said cases the delays were occasioned in most of said cases by some complication of law or question of general policy. Similar data as to oil leases show that, after the department had once decided upon the general policy to be followed in connection with such leases, action in individual cases has been generally taken within a very few days from its receipt.

Approval of the Secretary is also required with reference to payment of a claim out of the funds of a restricted Indian. This carried out literally would subject the Indian to needless delay of red tape. But, happily, the law is not so administered. In the hearings I find this order applying to such cases:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, D. C., March 6, 1915.

To all disbursing officers of the Indian Service:

Section 9 (A) of the Regulations Concerning the Handling of Individual Indian Money, approved July 14, 1913, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"All emergency needs not provided for in other sections of these regulations may be met by the superintendent without securing specific authority. Expenditures under this section shall be reported in the quarterly accounts, and this section referred to as the authority for the expenditure."

Please acknowledge receipt of this circular and paste same between pages 4 and 5 of your book of Regulations Concerning the Handling of Individual Indian Money.

Respectfully,
E. B. MERITT,
Assistant Commissioner.

Approved, March 15, 1915.
A. A. JONES,
First Assistant Secretary.

Speaking before the committee with reference to this order, Mr. Meritt testified, in part, as follows:

Mr. SNYDER. You say that under the general rule in the department the superintendent has general authority to handle moneys in these matters?

Mr. MERITT. Yes, sir.

Mr. SNYDER. Well, does he handle them?

Mr. MERITT. Yes, sir.

Mr. SNYDER. What proportion does he handle, as to the whole number?

Mr. MERITT. I should say that he handles at this time probably 90 per cent of the investing and spending of the funds of Indians without first procuring authority from the Indian Office except in a general way.

It accordingly appears that, due to the present policy of the department to eliminate red tape where the interests of the Nation's wards will not suffer thereby, preliminary reference and approval of these claims to Washington has in most cases been done away with; but in cases of importance and where good reason for such action appears they are finally passed upon by officers removed from local influence.

That the Indian Bureau and this administration of the Interior Department are solely desirous of perpetuation of their powers and are blind to the interests and progress of the Indians seems to be rather freely intimated here, though I do not think any gentlemen here really desire to be so understood seriously. In any event, the evidence of the case is against them. While insisting on retention of their authority as to the incompetent it is constantly becoming easier and more a matter of course for the competent Indian or person of part Indian blood to be given his freedom from all restrictions. In the last report of the Bureau of Indian Affairs appears the following declaration of policy, which was announced April 17, 1917:

DECLARATION OF POLICY IN THE ADMINISTRATION OF INDIAN AFFAIRS.

During the past four years the efforts of the administration of Indian affairs have been largely concentrated on the following fundamental activities—the betterment of health conditions of Indians, the suppression of the liquor traffic among them, the improvement of their industrial conditions, the further development of vocational training in their schools, and the protection of the Indians' property. Rapid progress has been made along all these lines, and the work thus reorganized and revitalized will go on with increased energy. With these activities and accomplishments well under way, we are now ready to take the next step in our administrative program.

The time has come for discontinuing guardianship of all competent Indians and giving even closer attention to the incompetent that they may more speedily achieve competency.

Broadly speaking, a policy of greater liberalism will henceforth prevail in Indian administration to the end that every Indian, as soon as he has been determined to be as competent to transact his own business as the average white man, shall be given full control of his property and have all his lands and moneys turned over to him, after which he will no longer be a ward of the Government.

Pursuant to this policy, the following rules shall be observed:

1. Patents in fee: To all able-bodied adult Indians of less than one-half Indian blood, there will be given as far as may be under the law full and complete control of all their property. Patents in fee shall be issued to all adult Indians of one-half or more Indian blood who may, after careful investigation, be found competent, provided, that where deemed advisable patents in fee shall be withheld for not to exceed 40 acres as a home.

Indian students, when they are 21 years of age, or over, who complete the full course of instruction in the Government schools, receive diplomas, and have demonstrated competency will be so declared.

2. Sale of lands: A liberal ruling will be adopted in the matter of passing upon applications for the sale of inherited Indian lands, where the applicants retain other lands and the proceeds are to be used to improve the homesteads or for other equally good purposes. A more liberal ruling than has hitherto prevailed will hereafter be followed with regard to the applications of noncompetent Indians for the sale of their lands, where they are old and feeble and need the proceeds for their support.

3. Certificates of competency: The rules which are made to apply in the granting of patents in fee and the sale of lands will be made equally applicable in the matter of issuing certificates of competency.

4. Individual Indian moneys: Indians will be given unrestricted control of all their individual Indian moneys upon issuance of patents in fee or certificates of competency. Strict limitations will not be placed upon the use of funds of the old, the indigent, and the invalid.

5. Pro rata shares—trust funds: As speedily as possible their pro rata shares in tribal trust or other funds shall be paid to all Indians who have been declared competent, unless the legal status of such funds prevents. Where practicable the pro rata shares of incompetent Indians will be withdrawn from the Treasury and placed in banks to their individual credit.

6. Elimination of ineligible pupils from the Government Indian schools: In many of our boarding schools Indian children are being educated at Government expense whose parents are amply able to pay for their education and have public-school facilities at or near their homes. Such children shall not hereafter be enrolled in Government Indian schools supported by gratuity appropriations, except on payment of actual per capita cost and transportation.

These rules are hereby made effective, and all Indian Bureau administrative officers at Washington and in the field will be governed accordingly.

This is a new and far-reaching declaration of policy. It means the dawn of a new era in Indian administration. It means that the competent Indian will no longer be treated as half ward and half citizen. It means reduced appropriations by the Government and more self-respect and independence for the Indian. It means the ultimate absorption of the Indian race into the body politic of the Nation. It means, in short, the beginning of the end of the Indian problem.

In carrying out this policy, I cherish the hope that all real friends of the Indian race will lend their aid and hearty cooperation.

CATO SELLS, Commissioner.

Approved:
FRANKLIN K. LANE,
Secretary.

As to this, Commissioner Sells states in his report:

The cardinal principle of this declaration revolves around this central thought—that an Indian who is as competent as an ordinary white man to transact the ordinary affairs of life should be given untrammeled control of his property and assured his personal rights in every particular so that he may have the opportunity of working out his own destiny. The practical application of this principle will relieve from the guardianship of the Government a very large number of Indians who are qualified to mingle on a plane of business equality with the white people. It will also begin the reduction of expenditures and afford a better opportunity for closer attention to those who will need our protecting care for some years longer.

A vitally important result also will be obtained in placing a true ideal before those Indians remaining under guardianship. It will be a strong motive for endeavoring to reach the goal of competency, and prove a material incentive to a sincere effort for that end.

This new declaration of policy is calculated to release practically all Indians who have one-half or more white blood, although there will be exceptions in the case of those who are manifestly incompetent. It will also give like fredom from guardianship to those having more than one-half Indian blood when, after careful investigation, it is determined that they are capable of handling their own affairs. This latter class, however, will be much more limited since only about 40 per cent of the Indians of the country speak the English language and the larger majority of this latter class still greatly need the protecting arm of the Government.

The department is working out these problems in a manner that is sane, wise, and independent of local interest or prejudice and should not be interfered with by radical legislation such as the Hastings bill, which is the goal of the Oklahoma gentleman.

It may well be said that I do not know much about Indian affairs. But I have a right to rely on Mr. Meritt, the Deputy Commissioner of Indian Affairs, whose views in opposition to such legislation I have briefly quoted.

I have a right to rely upon the judgment and experience of the able and efficient Secretary of the Interior, Hon. Franklin K. Lane, who has twice, over his signature, as such official, condemned the Hastings bill. Under date of February 23, 1916, he wrote as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, February 23, 1916.

MY DEAR MR. STEPHENS: I am in receipt of your letter of January 13, 1916, transmitting, with request for report thereon, H. R. 108, entitled:

"A bill to confer upon the Superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma the authority now conferred by law upon the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior respecting lands allotted to the enrolled members of the Five Civilized Tribes and their individual moneys."

The annual report of the Superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes for the year ending June 30, 1915, shows that lands have been allotted to Indians of the Five Civilized Tribes in 40 counties of the State of Oklahoma, covering an area of 19,525,966 acres; that there have been enrolled 101,521 members, which comprises approximately one-third of the Indian population of the United States. By virtue of acts of Congress, restrictions have been removed in a large number of cases, so that on June 30, 1915, there were 32,540 restricted Indians of the Five Civilized Tribes. They had 3,318,370 acres of restricted lands under the immediate supervision of the superintendent. There are oil lands of incalculable value in the Creek, Chickasaw, and Seminole Nations, which last year produced 27,098,994.02 gross barrels of oil, in which the royalty interest of the Indian allottees amounted to $1,537,727.47. An annual revenue of $354,571.70 was derived from agricultural and nonproducing leases approved by this department.

The vastness of the estate that is being administered is apparent from the foregoing facts.

The passage of the proposed legislation would, among other powers, place in the hands of the Superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes all leasing for oil and gas mining purposes, all removal of restrictions, all investments of individual Indian funds, and the settlement of innumerable questions of policy arising out of these matters.

By the act of June 30, 1834 (4 Stat. L., 735) the Department of Indian Affairs was established, with a Commissioner of Indian Affairs as its immediate executive head and with supervision and appellate powers vested in the Secretary of War. See also act of July 9, 1832 (4 Stat. L., 564). By the act of March 3, 1849 (9 Stat. L., 395), establishing the Interior Department, the supervisory and appellate powers previously exercised by the Secretary of War with relation to all acts of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs were transferred to the Secretary of the Interior and the Indian Office was placed under the newly created department.

Section 463 of the Revised Statutes of the United States reads:

"The Commissioner of Indian Affairs shall, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, and agreeably to such regulations as the President may prescribe, have the management of all Indian affairs and of all matters arising out of Indian relations."

The above enactments are of long standing, evidencing a well-established governmental policy applicable to the dealings of the Federal Government with its wards. Justice Holmes, in delivering the opinion of the court in West v. Hitchcock (205 U. S., 80), said:

"The Department of the Interior generally has been the custodian of Indian rights."

The regulation of commerce with Indian tribes is a Federal obligation, the executive functions resting primarily upon the President. In the performance of many of his duties arising out of Indian affairs, as in other matters, he acts through an appropriate department of the Government and through the chief officers charged with the immediate supervision of the affairs of that department. (Wilcox v. Jackson, 13 Peters, 498.)

One of the chief reasons for placing the control of Indian affairs under the National Government was the local prejudice of people of the various States against the Indians. In speaking thereof the Supreme Court, in the celebrated case of United States v. Kagama (118 U. S. 375, 383), said:

"These Indian tribes are the wards of the Nation. They are communities dependent on the United States. Dependent largely for their daily food. Dependent for their political rights. They owe no allegiance to the States, and receive from them no protection. Because of the local ill feeling, the people of the States where they are found are often their deadliest enemies. From their very weakness and helplessness, so largely due to the course of dealing of the Federal Government with them and the treaties in which it has been promised, there arises the duty of protection, and with it the power."

While this case was decided in 1885, conditions therein referred to still exist, even if in a modified degree.

Attention is invited to the fact that in the course of business constant reference is necessary to the records and papers of this department and other departments. Especially is this true with litigation. Transference of jurisdiction would, I feel sure, be accompanied with confusion, delay, and uncertainty in obtaining information contained in such records and papers. If sole supervision were granted to the superintendent of the Five Civilized Tribes in the matters enumerated in H. R. 108, the reasons therefor could be advanced for also giving him the sole authority and supervision in the matter of the disposal of the tribal properties worth many million dollars. In the event of the passage of the proposed legislation, the decisions of the superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes would in said individual Indian matters referred to in the bill be final, and there would be no right of appeal. No person who initiates and directs the work in the field should in matters of such importance be the final arbiter as to his own acts. The conferring of the power proposed by this bill would vest in the superintendent of the Five Civilized Tribes absolute authority in the administration of the matters indicated, a greater authority than is now conferred upon the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, whose acts are largely supervised by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. Gabe E. Parker, the present superintendent of the Five Civilized Tribes, in his report of November 3, 1915, concerning the protest and pressure brought to bear upon Thomas Long, a full-blood Creek Indian, to induce him to invest his accrued oil royalties (of which he had to his credit $60,000) in the purchase of certain land near Muskogee, Okla., said:

"There is every pressure imaginable, not only from those who desire to separate the Indian from his money, but in many cases from Indians themselves, brought to bear upon me to purchase various and sundry things with Indian moneys, or to make loans on all kinds and classes of security, and even to pay out the money without restrictions thereon whatever, to individuals, guardians, administrators, and every other conceivable way possible to get the money out of the hands of the department."

This is but an illustration of a situation. My experience leads me to the conclusion that to bestow such power as is proposed in this bill upon a field official would place in serious hazard the moneys, the properties, and the welfare of our Indian wards. There is abundant evidence in the records of this department to make me feel that this would be a most perilous step. As conditions are now the Superintendent of the Five Civilized Tribes is under the constant check of this department, and the very fact that the disposition of these great properties, while primarily passed upon by him, are subject to supervision by an authority that is removed from local influence gives him a strength which otherwise he could not have. We have millions of dollars of individual Indian money on deposit in the banks of Oklahoma and tens of millions of dollars of property that is under our care and control, which, in my judgment, should not be vested in the discretion of a single individual, no matter how honest he may be. I am satisfied that no private institution—a railroad, for instance, or a great estate—would regard it as businesslike to do what is here proposed.

I sympathize with the desire to decentralize as far as is practicable and wise the control of these properties, giving as wide a discretion as from time to time may seem advisable to local officials, but our trust can not be carried out in the highest good faith by throwing upon the shoulders of one man so great a burden of responsibility.

Cordially, yours,

FRANKLIN K. LANE, Secretary.

Hon. JOHN H. STEPHENS,
Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs,
House of Representatives.

Again he wrote the following under date of February 7, 1918, having reference to amendment 60 substantially as it now stands, except that oil, gas, and other mineral leases are now excepted:

FEBRUARY 7, 1918.

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs, United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I am advised that Senator OWEN has offered before the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs the following amendment to H. R. 8696, the Indian appropriation bill, to wit:

"Provided, That no part of said appropriation shall be used in forwarding the undisputed claims to be paid from individual moneys of restricted allottees, or their heirs, or in forwarding uncontested agricultural, oil, gas, or other mineral leases made by individual restricted Indian allottees, or their heirs, to the Secretary of the Interior for approval, but all such claims or leases now required to be approved under existing law by the Secretary of the Interior shall be paid, approved, rejected, or disapproved by the Superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes of Oklahoma: Provided, however, That any party aggrieved by any decision or order of the Superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes of Oklahoma may appeal from the same to the Secretary of the Interior within 30 days from the date of said decision or order."

The proposed amendment is a modified form of H. R. 108, commonly called the Hastings bill, introduced in the House on December 6, 1915, on which I made an adverse report under date of February 23, 1916. Practically the only difference in effect between the Hastings bill, H. R. 108, and the proposed amendment is that the amendment proposes that only undisputed claims and uncontested leases are to be approved, but the right of appeal is afforded an aggrieved party in disputed cases. Such an appeal would provide practically no protection to an Indian who initiates or assents to the removal of his restrictions for the purpose of procuring ready money or for an inadequate bonus given for an oil lease on his allotted land, and therefore such Indian will seldom, if ever, appeal from a decision of the superintendent to the Secretary of the Interior. As Mr. Hastings said (see hearings on H. R. 108, p. 43, line 29):

"The truth is that everyone knows who is at all familiar with the Indian that he will not assert his rights in a civil suit."

The charge that endless red tape and needless delay prolong the work of the Five Civilized Tribes when supervised by the Secretary of the Interior is not well founded and is not supported by the records of the department.

The Superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes during the fiscal year 1917 handled approximately $42,000,000, and to place in the hands of a local field official final authority, such as is proposed in the amendment, would, it is believed, be without precedent and exceedingly unwise.

No local official should be given such vast powers of final decision without supervisory powers of a superior officer. The adult restricted Indians are not urging any such amendment, but it is an attempt to transfer to local control the vast interests of over 30,000 restricted Indians, to be supervised by a single superintendent of the Indian Service as the sole arbiter of his acts.

Cordially, yours,

FRANKLIN K. LANE,
Secretary.

I have a right to rely upon the Indian Rights Association, which has for 40 years fought for fairer and saner treatment of the Indian. In the thirty-fifth annual report of that society it is stated:

A large proportion of the Indians of the Five Civilized Tribes have had but slight experience in business affairs, especially in dealing with titles affecting real estate, and can be easily duped, as shown by almost endless reported instances. It will be suicidal to remove the protection of the Federal Government over these wards and place them under a superintendent made subservient to State patronage by requirement that the appointment must be confirmed by the Senate. As was stated by the late Hon. Joseph H. Choate, in addressing Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST, chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, United States Senate:

"The welfare of our Indians is a solemn national obligation. We have no more sacred trust than the protection of the weak from being overreached by the strong. From the earliest times the intent of our people has been to give the Indian that protection."

The Indian Rights Association has actively opposed the adoption of this class of legislation.

I have a right to rely on the judgment of the late Hon. Joseph H. Choate, who fought the adoption of such legislation as this.

On these men I do rely, and I appeal to the House not to establish this precedent, not to permit the entering wedge, which, once it is in, will be followed by renewed efforts for adoption of the full doctrine of the Hastings bill.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS].

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, for 25 years I have represented the Cherokee Tribe of Indians before the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes, before the departments in Washington, before the committees of Congress, before all the courts of the United States, and I want to say to you that I have always been the friend of the Indian and am now. The trouble is that the history of the Five Civilized Tribes is not understood by the Members of this House. The Members of this House do not understand that prior to 10 years ago, for a hundred years, there was absolutely no supervision by the Federal Government. They made their own laws, they executed their own laws, they had their own courts, they had their own schools, they made their own appropriations and disbursed their own money, and there was absolutely no supervision.

With reference to this bill, amendment No. 60 does not take away a single bit of supervision over the Five Civilized Tribes. It simply transfers it from the Federal official at Washington to a Federal official in Oklahoma. The Federal official is nominated by the President, confirmed by the Senate, and he has 265 civil-service employees to help him carry out the laws. Our contention is that as to tribal matters, as to the larger questions that need legislation, they should be supervised by the office here. But as to the little things, as to individual matters, they ought to be supervised by the men at home, by the 265 civil employees that are down there.

Let me tell you Members of Congress that the record shows that there were 9,725 letters forwarded to the Indian Office by the superintendent; that there were 8,125 returned. We people who know the Indian, who have his best interest at heart, believe that we could best protect him by men on the ground, who are sympathetic, who have lived with him, who know him, and who can act intelligently and speedily on every question. It does not take away a bit of supervision from any member of the Five Civilized Tribes, but transfers it from Washington, 1,500 miles away, to a local Federal official, and that is all it does do. I never made any statement to the contrary. I have always stood for this legislation. I made a speech two years ago favoring it and spoke at length yesterday. [Applause.]

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. VENABLE].

Mr. VENABLE. Mr. Speaker, I should like to have followed the gentlemen who are going to oppose the idea of making an appropriation for the relief and education of the Mississippi Choctaws. It appears that I must proceed, and so I must anticipate as best I can what they will say.

My purpose is to demonstrate to the gentlemen of the House that this item is absolutely right and absolutely just.

The purpose of all government, as I understand it, in its last analysis, is to do right and justice, and to see that right and justice are maintained in the world. So I assume that if I can succeed in showing that under the facts the item is right and just it will receive the support of the Members of the House.

What are the facts, and let me state them as strongly as I can against the Mississippi Choctaws?

A number of years ago they owned certain lands in Mississippi. The tribe moved west, and the Indians of Mississippi who remained there were given certain lands, or rather retained certain lands, in Mississippi. After that they were paid certain scrip for those lands. There are in Mississippi to-day a number of Indians—about a thousand or twelve hundred—full-blooded Choctaws, that this provision is designed to relieve. Under the laws of the State of Mississippi these Indians can qualify as citizens and take part in the affairs of the State. Mississippi has maintained as best she could a few schools for these Indians. About a year ago an appropriation was made for an investigation of their condition, and the commissioner sent by the Interior Department reported that these Indians were in a deplorable condition; that they needed schools; that they needed relief; that their children were growing up in ignorance, and that many could not speak the English language. In fact, everyone who knows anything about the condition of the Mississippi Choctaw knows that unless something is done for his relief it means a practical extermination of that people. Those are the facts. In other words, we have in Mississippi a thousand or twelve hundred full-blooded Mississippi Choctaws who are totally unfit to meet the competition of white civilization. I have not the time to go into a fuller statement as to their condition. Broadly speaking, these are the facts that can not be disputed.

Is this appropriation right and just? As I understand it, the basis of all appropriations for the relief of the Indians is on the broad ground, as has been decided by the Supreme Court of the United States, that the white race having, as we say, a superior civilization, came to America, came in contact with the race which had a totally different civilization, an inferior race, took the country and built it up, changed entirely the living conditions of this inferior race, and put them in sharp competition with white civilization so that they must either conform to it or die out. This has been the fate of all inferior races that have come in contact with a more complex civilization throughout the history of the world. The Supreme Court decided that by virtue of the fact that we put those people in a situation where they must either conform to white standards of civilization or die out, a moral obligation was imposed on the white race to see that these people were furnished the facilities and enabled to become adapted to the white civilization in order that they might not die. It decided that a ward and guardianship relation existed between the Government of this country and the Indian. If these be the reasons for the establishment of the relationship of guardian and ward, then the limitation of the guardianship and the definition of it is to be found within the reasons. The reasons were that we brought these people——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. VENABLE. The reasons were that we brought these people into contact with this civilization, so the moral duty and the duty of the wardship is to furnish them the facilities to adapt themselves to the white civilization. It is said that we gave them lands and that they are asking for more. Yes; we gave them lands, but we gave them lands unrestricted. We gave them land that they did not know anything about. We gave them lands without any restriction, and the thing that happened is what anyone would expect. The Indian alienated his lands for a song in many instances, and became the victim of every blackleg that came along and is now in a pitiful condition. We gave them money, it is true, but the same thing happened. In other words, we gave a man totally unfit to deal with the machinery and the laws of our white civilization certain property, and the result followed which could be expected. We can not plead in estoppel of the performance of our duty as guardian that we gave these men certain things which they have thrown away because of their limitations, when we knew they would throw them away, when we knew they were incompetent to handle them, and when we knew they would be reduced to the situation that now faces them. Some one says that they are citizens, and that we do not want to take over people who are citizens under the Government. You have done it in three instances already. If the relationship of ward and guardian exists, how can we discharge ourselves from that obligation by performing an act with which the Indian had nothing to do by making him a present of citizenship whether he wanted it or not by a State government.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has again expired.

Mr. VENABLE. One more minute.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield one more minute to the gentleman.

Mr. VENABLE. If that argument be sound, then let the Nation be discharged of all of its obligation to the Indians in this country by inducing the various States and Territories to confer citizenship upon the Indians within their borders. It does not make any difference about citizenship. The Indian was not consulted, did not have to be consulted, did not want it, I suppose, and have never exercised the privilege of citizenship in Mississippi. In other words, because the State gave the Indian something he did not care for, something with which he had nothing to do, it is now said by that act it relieved the Federal Government from discharging its duty. If my reasoning be correct for the grounds of the wardship, as I have stated them, then it is the moral obligation of the Federal Government to give the facilities to the Indian by which he can have a fair opportunity of equipping himself for citizenship under a white civilization. [Applause.]

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD].

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I realize something of the difficulty in the solution of problems growing out of our Indian relations. It is not a question of easy solution. If all of the Indians were equally intelligent, were equally capable of looking after their own business, like many of the Indians now are, then many of these problems that must come to Congress for solution would be quite easy to solve. Having a small reservation in the district which I have the honor to represent, and knowing something of the disposition and traits of the Indians, I feel that there are things in this bill that ought not to be here. I have been very well pleased with the able, wise, and considerate policy in dealing with the Indian problem by the Secretary of the Interior and his very able Commissioner of Indian Affairs. I feel, therefore, that the bill introduced by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS], the principles of which are recognized by this conference report, ought not to be become a part of the statutes of the United States. Let me read just a line from the splendid letter of Hon. Joseph Choate, written on April 3, 1916, on this subject. He says:

Legislation is now pending in Congress which, if adopted, may overturn the present Indian policy and subject the Indian to the worst possible forms of spoliation, not only from the outsider but from unscrupulous persons within the tribal membership.

I shall put the entire letter in the RECORD.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. What is the date of the letter?

Mr. GOOD. April 3, 1916.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. That does not apply to this bill.

Mr. GOOD. It is a letter absolutely opposed to the principle of taking from the administration here in Washington, the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, the right to pass finally upon those questions which vitally affect the Indian and his property. I do not believe there is a person here who, if he were a member of his own State legislature, would vote to take from the courts the power to pass upon reports of guardians, administrators, and executors; and yet by this amendment which comes in the conference report we are turning over to the local Superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes the power to pass finally upon a great many questions that affect these Indians and their property, and we all know the local pressure that will be brought to bear upon him. He can not act impartially; I fear he will not be able to act wisely. I do not blame the gentlemen from Oklahoma. Their constituents are demanding this kind of legislation. They want these barriers removed, and when they are removed that same constituency will demand things under the authority that the local representative ought to deny but can not because of local pressure. The decision of this important matter should be left to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. That progressive policies for the treatment of the Indian have been adopted by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in this regard is seen from his report, from which I quote the following:

A vitally important result also will be obtained in placing a true ideal before those Indians remaining under guardianship. It will be a strong motive for endeavoring to reach the goal of competency and prove a material incentive to a sincere effort for that end.

This new declaration of policy is calculated to release practically all Indians who have one-half or more white blood, although there will be exceptions in the case of those who are manifestly incompetent. It will also give like freedom from guardianship to those having more than one-half Indian blood when, after careful investigation, it is determined that they are capable of handling their own affairs. This latter class, however, will be much more limited since only about 40 per cent of the Indians of the country speak the English language and the large majority of this latter class still greatly need the protecting arm of the Government.

As an additional safeguard for those Indians of half or less white blood, a homestead commensurate with the value of the property to be patented may be retained by the allottee and made inallenable except by approval of the Secretary of the Interior. In other cases of manifest incompetency the trust period on their land will be extended whenever it is deemed beneficial and in the interest of the Indians themselves.

As a corollary of this central idea of the declaration, a more liberal policy has been adopted in the sale of inherited lands and Indian allotments, and the Indians are urged to sell that portion of their land which is not available or adaptable for their own uses and utilize the proceeds for the improvement of their remaining land or increasing their facilities for its fuller development by purchasing stock, machinery, etc.

A liberal policy is now being pursued in allowing the use of the proceeds of the sale of the lands of old and indigent Indians, and following the general line of procedure of State laws, in all sales of allotted lands where circumstances warrant it, a part of the allotment may be retained as a homestead so that the Indian may not be deprived of a home. Especially is this desirable where an Indian and his wife need such place during their declining years.

The recent material advancement of the Indian has been remarkable and has kept pace with the vigorous policy of giving him help toward self-support, leading to final dissolution of the ties of paternalism. In 1911 the Indians cultivated 388,025 acres, and last year 678,529 acres; in 1911 they raised crops valued at $1,951,000, sold stock valued at $900,000, realized from native industries, such as basket making, blanket weaving, etc., $847,556; and last year they raised crops valued at $5,293,719, sold $4,583,083 worth of stock, and increased the value of their native wares to $1,206,826. The Indian wage earners for private individuals in 1911 were 3,204, and last year the number thus engaged increased to 6,902, while the value of all live stock owned by the Indians has risen from $17,971,209 in 1911 to $28,824,439 last year.

The Indian is discovering himself. He is coming to a realization of his own possibilities; putting the past behind him and looking to the future; beginning to understand and appreciate the accomplishments resulting from industry; to see the profit in individual effort and comprehend the ultimate difference between a cultivated and uncultivated field; the fact that it requires no more labor or expense to raise a well-bred, profitable animal than it does to produce a long-horn steer, an inbred sheep, or an old-time Indian pony.

Vital statistics for the same period are not available, but the strenuous efforts being made for a betterment of the purely human side of the Indians is illustrated in the fact that 42,110 families, or at least 200,000 Indians, have forsaken the teepee and live in houses built largely in a sanitary manner.

Evidences of material and humanitarian advancement are everywhere apparent. Industrially and socially the Indians are making unparalleled strides toward self-support and civilization. I have discovered that with sympathetic cooperation and intelligent encouragement their response is almost universal.

I have been exceedingly gratified with the very general approval given our new declaration of policy by the Indians and white citizens of the country. There is every indication that it will speedily bring about a revolution in the administration of Indian affairs, greatly benefiting the Indians, with a corresponding reduction in appropriations.

The Indian problem can not be solved in a day; it must be brought about in a deeply serious, in all respects courageous, and continuously sympathetic manner; but the time is approaching when governmental care and supervision will, generally speaking, become unnecessary. However, every true friend of the Indian should guard against precipitate and ill-advised action.

If these policies are carried out, and I am sure they will be, there can be no need for this legislation, which is likely to result in great harm.

But, Mr. Speaker, the thing I desire to call to the attention of the House with regard to this conference report is a matter that was discussed by the very eloquent gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. VENABLE] who has just preceded me. I will not attempt to answer his argument by argument of my own. I do not know enough about that question to do so fully. I recall the argument of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] in his attempt to compel a part of the Indian fund belonging to the Choctaws in Oklahoma to be devoted to the Choctaws in Mississippi. I recall the eloquent argument of the gentleman from Oklahoma in reply. And now, what have we? The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] was defeated. The gentleman from Oklahoma, the chairman of the House conferees, opposed the gentleman from Mississippi. I have those speeches. I wish I had time to read them to the House, but must content myself by putting limited portions of them all in the RECORD. It appears now these two gentlemen have gotten together and they have arrived at this conclusion: That the funds of the Choctaws in Oklahoma will not be disturbed, but that the Choctaws in Mississippi shall now be allowed to put their hands into the Federal Treasury. That they shall not get the money from the funds of the Choctaws of Oklahoma, but, on the contrary, from the taxpayers of the United States. So in this conference report the conferees provide for a farmer and a field matron at $5,000, and the education of the Choctaws in Mississippi by the establishment and maintenance of day schools, including the purchase of land and the construction of necessary buildings, $20,000. And then in encouraging the industry and self-support among the Indians and to aid them in building homes, in the culture of foods, grains, cotton, and other crops, $25,000. To commence with, this conference report recognizes as legal the claims of the Choctaws of Mississippi. It recognizes they have legal rights against the Government, and they appropriate $75,000 for those rights. What did the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] say in regard to this proposition on January 8, 1915? He said:

The gentleman from Mississippi has often told this House that the Mississippi Choctaws had never been given a day in court, and I doubt not that every man within hearing of my voice has heard him make the statement. He has asseverated and reiterated that the cases of the Mississippi Choctaws have never been tried by court, commission, or otherwise; that they have never had a day in court, had never any trial. Let us hear what the gentleman from Mississippi says about that himself. On January 29 of this year the gentleman from Mississippi introduced a bill providing for the opening of the rolls of the Five Civilized Tribes. Let us read section 2 of the gentleman's own bill, the Harrison bill, and see what information the gentleman really had when he gave this solemn statement to the House. Now, the gentleman knew, or should have known that the Mississippi Choctaw contention had been adjudicated by the trial of the Jack Amos case, not only by a Federal commission but by a Federal court, and that because of the settlement of a similar contention in the Cherokee Nation against Stephens case this Jack Amos case had been dismissed by the attorneys for the Mississippi Choctaws themselves. But let us see whether the gentleman from Mississippi was fully informed on this question. In this Harrison bill I find the following language:

"SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior shall be vested with the power to determine the rights of said claimants upon such evidence as may be produced by the applicant, without regard to any adverse judgment or decision heretofore rendered by any court or commission to the Five Civilized Tribes or the Department of the Interior, and without regard to any condition or disability heretofore imposed by any act of Congress."

What does this section 2 propose to do; provide for adjudication of cases which have not heretofore been tried? Not by any manner of means. It provides to determine the rights of individuals. How? "Without regard to any adverse judgment or decision heretofore rendered by any court or commission," no matter though the Supreme Court of the land may have rendered a decision. If these cases have not been tried, why, pray tell me, set aside decisions of courts and commissions?

On March 3, 1915, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] said this:

Mr. Speaker, this matter has been settled by the courts, on one occasion going as high as the Supreme Court of the United States. It was settled by a commission appointed and directed by a specific law to settle. It was afterwards the subject of an agreement with the Choctaws and Chickasaws in Oklahoma and was again settled. It was decided and agreed that no man should be permitted to share in the tribal estate of the Oklahoma Indians unless he established a residence in good faith on the reservation. Let me say that the native Choctaws in Oklahoma who lived there were required to be on the reservation June 28, 1898, or they were eternally and forever barred from any participation in the estate, and some can not participate in it now.

But the Mississippi Choctaws were given, by agreement, until July 1, 1903, five years after the native Choctaws had to settle on the reservation. By a subsequent act they were given until March 4, 1907, to settle on the reservation, and nobody knows it any better than the gentleman from Mississippi. I notice that the gentleman from Mississippi when dealing with facts never states them if it in the least injures his case.

Then, again, on the 9th of January he said:

No man can give any valid reason on the face of the earth why the Mississippi Choctaw has any legal, equitable, or moral right to any part of the Oklahoma Choctaw estate. Furthermore, I have been unable to find any justification for any legal or equitable claim the Mississippi Choctaws might have against the Federal Government. The Federal Government seems to have exerted every effort to protect and assist these unfortunate Indians, and the Federal Government is now under only such moral obligations to the Mississippi Choctaws as might be due any other dependent, helpless Indians who have been deprived of their property by their white neighbors in other parts of the United States.

No legal claim, no moral claim, no equitable claim says the gentleman from Oklahoma, yet conferees turn over $75,000 of the people's money at this time when everybody, aroused by patriotism, is buying thrift stamps and liberty bonds to put money into the Treasury to carry on the war. Is it not unreasonable now, in view of our situation, to take from the Treasury $75,000 and turn it over as a commencement, recognizing that there is a legal, moral, and equitable claim against the Government, of a great movement in Mississippi that will cost millions of dollars. Next year after you have acquired the ground, after you have put up this school, how much will it take to add to the ground and to improve it and to maintain that school? I undertake to say that this item alone will grow to not less than $500,000 a year, and yet the very able gentleman from Oklahoma says there is no legal claim, no equitable claim or moral claim upon which to found it. Why, bless you, these Indians have not been wards of the Government since 1832. The Government owes them nothing; they have no legal claim against the Government, yet in these times of stress——

Mr. LANGLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD (continuing). You are recognizing that a legal claim does exist and are appropriating $75,000 to commence to discharge it. On the same ground you could buy farms, build schools, and improve the condition of the colored man in the South, but that is not suggested. The House Committee on Indian Affairs went to Mississippi and investigated this claim, and when they returned a little over a year ago it was, I understand, with a practically unanimous decision that not a dollar should be given for any purpose of this kind.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GOOD. The following letter from the Secretary of the Interior shows the Secretary's attitude regarding the transfer of additional power to the Superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes.

The letter written by the late Joseph H. Choate shows his strong opposition to legislation of this character.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, February 23, 1916.

MY DEAR MR. STEPHENS: I am in receipt of your letter of January 13, 1916, transmitting, with request for report thereon, H. R. 108, entitled "A bill to confer upon the Superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma the authority now conferred by law upon the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior respecting lands allotted to the enrolled members of the Five Civilized Tribes and their individual moneys."

The annual report of the Superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes for the year ending June 30, 1915, shows that lands have been allotted to Indians of the Five Civilized Tribes in 40 counties of the State of Oklahoma, covering an area of 19,525,966 acres; that there have been enrolled 101,521 members, which comprises approximately one-third of the Indian population of the United States. By virtue of acts of Congress restrictions have been removed in a large number of cases, so that on June 30, 1915, there were 32,540 restricted Indians of the Five Civilized Tribes. They had 3,318,370 acres of restricted lands under the immediate supervision of the superintendent. There are oil lands of incalculable value in the Creek, Chickasaw, and Seminole Nations, which last year produced 27,098,994.02 gross barrels of oil, in which the royalty interest of the Indian allottees amounted to $1,537,727.47. An annual revenue of $354,571.70 was derived from agricultural and nonproducing leases approved by this department.

The vastness of the estate that is being administered is apparent from the foregoing facts.

The passage of the proposed legislation would, among other powers, place in the hands of the Superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes all leasing for oil and gas mining purposes, all removal of restrictions, all investments of individual Indian funds, and the settlement of innumerable questions of policy arising out of these matters.

By the act of June 30, 1834 (4 Stats. L., 735), the Department of Indian Affairs was established, with a Commissioner of Indian Affairs as its immediate executive head, and with supervision and appellate powers vested in the Secretary of War. See also act of July 9, 1832 (4 Stats. L., 564). By the act of March 3, 1849 (9 Stats. L., 395), establishing the Interior Department, the supervisory and appellate powers previously exercised by the Secretary of War with relation to all acts of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs were transferred to the Secretary of the Interior, and the Indian Office was placed under the newly created department.

Section 463 of the Revised Statutes of the United States reads:

"The Commissioner of Indian Affairs shall, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, and agreeably to such regulations as the President may prescribe, have the management of all Indian affairs and of all matters arising out of Indian relations."

The above enactments are of long standing, evidencing a well-established governmental policy applicable to the dealings of the Federal Government with its wards. Justice Holmes, in delivering the opinion of the court in West v. Hitchcock (205 U. S., 80), said:

"The Department of the Interior generally has been the custodian of Indian rights."

The regulation of commerce with Indian tribes is a Federal obligation, the executive functions resting primarily upon the President. In the performance of many of his duties arising out of Indian affairs, as in other matters, he acts through an appropriate department of the Government and through the chief officers charged with the immediate supervision of the affairs of that department. (Wilcox v. Jackson, 13 Peters, 498.)

One of the chief reasons for placing the control of Indian affairs under the National Government was the local prejudice of people of the various States against the Indians. In speaking thereof, the Supreme Court in the celebrated case of United States v. Kagama (118 U. S., 375, 383) said:

"These Indian tribes are the wards of the Nation. They are communities dependent on the United States. Dependent largely for their daily food. Dependent for their political rights. They owe no allegiance to the States, and receive from them no protection. Because of the local ill feeling, the people of the States where they are found are often their deadliest enemies. From their very weakness and helplessness, so largely due to the course of dealing of the Federal Government with them and the treaties in which it has been promised, there arises the duty of protection, and with it the power."

While this case was decided in 1885, conditions therein referred to still exist, even if in a modified degree.

Attention is invited to the fact that in the course of business constant reference is necessary to the records and papers of this department and other departments. Especially is this true with litigation. Transference of jurisdiction would, I feel sure, be accompanied with confusion, delay, and uncertainty in obtaining information contained in such records and papers. If sole supervision were granted to the Superintendent of the Five Civilized Tribes in the matters enumerated in H. R. 108, the reasons therefor could be advanced for also giving him the sole authority and supervision in the matter of the disposal of the tribal properties, worth many million dollars. In the event of the passage of the proposed legislation, the decisions of the Superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes would, in the said individual Indian matters referred to in the bill, be final and there would be no right of appeal. No person who initiates and directs the work in the field should in matters of such importance be the final arbiter as to his own acts. The conferring of the power proposed by this bill would vest in the Superintendent of the Five Civilized Tribes absolute authority in the administration of the matters indicated, a greater authority than is now conferred upon the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, whose acts are largely supervised by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. Gabe E. Parker, the present Superintendent of the Five Civilized Tribes, in his report of November 3, 1915, concerning the protest and pressure brought to bear upon Thomas Long, a full-blood Creek Indian, to induce him to invest his accrued oil royalties (of which he had to his credit $60,000) in the purchase of certain land near Muskogee, Okla., said:

"There is every pressure imaginable, not only from those who desire to separate the Indian from his money but, in many cases, from Indians themselves, brought to bear upon me to purchase various and sundry things with Indian moneys, or to make loans on all kinds and classes of security, and even to pay out the money without restrictions thereon whatever, to individuals, guardians, administrators, and every other conceivable way possible, to get the money out of the hands of the department."

This is but an illustration of a situation. My experience leads me to the conclusion that to bestow such power as is proposed in this bill upon a field official would place in serious hazard the moneys, the properties, and the welfare of our Indian wards. There is abundant evidence in the records of this department to make me feel that this would be a most perilous step. As conditions are now the Superintendent of the Five Civilized Tribes is under the constant check of this department, and the very fact that the disposition of these great properties, while primarily passed upon by him, are subject to supervision by an authority that is removed from local influence gives him a strength which otherwise he could not have. We have millions of dollars of individual Indian money on deposit in the banks of Oklahoma and tens of millions of dollars of property that is under our care and control, of which, in my judgment, should not be vested in the discretion of a single individual, no matter how honest he may be. I am satisfied that no private institution—a railroad, for instance, or a great estate—would regard it as businesslike to do what is here proposed.

I sympathize with the desire to decentralize as far as is practicable and wise the control of these properties, giving as wide a discretion as from time to time may seem advisable to local officials, but our trust can not be carried out in the highest good faith by throwing upon the shoulders of one man so great a burden of responsibility.

Cordially, yours,

(Signed) FRANKLIN K. LANE,
Secretary.

Hon. JOHN S. STEPHENS,
Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs,
House of Representatives.

FEBRUARY 7, 1918.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I am advised that Senator OWEN has offered before the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs the following amendment to H. R. 8696, the Indian appropriation bill, to wit:

"Provided, That no part of said appropriation shall be used in forwarding the undisputed claims to be paid from individual moneys of restricted allottees or their heirs, or in forwarding uncontested agricultural, oil, gas, or other mineral leases made by individual restricted Indian allottees or their heirs to the Secretary of the Interior for approval, but all such claims or leases now required to be approved under existing law by the Secretary of the Interior shall be paid, approved, rejected, or disapproved by the Superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes of Oklahoma: Provided, however, That any party aggrieved by any decision or order of the Superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes of Oklahoma may appeal from the same to the Secretary of the Interior within 30 days from the date of said decision or order."

The proposed amendment is a modified form of H. R. 108, commonly called the Hastings bill, introduced in the House on December 6, 1915, on which I made an adverse report under date of February 23, 1916. Practically the only difference in effect between the Hastings bill (H. R. 108) and the proposed amendment is that the amendment proposes that only undisputed claims and uncontested leases are to be approved, but the right of appeal is afforded an aggrieved party in disputed cases. Such an appeal would provide practically no protection to an Indian who initiates or assents to the removal of his restrictions for the purpose of procuring ready money or for an inadequate bonus given for an oil lease on his allotted land, and therefore such Indians will seldom, if ever, appeal from a decision of the superintendent to the Secretary of the Interior. As Mr. HASTINGS said (see hearings on H. R. 108, p. 43, line 29):

"The truth is that everyone knows who is at all familiar with the Indian that he will not assert his rights in a civil suit."

The charge that endless red tape and needless delay prolong the work of the Five Civilized Tribes when supervised by the Secretary of the Interior is not well founded and is not supported by the records of the department.

The Superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes during the fiscal year 1917 handled approximately $42,000,000, and to place in the hands of a local field official final authority such as proposed in the amendment would, it is believed, be without precedent and exceedingly unwise.

No local official should be given such vast powers of final decision without supervisory powers of a superior officer. The adult restricted Indians are not urging any such amendment, but it is an attempt to transfer to local control the vast interests of over 30,000 restricted Indians to be supervised by a single superintendent of the Indian Service as the sole arbiter of his acts.

Cordially, yours,

(Signed) FRANKLIN K. LANE,
Secretary.

Hon. HENRY T. ASHURST,
Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs,
United States Senate.

NEW YORK, April 3, 1916.

Hon. JOHN H. STEPHENS,
Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. STEPHENS: Just now, when questions of great national moment are demanding universal attention, there is danger that matters seriously affecting our domestic affairs may be neglected or entirely overlooked.

The welfare of our Indians is a solemn national obligation. We have no more sacred trust than the protection of the weak from being overreached by the strong. From the earliest times the intent of our people has been to give the Indian that protection.

In the majority of cases this obligation is imposed on the Federal Government by treaty. In the absence of treaty obligations, however, the duty of the Nation to its wards is just as great. In the case of Heckman v. United States (224 U. S., 413–417), in speaking of the Indians of the Five Civilized Tribes, the Supreme Court says:

"From their very weakness and helplessness, so largely due to the course of dealing of the Federal Government with them and the treaties in which it has been accomplished, there arises the duty of protection and with it the power."

Specific reservations have properly been set apart for Indian tribes, but for almost half a century there has been a tendency to recognize and give responsibility to the individual. The Dawes severalty act, adopted in 1887, was the culmination of this theory. It provides for an allotment of lands to individual Indians, breaking up of tribal relations, and distintegration of communal ownership. The principal thought in this and subsequent legislation has been to place responsibility upon the individual and at the same time protect him in his personal and property rights until the untutored child of nature is equipped to assume full responsibilities of citizenship.

The difficulty is that too much has been expected of the Indian. To some people it is hard to understand why you can't take an untutored, ignorant, full-blood Indian and make an educated citizen out of him in a fortnight. They expect the unreasonable and impossible. It is contrary to all human experience. Extremists have insisted that the process is too slow; that these wards should be released from Government supervision and suffer the results of their own improvidence regardless of their qualifications for self-protection and regardless of the consequences to their property rights.

Great caution is necessary in adopting new methods. The Indian problem has been the subject of too many theories which have proven disastrous in practice. In the early days the theory of extermination existed on the ground that "the only good Indian is a dead Indian." This idea did not appeal to our liberty-loving people, and later the theory of "segregation" was conceived, under which the Indians were virtually herded on reservations and policed that they might not escape and injure some white man. The latest theory, that of individualization, developed under the Dawes severalty act, really seems most plausible. It may prove a solution of the Indian problem, if properly administered and not interfered with by new and inconsistent legislation.

Of the Indians heretofore allotted about 10 per cent only—the full bloods, at least—have been prepared for the additional responsibilities thus cast upon them.

Congress in 1908 clothed the county courts of Oklahoma with jurisdiction over the person and property of minor allottees of the Five Civilized Tribes and further provided that upon the death of an allottee all restrictions against alienation of his land would thereby be removed. The raid upon the Indian's property as a result of this legislation is notorious and the effect on the Indian was disastrous and irreparable.

Legislation is now pending in Congress which, if adopted, may overturn the present Indian policy and subject the Indian to the worst possible forms of spoliation, not only from outsiders, but from unscrupulous persons within the tribal membership. The bill (H. R. 108) introduced by Congressman HASTINGS in the House of Representatives would confer on the Superintendent of the Five Civilized Tribes the authority now vested in the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior respecting the lands and individual moneys of the enrolled members of the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma. About one-third of the Indian population in the United States belongs to these tribes, with more than 30,000 restricted Indians, their property including over 3,000,000 acres of valuable individually owned land. Perhaps the greatest oil field in the world has been developed in the country of the Five Tribes, from which enormous wealth has accrued to these people.

Under existing law the superintendent of these tribes is nominated by the President and confirmed by the Senate, the appointment being political. The pending bill (H. R. 108) proposes to turn over to this appointee full power and authority over this vast estate, and naturally every pressure, local and otherwise, would be brought to bear on anyone clothed with this great responsibility.

As evidence of the inability of these Indians properly to safeguard their own interests, the following is taken from the opinion of the Supreme Court in 1910 in the case of Tiger v. Western Investment Co. (221 U. S., 286–297):

"That full-blood Indians of the Five Tribes are, as a class, incompetent must be assumed not only from the legislation of Congress with respect to them but from the finding of the Court of Claims, where, in the case of Brown & Gritts v. United States (44 Ct. Cls., 283), it was expressly found that full-blood Cherokees whose right to alienate their lands was forbidden by the legislation contemporaneous with that involved in the case at bar were, as a class, unable to speak the English language and incompetent to guard their interests from designing persons who were constantly attempting to induce them to part with their property at grossly inadequate compensation."

With respect to the Hastings bill, Arthur C. Parker, a highly intelligent Indian, engaged in important educational work for the State of New York at Albany, who is also the secretary and treasurer of the Society of American Indians, says:

"ALBANY, March 22, 1916.

"I desire to register my protest against the favorable consideration of H. R. 108, introduced by Congressman HASTINGS, of Oklahoma, designing to confer the authority now invested in the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs upon the office of the Superintendent of the Five Civilized Tribes. The condition of Indian property and the complex situation that has arisen from inheritance cases and the presence of a large number of incompetent Indians makes it of utmost importance that the administration of their affairs be retained in the hands of the Federal Government. There is precedent enough to show the danger of State control in Indian matters, where these matters are not properly adjusted, and where the mass of Indians are, by reason of ignorance or disability, unable to protect themselves. The Oklahoma situation has been bad enough without now further providing the means for a wholesale plundering of the estates of minors and incompetents. This bill would bring injustice and be a reproach upon the Federal Government."

Another bill recently introduced by Senator JOHNSON of South Dakota (S. 3904) by its terms proposes to confer upon tribes of Indians the right to select their superintendents and other employees. This would divest the Interior Department of the appointing power, and the Indian Service would be deprived of the wholesome restrictions provided by the civil service. Anyone familiar with Indians can readily imagine how the more dependent full bloods would thus become the easy prey of conniving mixed bloods and unscrupulous whites. As so aptly stated by Rev. Sherman Coolidge, president of the Society of American Indians, "by such law the very worst elements will seek to control Indian tribes."

Senator Lane's bill (S. 4452) proposes legislation to abolish the position of Commissioner of Indian Affairs and his assistants, creating in lieu thereof an independent bureau, with three commissioners, subject only to the control of Congress. This bill provides that these commissioners shall be selected from candidates to be named by all the Indian tribes of the United States "congregated in general delegate council." It is further provided that these commissioners shall exercise all the authority now vested in the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

This bill would also deprive the Indian Service of that protection now afforded by the classified civil service, and would subject the Indians to the same pernicious influences as the Johnson bill, the chief difference being that one is retail and the other wholesale destruction. One may suppose that the elements most hostile to the Indians will advocate this and similar vicious legislation.

While the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs might gladly welcome this relief from the very onerous duties imposed upon them in connection with the administration of Indian affairs, yet these officials, moved by the high sense of public duty the Federal Government owes to its dependent Indian wards, have felt impelled to suggest the great danger to the Indians involved in the legislation contemplated by either of the three bills referred to and have pointed out that existing law is sufficient to enable the Interior Department to place on their own responsibility individual Indians who are qualified to handle their own property. "Competency commissions" are now in the field visiting various reservations where allotments in severalty have been made with a view of removing restrictions against alienation from the land belonging to those Indians found capable of withstanding the machinations of designing persons seeking to prey on members of an unsuspecting race the moment the protecting hand of the Government is lifted.

That wholesale removal of restrictions invites disaster has been amply evidenced by past experience. Should even 50 per cent of the Indians of a given tribe prove competent, is that any reason why the incompetent should be turned over to the mercy of unscrupulous land sharks?

Developments within the past few years show remarkable improvement in the administration of Indian affairs, and just as the latest theory of "individualization" begins to bear good fruit can we afford to destroy the entire structure by removing from the protecting care of the Government even those whose feet are just beginning to tread along the pathway that leads to success?

Sincerely, yours,

(Signed) JOSEPH H. CHOATE.

As an earnest friend of the Indian race, I trust that neither of these bills nor any similar legislation will be enacted.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent, in view of the fact the time was agreed upon by unanimous consent yesterday afternoon and this argument has developed a new question, that the time be extended 20 minutes, 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] and 10 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma, and I use those 10 minutes, and that then the previous question shall be considered as ordered.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to say I would like to have five minutes to inquire of the chairman about some Minnesota items.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I have only 15 minutes, and having to yield a portion of that to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], I would have only a brief period in which to answer.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, certainly the gentleman does not wish to predicate his request for extension of time upon the fact that this raised a new question, as he stated. This is an old question that has been resurrected.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. I will say to the gentleman I thought everybody admitted the justice of this appropriation and had no idea in the world it would be attacked.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I do not think the time ought to be extended upon that basis.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. I will put it on another basis. I will not give you the reason, then.

Mr. MADDEN. I will ask the gentleman if he will not make it 30 minutes. I want five minutes in which to inquire into the McMurray claim here.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I have not any objection to the extension of time. Of course, we want to get through as quickly as we can. I realize this is an important proposition, concerning which Members want to secure information, and I want them to have it. I have not any objection, if the House consents, to an extension of 30 minutes.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to suggest that practically all the time up to date, I think, barring 20 minutes, out of something more than an hour, has been in favor of the conference report. I supposed we had come to an agreement last night, not an agrement I would like to have had, because I wanted more than 10 minutes, but I yielded to the wishes of the chairman to shorten this debate and gave my consent. I should not feel now that I could consent to a considerable extension of time, all of which is going to be used in support of the report. And under the present phase of things I should feel that I would have to object.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The gentleman is not fair in saying that everything was in favor of the report. A large part of my time was taken in answering criticisms which the gentleman made and which other gentlemen made.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, unless there is an agreement that half of the time extended shall be given in opposition to the report, I shall have to object.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. My proposition was that half of it was to be controlled by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] and half of it by myself.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Will the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] yield me four minutes?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I wish the gentleman would proceed with the time the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] gives him, and I will see——

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I yield six minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON].

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas (continuing). And I will see what I can do.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, in the Congressional Cemetery here in the city of Washington there is a tombstone erected to a great Indian chief. His name is Pushmataha. On the tombstone are inscribed these words:

Here lies Pushmataha, a Choctaw Indian chief.
He was a warrior of great distinction.
He was wise in council, eloquent in an extraordinary degree, and under all circumstances and all occasions the friend of the white man.

Nearly 100 years ago this apostle of his tribe came to the city of Washington because he had a burning ambition to see the Great White Father. At that time Andrew Jackson was President. And in conference with him Pushmataha told him he came from a far and distant country; that his people had always been the friends of the white people; that they had held the hands of the United States so long and so tightly that their nails had grown long like birds' claws, and that there was no chance of their slipping out. He said, "My people are in trouble, they are in distress, and I want to talk to you. I look upon you as a great father and myself as a little child. I want to lean upon your bended arm like a child looking into the face of its father and tell you about my troubles." He said that he had, as a young man, once before come to Washington and had seen the Great White Father, Jefferson, and he had told him if ever he got into trouble to run and tell him.

I want to say to you, my friends, that that great chief spoke the sentiments of his people when he said they were in distress. They were in distress because the United States at that time was trying to remove them to a far and distant country, away from their hunting grounds; away from the Chickasawha, the Tallahalla, and Chickahominy, in which streams they had fished, and along the swamps of which they hunted their game. They did not want to leave. And so the good father said, "We will let those who want to stay in Mississippi remain, and you shall have certain rights." Eleven hundred of them are there now. They are the descendants of Pushmataha and his fellow tribesmen. They are to-day and have been for a long time in distress. They expect their Great White Father and this Congress to treat them as their suffering children. They have proven every requirement that the Federal Government imposed upon them. They look at each rainbow in the heavens and think it is a promise of hope that the Government some day will do something for them.

Oh, sirs, I remember the arguments that have taken place upon the floor of this House. I repudiate no argument that I have made. God knows that in my heart I believe sincerely that the money to those unfortunate people in Mississippi should come from the funds of the Choctaw Nation. No man who has served in this Congress for eight years will say I have not made an honest effort to try to implant that view upon the membership of this House and try to give to those people the things which I believe are justly theirs. This Congress has passed upon it; they have said they were not entitled to share in the funds of the tribe. And so the Indian Committees, the committee presided over by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER], presided over at times in the other end of the Capitol by a Senator from Oklahoma, have said that these people should be taken care of by the Federal Government. They have appropriated this $75,000. It is recommended by the Indian Office, it meets the approval of the Indian Committees of the House and Senate, and it seems to me that it comes with poor grace for the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], whom I love as a brother, to criticize this item in this bill that merely appropriates $75,000 to a poor, needy, distressed tribe of unfortunate Indians, whose rights have been stolen away from them, who are the outcasts of the Government, and then see year by year in this appropriation bill millions of dollars taken from the funds of the Government and sent throughout the country to the Indians everywhere—Indians that in many cases are rich and prosperous and who need no help. I can not believe that this Congress will vote down this conference report simply because of this $75,000 item. It still has a heart, and justice is not yet dead.

That is all I desire to say. [Applause.]

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, there will be only one more speech on this side.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas has 15 minutes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. This, like all other conference reports, represents compromises made between the representatives of the two Houses. It would be useless here to contend otherwise. That the conferees on the part of the House could not have their way about everything was understood when they went into conference. The conference report represents the result of long and careful deliberation upon the part of the conferees, and we arrived at the result that has finally been brought here.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I would rather proceed for a few moments and then submit the question.

Mr. MADDEN. There are a good many things in this bill that ought to be cleared up.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. First of all, I want to speak of the matter that has been most discussed with reference to this conference report, of submitting certain matters from the Five Civilized Tribes to the representatives of the Government in Oklahoma when these matters are uncontested rather than have them brought here to Washington.

It has been the custom when a small claim was made that it could not be adjusted until it was sent to Washington for approval here. It took weeks to secure a final adjustment. If an Indian wanted to lease his land for grazing purposes to his neighbor, the lease had to be sent to Washington for approval even when there was no question as to the equity or the legality of the lease.

Mr. NORTON. That is not true now.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. No; because we have corrected it by legislation. We have provided in this bill that undisputed contracts, undisputed claims, shall be approved in Oklahoma by a representative of the Government who is appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate and gets as much of a salary as the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and to all intents and purposes is in every way as well qualified. He is upon the ground and is quite as familiar with Indian affairs as is the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, so that these matters that are undisputed are to be adjusted in Oklahoma.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield for a question.

Mr. CRAMTON. It is a fact that a lease of agricultural lands for not more than a year if of the Indian's homestead lands, and for not more than five years if of his surplus lands, can be taken care of now in Oklahoma. I am basing my statement upon the statement of Representative HASTINGS before the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I can not yield further on that, because the matter is not in dispute as to certain phases of leases.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentelman yield to me?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Not now. I know what the gentleman has in mind.

Mr. MADDEN. Is that the reason he is not yielding?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. No; it is not.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. On this matter?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. It seems to me this matter ought to be cleared up.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. There is nothing cloudy about it.

Mr. GOOD. As stated by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS], the Indian never disputes any claims even in civil suits. Is not that true?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. My observation of Indians is that they are quite well able in many instances to take care of themselves. They get the best of many of the trades they make with the white man.

Mr. GOOD. If it is true, as stated by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS] in committee, there would be no disputed claims.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I can not yield on that phase of the matter.

The promise was made to close up the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes on the 4th day of March, 1906. I was a party to that contract. Every Member of this House who was a Member at that time was a party to that contract. It was agreed to in the Indian country. It was understood everywhere that the Government of the United States would take its hands off the Five Civilized Tribes and permit them to run their own affairs after that date. In the closing days of that period the Indian Office wanted just another year to finish up some matters that they had not been able to finish up within the time, but said they would undoubtedly have done by the 4th of March, 1907.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Not on this. They have now ceased to ask for extensions of time. They have ceased to make any pretense that there are unsettled matters that they must close up.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not take a gentleman off the floor when he is making a speech.

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; I think a point of no quorum does.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman was not recognized to make the point.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I did not yield to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas has the floor.

Mr. MADDEN. I make the point of order under the rule that nobody has the floor when a point of order is pending.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas will suspend. What is the point of order that the gentleman from Illinois makes?

Mr. MADDEN. My point is that there is no quorum present, and that that point always is in order, regardless of whether anybody is on the floor or not.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will entertain the point.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I proposed to yield to the gentleman as soon as I reach the discussion of the question he has in mind.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not want anybody to yield to me.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The gentleman has been asking that I yield. I know his question. I will yield when I reach it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will suspend. Evidently there is no quorum present.

CALL OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints Mr. BROWNING to preside next Sunday at the memorial services for the late Representative CAPSTICK.

INDIAN APPROPRIATIONS.

The House resumed the consideration of the conference report on the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, when interrupted I was just about to say that after some 12 years the government of the Five Civilized Tribes is costing more to-day than it did in 1906. After a solemn agreement to sever the relations of the Government with the Five Civilized Tribes the Indian Office, by forcing itself upon the Five Civilized Tribes, is costing more than it did 12 years ago. Why? Simply because men in the Indian Office refuse to give up the positions they hold, and they would lose these positions if the Government ceased to exercise its supervision over the Five Civilized Tribes as it has agreed.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there are some matters in this conference report to which I wish to refer. If the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] had read the several reports that have been made upon the items to which he was anxious to direct attention, he would have found that disputed items exist between Mr. J. F. McMurray and the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes of Indians. These matters of dispute have been running for many years. Upon the one hand, Mr. McMurray claimed that the tribes owed him a large amount of money, and, on the other hand, it was claimed on behalf of the tribes that he owed them. It was finally proposed to submit the matter to the Court of Claims for adjustment. That is finally agreed upon in this conference report.

The matters in dispute here are submitted to the Court of Claims, so that if Mr. McMurray has anything coming to him he will be allowed what is coming to him. If the Indians have anything coming to them, they will be allowed that. It is provided that the Court of Claims shall adjust these differences between these contentions. It is stated by the Secretary of the Interior that this seems to be the only way in which to adjust these disputed matters. Now, if anyone knows of any better way than in a court properly established for that purpose to adjust disputed claims between individuals or several individuals, I have never found it. It was concluded by the Secretary of the Interior that the matter should finally be brought to a conclusion, and we propose to conclude it in this bill.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MADDEN. I suppose the gentleman has some recollection of a case in which Mr. McMurray was interested, where he had $3,000,000 worth of claims against the Indians for legal services.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Oh, no; he had nothing of the kind.

Mr. MADDEN. And he got $750,000 out of it, and this may be one of those.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I did not yield for a speech. I yielded for a question.

The gentleman from Illinois is hopelessly at sea. He has no more information about this matter now than many other men have had in the years it has been before the House. The gentleman from Illinois has prejudices. He is using them instead of information. The claims between Mr. McMurray and the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians should be settled just as other claims are settled, and it is provided that that shall be done in a court properly established for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. This conference report should be agreed to.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, with reference to this——

Mr. MADDEN. Now, will the gentleman from Oklahoma yield?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma Yes; surely.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma, the chairman of the committee and the chairman of this conference, recollect a claim of one Mr. McMurray for about $3,000,000 for legal services against the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. If the gentleman will let me proceed for just a moment——

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to ask if the gentleman remembers that.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I remember that Mr. McMurray in 1910 attempted to have some individual contracts with Indians validated.

Mr. MADDEN. Did he get any money out of it?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. He got no money at all out of it. The approval of the contracts was turned down by this House.

Mr. MADDEN. Did he not get $750,000 out of it?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The firm of Mansfield, McMurray & Cornish drew $750,000 for the services they rendered in the so-called citizenship cases back in 1904 or 1905.

Mr. MADDEN. This is the same McMurray?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. This is the same McMurray.

Mr. MADDEN. This conference, then, deals with the same Mr. McMurray and the same concern to which the gentleman has just alluded.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The original fee was paid to Mansfield, McMurray & Cornish, and this present claim deals only with Mr. McMurray in a case that he had before the Court of Claims, known as the Freedmen's case.

Mr. MADDEN. What is the Freedmen's case?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. If the gentleman will let me proceed, I will explain it in my own way. The Choctaws and Chickasaws had a contract with J. F. McMurray amounting to some $27,500 to prosecute the so-called Freedmen case. This was the case of freedmen of the Chickasaws claiming a part of the land from the Chickasaw Tribe. He prosecuted the case through the courts and won it. In 1910 there was an item put in the general deficiency bill which provided for payments of this claim of $27,500 to McMurray, and that item in the bill went out on a point of order made by myself and several other gentlemen. I made the point of order for the reason that that bill proposed to pay $27,500 to McMurray upon a contract that he had with the Indians without having any tribunal pass upon either the legality of the contract or upon the consideration he had rendered for it. The only thing proposed to be done by this bill is to send that controverted matter to the Court of Claims for adjudication.

Along with that is the claim by McMurray for some $10,500 for two Chickasaw warrants and a claim of twenty-odd thousand dollars which he sets up for expenses incurred in citizenship cases.

As opposed to that the tribe is permitted to set up any counterclaim they may have against him. Some have claimed in the past that McMurray has already overdrawn his expense account by some $180,000. There is a judgment now against McMurray for nearly $15,000, as I recall—I have not the figures here—for advance royalties on leases which he has failed to pay. That is in the shape of a judgment. Then the tribe claims further that he owes $15,000 additional advance royalty not included in this judgment, which makes a claim of $210,000 that the Indians have against McMurray, and his claim is about $62,000.

To be perfectly candid, I do not think there is much to the $180,000 claim of the tribe, but I think that the tribe can procure judgment for the advance royalties.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. What makes Mr. McMurray so anxious to get legislation and a settlement if he only has a claim of $60,000 against the Choctaws and they have a claim against him of $250,000?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I thought I had just explained it. I told the House that Mr. McMurray thinks that the tribe can not enforce the claim of $180,000 against him. There is little doubt that they can enforce the claim of $30,000 against McMurray's claim of $62,000. My judgment is that he will fail to realize on his claim for expenses in connection with the citizenship cases, but the $10,000 and the $27,000 he will probably recover. That will leave a balance in favor of McMurray. Be that as it may, however, Mr. McMurray is no more anxious to have the matter settled than the tribe itself. All parties have come before the Committee on Indian Affairs and insisted that the matter be sent to the Court of Claims for settlement. It is the proper place for a settlement.

Mr. MADDEN. The experience of the House with McMurray's claims has been such as to justify doubt as to the legitimacy of any claim he presents.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. That is because the claims had not been sent to a court or any competent tribunal to pass upon them. We propose to send these to a competent tribunal to pass upon them.

Mr. MADDEN. One question more: Is there any possibility that hereafter the claims of McMurray will be swollen up into millions instead of $60,000?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Absolutely none. The bill sets out specifically the claims which Mr. McMurray may bring action upon, and the letter of the Secretary of the Interior specifies the maximum amount possible of recovery, and these are the amounts I have just given the House.

Mr. MADDEN. Why did not we take it up for consideration when the bill was before the House?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Because it was not presented to the House. We found it in the bill when we reached conference and had to deal with it. The House Committee on Indian Affairs has already made a favorable report on a similar bill.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to pass over this matter and have just a word with reference to this Mississippi Choctaw item. We have had our obliging friend from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] and our good friend from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], the great self-constituted defenders of the noble Red Man of the forest, come before the House this morning in a sporadic foray against this bill. They flashed their sabers, they waved their flags, they shook their gory locks and gnashed their teeth about something that was about to be done to the Indian. Let me remind the two distinguished gentlemen that the American Indian at one time owned every acre of land in the State of Michigan; they owned every acre of land in the State of Iowa.

What has become of the Indians' rights to these lands in these States? It has departed from Poor Lo and his heirs. Who is responsible for it? The people of the State of Oklahoma upon whom the gentlemen bent their wrath or the people of the State of Michigan and the State of Iowa? The Indian at one time also owned the entire State of Oklahoma. He is still on the job in possession of a large portion of the land, doing business at his old stand, and for that portion that has departed from him in Oklahoma he has received a higher price than the Indians have received for similar acreage of land in any State in this Union. That is the difference between the treatment the Indian has received in Oklahoma and in the States of his great defenders.

What do we propose to do here with reference to the Mississippi Choctaws?

Gentlemen have said that in the past I have opposed the Mississippi Choctaw amendment. I have opposed the Mississippi Choctaws taking any part of the funds of the Choctaws in Oklahoma, because the courts, the commissions, three Secretaries of the Interior, and two Presidents had decided that they had no equitable interest in those funds. I have no apology whatever for my action with reference to this matter; and if the question ever arises again I hope I may be here on the job to prevent any such injustice and outrage being done the Choctaws in Oklahoma. What I have said with reference to the Mississippi Choctaw connection with the Federal Government is set forth in the records of this House. I quote from the report which I had the honor to assist in making as a member of a committee considering this question several years ago, as follows:

> The Federal Government, as such, is neither legally nor equitably obligated to enroll Mississippi Choctaws with the Choctaws west, and is under only such moral obligation to the Mississippi Choctaws as is due to dependent North American Indians who were originally occupants and owners of the soil, and who have been deprived of their patrimony by white settlers.

I have no apology to make for that statement, but the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] says this $75,000 item constitutes a claim against the Federal Government. The difficulty with the gentleman is that he is unable to distinguish between a claim and a gratuity. The gentleman has been a Member of this House and a member of the Committee on Appropriations for several years. In addition to that he is considered as one of the eminent lawyers of the House, and should know the difference between a gratuity and a claim without getting his mind in any such befuddled condition as it seems to be with reference to this matter. The gentleman ought to know that the present item in this bill in no wise constitutes a claim, but is a straight gratuity to the Mississippi Choctaws, just such as is being given to Indians to-day in 26 other States in this Union. As to precedent, Mr. Speaker, nearly all the tribes now under the supervision of the Indian Bureau were taken in just as this tribe is now being taken in.

It is not a question of any claim against the Government. It is not a question of setting a precedent. It is simply a question of policy for us to decide whether the arm of the Government should be thrown around these Indians and their education and civilization provided for as is that of most of the other Indians throughout the United States.

Why, when the Indian Bureau was transferred to the Interior Department away back in 1842, I understand there were less than 12 tribes under the supervision of the Government, and the appropriation carried for their support and civilization at that time was something less than $250,000. Now we find the Indian appropriation bill amounts to more than $11,000,000, including 150 tribes. More than 130 of them taken in just as this bill proposes to take these tribes in. I call attention to the fact that within the last few years there has been taken under governmental supervision in just this manner some four or five different Indian tribes which theretofore were in just the same condition as the Mississippi Choctaws.

The Homeless Indians of California were one instance. Many thousands of dollars have been appropriated for the purchase of lands and support and civilization of these Indians. Then we have the Rocky Boy Band of Chippewas in Montana. They have been taken in within the last few years and thousand upon thousand of dollars appropriated for a like purpose for them. The Wahoe Tribes in Nevada is another case. The Seminoles of Florida another, and I think the Fort Barthold, N. Dak., Indians, if I mistake not. Now, my good friend from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] has in his State a school for which there is appropriated from $60,000 to $80,000 annually, as I recall, and yet the records do not show that there is a single tribe of Indians in his State.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be given two minutes more so that I may ask him a question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Oklahoma be extended for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I notice that item 27 has been put into the bill in the Senate and agreed to in this conference, providing $175,000, with a proviso that it shall be taken out of the United States Treasury in the event that the expenditure is unauthorized, and so forth. Has there been any information as to the authority for that expenditure?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. What was the number of that amendment?

Mr. STEENERSON. Twenty-seven. It was $185,000 in the bill as reported by the committee, and the House struck it out.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The gentleman is mistaken about the amendment as agreed to by the conferees. The conferees struck that language out in their agreement.

Mr. STEENERSON. The proviso?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. They struck out the proviso.

Mr. STEENERSON. That is all right. Now, was there any inquiry as to the authority for this expenditure?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. No; none except that which the Indian Committee already had.

Mr. STEENERSON. I understood from Senator KELLOGG and my colleague [Mr. KNUTSON] that there was an arrangement with the Department of the Interior that the department should investigate the justice and authority for this expenditure as a condition before agreeing to the appropriation.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I have heard something of that, but that was not an impelling influence upon the conferees.

Mr. STEENERSON. I was told this morning by a representative of the Indians that the department had inaugurated an investigation, but refuses to allow the Indians to participate or see the books or ask any questions. If that be so, it is a violation of the understanding upon which the item was put into the bill.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Then it is wrong, but I suppose if we attempted to correct that, I predict we would have our good friend, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON], and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] both arrayed against us.

Mr. STEENERSON. Then I protest. It is violating the understanding that was entered into when the appropriation was allowed to go into the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has again expired. All time has expired. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and fifteen Members are present, not a quorum. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The Clerk called the roll; and there were—yeas 242, nays 55, answered "present" 3, not voting 130, as follows:

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 7237) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes, had insisted upon its amendments, and asked a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments, and had appointed Mr. BANKHEAD, Mr. HARDWICK, and Mr. TOWNSEND as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2123) to regulate the practice of podiatry in the District of Columbia.

INTOXICATING LIQUORS, TERRITORY OF HAWAII.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to take from the Speaker's desk the bill S. 3935, a bill to prohibit the sale, manufacture, and importation of intoxicating liquors in the Territory of Hawaii during the period of the war, except as hereinafter provided, and put it upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the bill S. 3935.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve a point of order.

The SPEAKER. What point of order does the gentleman reserve?

Mr. STAFFORD. Pending the point of order, I wish to make an inquiry of the gentleman from Tennessee, whether the Committee on Territories had any meeting attended by a quorum authorizing him to call up this bill for action?

Mr. HOUSTON. The Committee on Territories this morning authorized me to call up this bill for consideration.

Mr. STAFFORD. Was a quorum present and took formal action on this bill?

Mr. HOUSTON. Notice was given——

Mr. STAFFORD. But was a quorum present and formal action taken authorizing the gentleman to bring up this bill?

Mr. HOUSTON. There was formal action taken in this way: There were seven or eight members present—something like that; I am not sure of just the number. There were not nine at one time, but members came in and asked what the meeting was for, and it was explained to them, and they said they wanted to be present and wanted to vote, and vote for the consideration of the bill. There were nine members who came into the committee room and gave instructions of that sort. One member came in and said he wanted to be recorded as present.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order, under the statement made by the chairman of the committee, that the committee has not taken formal action authorizing him under the rule of the House that requires formal action on the part of a committee to call up a Senate bill on the Speaker's table, a similar House bill having been previously considered.

The SPEAKER. Where is that rule?

Mr. STAFFORD. I shall call it to the Speaker's attention. It is subsection 2 of Rule XXIV. This very question——

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman will suspend, the Chair thinks he can shorten this proceeding. He wishes the gentleman from Tennessee would state what happened in the committee.

Mr. HOUSTON. The committee was called and met, and six or seven members were in the room at a time—I am not sure of just the number. It requires nine to make a quorum. There were not nine present in the room at any given time, but they came into the room, cast their vote, told how they wanted to be recorded, and went to attend to other business. There was an attendance of a quorum; they were not all present in the room at any one time, but they came in and told the chairman how they wanted to vote and asked to be recorded by the clerk.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think that was a committee meeting. On pages 396 and 397 of the Rule Book, beginning on page 395, the Chair rendered an elaborate opinion on the very same subject, after a most careful scrutiny and consideration. A committee sits as a unit and you can not get a bill up here by getting your report signed by various members of the committee, or any other way except by a formal vote of the committee as a committee, a quorum being present, if anybody insists on the rule.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I submit that the situation under consideration does not present the same state of facts as the cases which you have cited. According to the statement made by the gentleman from Tennessee, his committee was regularly called, and he was duly authorized to make the motion which he has made to-day. In the cases cited, authority was sought to be given by a paper signed by a majority of the members of the committee. In this case the committee was regularly called, and the names of the members were regularly noted in conformity with their request.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Will the gentleman yield.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I believe that this practice prevails in every committee of this body, namely of counting a member as present on his request, even though he may subsequently withdraw.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I will.

Mr. DUPRÉ. I may be in error, but I was under the impression that the gentleman from Tennessee has stated that there was never a quorum present at any one time.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. No, he said there were ten members present first and last.

Mr. DUPRÉ. No; he stated that 10 members, he thought, came into the committee room, but he did not state that there were 10 present as a quorum at one time.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. That is true and that is the state of facts that I am presenting, namely that a quorum of the members had been personally present—and so noted—before action was taken. They were all present of record.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I wanted to ask whether objection was made by anybody who attended?

Mr. HOUSTON. There was no objection made to the want of a quorum at any time; it was satisfactory to the committee.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Did anybody object to those gentlemen having their names recorded in favor of the bill?

Mr. HOUSTON. Not by any means; not at all.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. I would like to ask if the gentleman would contend that the chairman of the committee could call a meeting and have a majority of the committee drop in one by one and say, "I want to be recorded in favor of this," and at no time have a quorum of his committee present?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I want to say that that is practically what often happens in every committee of this body.

Mr. WALSH. I disagree with the gentleman. The committee of which I am a member does not conduct its business in that way.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I do not know about the gentleman's committee. Let me finish the statement I was making. This is the way this thing is practically done in almost every committee of the House at some time. A meeting is regularly called. The chairman is present. The members of the committee begin to come in, one after another, some remaining, and others asking to be recorded as present. Finally the roll shows that a quorum is present, though actually a quorum may not be physically present. The point of no quorum is not made in the committee, and the business of the committee is proceeded with. According to the committee records, a quorum is physically present. That evidence of the record ought not be assailed in this body, but should be regarded as final. We do business in the House and Committee of the Whole every day without a quorum, but a quorum is presumed to be present. That is what happened in the Committee on Territories, with this difference only that the record of that committee shows that a quorum was present when the chairman was authorized to make his motion.

Mr. STAFFORD. If I may be permitted, I do not believe the gentleman is setting forth the facts as stated by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON].

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. If I am in error as to the facts, then I am ready to be corrected.

Mr. STAFFORD. He said that at no time was there a quorum of the committee present.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. He said that 10 Members were present, though not at one time. They came in, from time to time, and asked to be recorded as present. Some withdrew before the vote was taken, according to the oral statement, but the record shows that all were present. No point of no quorum was raised in the committee. When a report of a committee comes before this body, under such circumstances, it should be accepted and regarded, as the action of the committee.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I will.

Mr. BORLAND. It is perfectly certain, I think, that everybody will agree that if the committee waited until 11 men had come into the committee room, 11 being necessary to constitute a quorum, and nobody raised the point of no quorum, that action is perfectly valid. Is the gentleman willing to say if no 11 men were ever in the room at any one time, and the committee begins to do business without the presence of a quorum, that that business is in order?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Certainly. A quorum is always presumed to be present if the point is not raised in the body transacting business. Take the case suggested by the gentleman, in which the committee begins business with a quorum, but actually loses it before a bill is reported, but no point of no quorum is raised, ought the statement of a Member in this body to the effect that less than a quorum was present when the bill was actually reported, be admitted and cause the bill to be stricken from our calendar as having been improperly reported? If the question of no quorum can be raised in the present instance, as against the record of the committee, then in the case suggested it could be raised, if it is a question of fact to be decided in this body by oral testimony, as against the presumption to conclusiveness in favor of the regularity of the committee's action, as revealed by the records of the committee.

Mr. BARNHART. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I will.

Mr. BARNHART. Is it not also true that in the proceedings of this House, when the House is in the Committee of the Whole, if a point of order is made that there is no quorum present, and the roll is called, and the Members immediately withdraw, the Committee of the Whole proceeds with the consideration of business just the same as if the whole number were present?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. That is true.

Mr. BARNHART. And all the business of this House is practically conducted on that basis.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Precisely. The point of no quorum was never raised in the Committee on the Territories in this connection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman by his own statement puts himself out of court. Now, it may be true—and I have no sort of doubt it is absolutely true, as the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] states it—that this process of one coming in and another dropping out goes on in these committees. That is all right as long as nobody raises the point, but when the point is raised you have to consider it according to the rule. Now, it is true also, as the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BARNHART] states. I have seen the point of no quorum raised here time and again, when the roll would be called, and gentlemen would come in with their hats and their overcoats in their hands, and stand here just long enough to answer, and then out they would go. But that does not affect the question. When the point is raised you have got to have a quorum acting as a quorum.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BARNHART. If, under those circumstances, it is developed and it is clearly shown there would be no quorum present after there had been a point of no quorum made, and these men had stepped in here and immediately retired, then, if at the end of the consideration of a bill some Member should make the point of order, as has been made here, would we still go ahead and would it be according to parliamentary practice to try to finish the bill?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. In this case, this bill having been passed by the Senate and being on the Speaker's table, and the Committee on Territories having considered a similar bill and reported it to the calendar, and now the point being made that there was no quorum in the committee and authorizes the chairman to take up the bill, will it be in order for him to move to suspend the rules and take it up?

The SPEAKER. Not now. It will be in order on next Monday, I think it is.

Mr. HAMLIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Has not the Chair ruled?

The SPEAKER. Yes. But the Chair is not so everlastingly stuck on his own ruling that he will not listen to somebody else. [Applause.]

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker, I want to make this suggestion to the Speaker and to the House. I am a member of that committee and was present this morning, and I know that what the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON] said is true. And yet the committee can only speak by its record. How is the Chair going to determine there was not a quorum present when ordering the reporting of this bill?

The SPEAKER. Because the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON] was honest enough to tell exactly what happened.

Mr. HAMLIN. And somebody else might get up and dispute that proposition. Then how would you determine the fact?

The SPEAKER. If that kind of a situation arose the Chair would do what would be the sensible thing to do.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I thought the gentleman from Missouri just wanted to ask me a question.

Mr. HAMLIN. Just a word further.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I will yield to the gentleman in a minute. I was on the point of taking up the very line of argument that the gentleman has presented, and I would like to conclude the statement of what I have in mind in this connection. The chairman of the committee has stated that the record of his committee will show that a quorum was present when the bill was reported. Now how can an oral statement to the effect that a quorum was not present be taken against the conclusive presumption of the record that a quorum was present as evidenced by the record of the names of 10 members of the committee who answered on the roll call?

The SPEAKER. I know; but here is the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON], chairman of the committee, who elected to make the statement.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. No. He was asked to make it, and he made it. But in this House he stands on the record of his committee, as affording him the authority to make the motion which he has made.

The SPEAKER. I know; but the Chair has no knowledge of what that record shows.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Then should the gentleman from Tennessee bring in the record, that record will be final evidence as to whether a quorum was, or was not present?

The SPEAKER. That is a stream that we have not come to yet. The Chair has not yet come to it.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I do not desire to consume the time of the House unnecessarily, but it seems to me that this matter ought to be determined by what the record shows. According to the statement of the gentleman from Tennessee, the record of his committee will show that a quorum was present. The procedure in his committee with respect to securing a record of the names of a quorum of the committee conforms to the common practice in the committees. It was neither unusual nor improper. If a Member of this body wishes to raise the question of whether a quorum was present when the committee vote was taken, then he should call for the records of the committee. But if it is conceded that the records of the committee will show precisely what has been stated by the gentleman from Tennessee, then those records will conclusively show that a quorum was present when the action in question was taken, and no statement to the contrary can be received. A bill may be passed without a quorum by this body, and if the issue is drawn in court, a hundred Members might testify to the effect that a quorum was not present, but the point of no quorum was not raised at the appropriate time, this testimony though truly revealing the facts would not be received against the presumption that a quorum was present.

The SPEAKER. Certainly.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. That analogy applies to the present situation.

Mr. DUPRÉ. But the House has to act upon it. That is not correct, because the House had something to say after the committee had acted, and nobody has anything to say as to how the House has acted.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The question is one of fact to be determined by oral testimony, or by the record. On the case of action by the House, the courts accept the presumptions of the record that a quorum was present, though the Members may be able to overwhelmingly prove that such was not the fact. The House ought to regard the evidence of the committee's record as conclusive on the point of whether a quorum was present at any given time.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. HAMLIN. I want to be heard on this proposition for a few moments. I maintain that the question asked by the gentleman from Wisconsin of the gentleman from Tennessee can only be answered in one way, and that is by reference to the record of the committee, and that is the only basis upon which the Speaker of this House can possibly rule on this point of order, because the only legal way the committee can speak is through its record, and the record of the committee is the only answer to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

But I want to add this much further: Take the statement of the gentleman from Tennessee. It is undisputed that before the committee acted, before any action was taken whatever on this bill, there was a quorum of the committee which answered the call of the chairman of the committee, and reported at the committee room and authorized themselves to be recorded as present and thereby making a quorum. Now, if that quorum was present and they afterwards retired, and no man in the committee raised the point of no quorum, then I maintain that the action of that committee, notwithstanding it was had when less than a quorum were present, can not be challenged before the House. I submit that, in my opinion, the ruling of the Chair, just announced, is manifestly erroneous.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present my views concerning this situation to the Speaker. Under clause 1 of Rule XXIV, where the House has reported a bill making no charge upon the Treasury and that bill is on the House Calendar, if a similar Senate bill comes over here, it is in order, without asking unanimous consent, to have the Senate bill taken from the Speaker's table and laid before the House for immediate consideration, provided the committee having jurisdiction of the subject matter of the bill authorizes the chairman or some member of that committee to ask the present consideration of the bill.

Now, what may have happened in the House one day, as to its being challenged the next day, as some Members of the House have quoted in this discussion, seems to me to have no bearing on this case, because a condition precedent to the right to take up this bill from the Speaker's table is authority from the committee to call it up. Therefore it is incumbent upon the Chair to determine whether the gentleman proposing to take up the bill has authority from the committee.

Now, it has been the universal practice in the House, where authority from a committee to call up a bill was necessary to the consideration of the bill, for the chairman of the committee or the one calling it up to answer the Chair that he was authorized to call up the bill, and if nothing else appeared and that statement is not challenged, the Chair, of course, accepts the statement that the authority of the committee was granted, and the bill is laid before the House.

Now, I have never seen a question of fact in cases of this kind submitted to the Chair or decided by the Chair. It seems to me, if I were in the chair, I would not care to pass upon a question of fact arising between Members of the House. If one Member of the House says he is authorized to do a thing in the committee, and some other member of that committee disputes it, I would not pass upon it, but I would hold that the minutes of the committee was the highest evidence of the action of the committee; and if a question of fact arose, I would require an amplification or certificate from the minutes of the committee as to what the action of the committee was.

Now, it seems to me that the Member calling up the bill, if he makes a statement of the condition that happened in the committee that showed affirmatively that there was not any legal action by the committee, and if that statement is not challenged, the Chair, in my judgment, is authorized to pass upon that state of facts, and if it does not show legal authority from the committee to call up the bill, to so hold and to decline to entertain the motion for present consideration. On the contrary, if he thinks the statement does bring it within legal action by the committee, he accepts the statement and authorizes the motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair feels very much like adopting the remarks of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] as the opinion of the Chair. There have been three or four matters brought in by way of illustration. For instance, some gentleman suggested that if we passed a bill here to-day somebody could get up to-morrow and inquire if we had a quorum. They can not do anything of the sort. The RECORD is conclusive. Everybody knows that all Members are sworn in and the roll is called on the first day of the session to ascertain if there is a quorum here, and there always is the first day; and then it is presumed ever after that that there is a quorum here until the fact to the contrary develops, either by roll call or by somebody raising a point of order, and nine-tenths of all the bills ever passed in this House are passed without a quorum. The Chair announces that the ayes have it, the bill is passed, and a motion to reconsider and lay on the table is made. The Supreme Court of the United States has held more than once that it will not go behind the RECORD. So much for that.

There is only one case mentioned in the Constitution where there must be a roll call, and that is when an attempt is made to pass a bill over the President's veto. We go on here and pass bills without a quorum, and everybody knows it, but nobody raises the point. The record is made and that is the end of it.

According to my recollection, the particular question that is up here to-day has not been raised since the 19th day of August, 1912. It was raised then, and the Chair ruled elaborately, after thorough consideration, quoting Jefferson's Manual and everything else that he could lay his hands on, and decided that a committee means a majority of the members of that committee present. The two-thirds of these things that are done otherwise do not amount to anything unless somebody raises the point; but when the point is raised it must be decided. If two opposing statements of fact are made by two different members of the committee, the Chair would do exactly what the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] said he ought to do, and that is have the committee record produced. I suppose that since I rendered that decision in 1912 there have been a hundred bills, perhaps 200 bills, passed under precisely the same circumstances as these, except that the point was not raised.

Mr. MAPES rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. MAPES. Will the Speaker allow me to raise the query as to the distinction between this case and the one which the Chair decided, and to which he refers? It seems to me that the point in that case was that the committee members were not called together.

The SPEAKER. That is true.

Mr. MAPES. And this was a formal meeting of the committee.

The SPEAKER. I went into that whole question, both phases of it, and, whatever anybody else may think, my mind is made up, and it will never be changed unless the House votes to overrule my decision. The Chair holds that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON] can not bring up this bill under the circumstances which he describes.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOUSTON. Would it be in order to move to suspend the rules and take up this bill?

The SPEAKER. Not now. It will be next Monday.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take up this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of this Senate bill. Is there objection?

Mr. CALDWELL. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York objects.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION AND BILL SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled joint resolution and bill of the following titles:

S. J. Res. 124. Joint resolution providing for the registration for military service of all male persons citizens of the United States or residing in the United States who have since the 5th day of June, 1917, and on or before the day set for the registration by proclamation by the President attained the age of 21 years, in accordance with such rules and regulations as the President may prescribe under the terms of the act approved May 18, 1917, entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States"; and

S. 3771. An act authorizing the President to coordinate or consolidate executive bureaus, agencies, and offices, and for other purposes, in the interest of economy and the more efficient concentration of the Government.

WESTERN JUDICIAL DISTRICT OF VIRGINIA.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, H. R. 9864 was passed by the House on yesterday. Inadvertently the House failed to have the title conform to the text of the bill. I ask unanimous consent to have the title properly amended.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to vacate the proceedings on H. R. 9864 back to the point where the vote was taken on the bill itself. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill (H. R. 9864) to amend section 3 of the Judicial Code in respect to the western district of Virginia.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia moves that the title be amended to conform to the substance of the bill. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

On motion of Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EMERGENCY AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a privileged report (No. 571) from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman presents a report from the Committee on Rules. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 341.

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution the House shall resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 11945; that there shall be not exceeding three hours of general debate, to be equally divided, one hour and a half to be controlled by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER] and one hour and a half to be controlled by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN], which debate shall be confined to the said bill, at the end of which time the bill shall be read for amendments under the five-minute rule, and at the conclusion of said reading the committee shall rise and report the bill to the House, together with all amendments, if any, whereupon the previous question shall be considered as ordered upon the bill and all amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The rule simply gives the number of the bill. The title has not been read. What is the subject matter of the bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. The subject matter of the bill is to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, the purposes of the act entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense by stimulating agriculture and facilitating the distribution of agricultural products."

Mr. Speaker, the adoption of this rule will make possible the immediate consideration of this very important and necessary Agricultural appropriation bill. To win this war the United States must furnish not only men and war materials but foodstuffs for our armies and the armies of our allies. It will avail us nothing if we have armies but nothing by which they may be sustained. America is the granary of the world, and every energy, every economic law must be applied, and applied immediately, systematically, and scientifically, to obtain the greatest results.

The production and conservation of foods, feedstuffs, and live stock are subjects that at this time demand our immediate attention. Last year the farmers of this Nation, following the suggestion of our Commander in Chief and inspired by love of their country, succeeded in producing more foodstuffs than ever before in our history. What the farmers did last year has added immeasurably to the successful prosecution of the war; but great as their efforts have been and wonderful as were the results of those efforts, a greater task now confronts them and the country, and if the obligations of the hour are to be met larger energies must be employed, greater efforts exercised, and every resource of the country utilized. I have no doubt that the wise economies practiced by the people throughout the country to-day and the unbounded patriotism of the American farmer will gather this year still greater results. To do this, however, the Government must encourage the farmer and must cooperate with him in order to meet the abnormal conditions of to-day.

In the present appropriation bill every agricultural arm of the Government is provided and every legitimate appropriation proposed that will aid the productive powers of this Government to obtain the foodstuffs to supply our armies.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. I yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman state in a word the object of the bill to which this refers?

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Last year in the general Agricultural appropriation bill we made appropriations to meet this war emergency. Some weeks ago we passed the general Agricultural appropriation bill, and it was stated at that time by the gentlemen in charge of the bill that they were considering the provisions that called for appropriations necessary to meet the emergency, the abnormal conditions in the country, and that they would meet those conditions in one bill that was to be brought in later.

That is the bill that is proposed now to be considered. It carries millions of dollars. It deals in the prevention of diseases and pests to food and live stock, with the mobilization and transportation of labor, furnishing advance railroad fare in carrying labor to the farms, the marketing of vegetable products and foodstuffs, furnishing seeds to drought-stricken sections and elsewhere, educational and demonstrational work through various methods employed by the Agricultural Department to insure greater food production and many other wise and necessary provisions are provided, and for which appropriations are made that will meet the present abnormal and war conditions.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. I will.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman is a member of the Rules Committee, and I want to inquire if this bill is of the character that it is necessary to bring in a special rule for its consideration? Would it not have been in order for the Committee on Agriculture to call this up as one of the appropriations bills that are privileged?

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. The Committee on Rules did not think so. The committee thought it was a matter of vital necessity and called for the immediate consideration of Congress. That is why it was prompted to bring in the rule.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is it the purpose of the Committee on Rules to make the bill referred to in the rule a continuing order?

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. There is nothing said in the rule about it being a continuing order. It was not thought by the committee that it would take very long to consider the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman is aware that under usual conditions we will not be able to conclude the bill to-day, with three hours of general debate. I am inquiring what the purpose of the rule is?

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. The committee did not provide by the rule for a continuing order.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. What was the idea of the committee as to the interpretation of the words "and said bill is hereby given a privileged status"?

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. There is much difference between giving a bill a privileged status and making it a continuing order, but the gentleman from Massachusetts has not the right copy of the rule. That was the rule as originally introduced. The rule we are now considering is a substitute for the original and says nothing about a privileged status.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. I will yield.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. How much money does this bill carry?

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. About $18,000,000.

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. LONDON. Does the bill contain any new legislation?

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. It contains no new legislation.

Mr. STAFFORD. I beg the gentleman's pardon, but there is some new law.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Yes, I stand for the correction of the gentleman from Wisconsin. The question of the mobilization of labor is new matter.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is one item. The item I refer to particularly is that provision which authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to commandeer for office purposes any office building in the District, regardless of whether that office building is occupied by other governmental agencies or not.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. The Committee on Rules thought that that was a necessary proposition to be considered.

Mr. BLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. BLAND. There was an appropriation recently passed for seed spring wheat. Does this bill cover the same matter?

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. It does not; this is a different proposition. Mr. Speaker, I now yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL], and reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, a year ago the House was asked to pass a bill then known as the food-survey bill. It was stated by the Agricultural Department and the members of the House committee reporting that bill that it was essential to the country's needs for the proper prosecution of the war to make a survey of the food products within the United States. Of course, every practical man in the House and country knew that it was an utterly foolish thing to undertake—that it would not result in the production or discovery of any food product not already known to be available and would be of no good to the country. By the time the report of the surveyors could possibly be sent in and collated conditions of the food products would have so materially changed that the report would be absolutely worthless.

But the Agricultural Department saw an opportunity to get the nose of the camel under the tent, an effort they had been undertaking for years, and proceeded with the action. They secured an appropriation of over $11,000,000. They asked for twenty-five million and got eleven million and a little more. That appropriation will have been spent by the 30th of June of this year. If the Agricultural Department has told the Congress or the country of one dollar's worth of benefit that has come from the expenditure of that more than $11,000,000 I have not seen the report. Of course it could have done no good, it could not have produced nor saved an ounce of food products. A lot of high-brow agriculturists going about over the country, asking the farmers what the assessor had already ascertained—how many fat hogs they had, what they would weigh, how many fat cattle and what they would weigh, how much wheat they had in the bin, how much more flour there was stored, how much rye there was in the granary, and all such questions as that have been answered no doubt by the farmer to these agriculturists, but all this has produced no more wheat or bread or meat or discovered or saved any of either.

A lot of theorists in the Agricultural Department imagine that the way to raise hogs and potatoes and wheat and corn and other food products is to write a thesis. They imagine that the way to kill rats is to write a book upon the methods of killing rats, and they tell you in such a booklet what a pest rats are and have been, and then they tell you the different methods by which they may be killed; that some kill them with traps, some poison them, some kill them with cats and some with dogs, and that all methods are useful if you kill rats; and the farmer has learned absolutely nothing more after he has laboriously gone through that expensive publication on the killing of rats than he knew before he read the costly publication. So it is with practically everything that is proposed to be continued with this appropriation of eighteen million and a quarter dollars. I stated a year ago that it would be better for the country if the young men and the more elderly men who would be called into the public service by the provisions of the food-survey bill were put out into the fields cultivating the soil and producing food products, and would result in some benefit, but that these men called into the public service would result in producing nothing and be of no benefit to the country. I think my prophecy as to the wisdom of the bill has been verified. I understand Mr. Hoover, the food man, stated to the Committee on Agriculture, in talking about this bill, that the food survey was a farce. Now, the Agricultural Department asked the Committee on Agriculture to report this bill, not as a food-survey bill, but "to stimulate food production." In carefully going through this bill I have tried to discover what would produce wheat that has not been taken care of in the regular Agricultural appropriation bill.

I have tried to find out what will produce corn that is not covered in the regular Agricultural appropriation bill, or cotton, or hogs, or cattle, or sheep, or any other thing that is useful for food that is not provided for in the Agricultural appropriation bill. They say that it is necessary to kill pests. I suppose included in that are rats, and I have already stated how valueless the rat publication already issued upon the matter of getting rid of rats has been. We have provided in the regular Agricultural appropriation bill for destroying ticks on cattle and diseases that affect cereals and things of that sort—hog cholera and all that—so that the only excuse for this bill is to continue the fellows in office who were inaugurated under the pretext that the country had to have a survey of the food in the country. In order to find places for these hundreds and thousands of employees that were brought to Washington to make a food survey of the United States, and the additional thousands that this bill provides for, it is found necessary in this bill to authorize the Department of Agriculture to commandeer any public building in order to find office space for those who are to be perpetuated in office for another year or given positions by the provisions of this bill.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. It especially excepts buildings occupied by any other department of the Government or occupied as private residences.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. But it does provide for commandeering space in which to house these unnecessary Government employees.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. It provides for that.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I can not yield further.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, will not the gentleman yield for a moment? The gentleman a moment ago spoke of spending $11,000,000 in ascertaining how many fat hogs and cattle there were.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Under the survey.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Yes. Was not that a taking of stock of the Nation's resources?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. No.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Does not every business concern take stock?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. It was simply duplicating something that the county assessors have done in every county in Kansas, in every county in Maryland, in every county of Texas and Tennessee and other States throughout the country. It also duplicated the work of the Census Office. There was no sort of question but that the country knew the amount of wheat on hand, the amount of hogs on hand, the amount of potatoes on hand before the bill was brought out a year ago calling for a food survey.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Does the gentleman mean to say that these assessors——

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I can not yield. I mean to say that this bill, therefore, is simply an effort to perpetuate in the Agricultural Department activities by academicians and agriculturalists who knew nothing about raising food products, and to keep those gentlemen in office. It will not do any good in the prosecution of the war, but will take from the Public Treasury $18,000,000 that ought to be expended for bullets, for arms, for ammunition, for aeroplanes, for something of that kind, to use in bringing the war to a successful termination.

There is no provision in the bill that will produce wheat or that will produce hogs or cattle that is not already taken care of in the Agricultural appropriation bill, and it is simply useless and senseless to say to Congress and to the country that this is a stimulant to agriculture. It merely provides for perpetuating the activities in the Agricultural Department that was inaugurated a year ago under the pretext of the necessity of a food survey. The necessity for a food survey is as great to-day as it was a year ago, but the survey is not to be made this year, it appears. The senselessness of it has even appealed to the Department of Agriculture and to the Committee on Agriculture. They do not call it a food survey this time, but use the more attractive phrase of "stimulating agriculture." It will do no more benefit to the country by stimulating agriculture than the bill a year ago did in making a survey of the food of the country.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. What are all of these employees going to do now?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. This bill is to keep them on the pay roll in Washington and find places for more and provide more quarter-sawed oak, more mahogany, more places, more accommodation. I fear this war up to this time has been largely conducted around quarter-sawed oak and mahogany tables.

We have been spending our money lavishly for these purposes, but getting few aeroplanes and war materials we really need. Men brought to Washington, placed in offices here, will not win this war or raise more wheat and pork or beef or make more aeroplanes, bullets, dynamite, and munitions to wage a successful war with. You will have to quit legislating and making places for your friends. We must legislate for the serious business of prosecuting and winning this war.

Mr. QUIN. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. QUIN. Does the gentleman think this measure has something else in it besides giving some fellow a job?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Very little, or to perpetuate jobs they already have.

Mr. QUIN. Does the gentleman mean to say these millions of dollars and all these fine purposes to be performed here do not have to have somebody over them?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Surely they do.

Mr. QUIN. Is not that good?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. As I stated a moment ago, every activity that is essential to producing wheat, corn, cotton, beef, and pork are already provided for in the Agricultural appropriation bill that is now in conference.

Mr. QUIN. Is not this an extension, and will it not be a stimulation——

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. It is an unnecessary extension. If these things had been essential they would have been in the Agricultural appropriation bill; but this is an extension of what was called a food-survey scheme that was enacted a year ago, and this bill is unnecessary now as that was then, and this will be as useless to the country in the coming year as that has been in the last. I deplore the necessity of calling attention to the fact that, with the many matters that are brought here necessarily for the consideration of Congress, millions of dollars are added for the purpose of providing useless places, developing useless theories, and doing senseless things that will result in no benefit to the country in this hour of its greatest need. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman reserves four minutes.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. YOUNG].

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I think that the House will readily agree that heretofore when matters have come from the Committee on Agriculture I have criticized certain items in the bill when I thought the expenditure was not being properly made. This bill has been thoroughly gone over by the Committee on Agriculture. We have cut down many items and we have cut them down to a point where we did not feel it was justifiable in cutting them any further. Some $18,000,000 is carried in this bill; $6,500,000 of that sum is a fund set apart for the purchase of seeds. It is a revolving fund, just as there was a revolving fund in the former bill. Every dollar of that money comes back into the Treasury. It is shown with the fund heretofore had that none of it has been lost, and yet if we do not provide a fund of this kind now while we have congested railroad conditions, while we have many things to contend with, unless we give this power and a fund to the Department of Agriculture to go into the communities where there is a surplus of seed and be able to take away this seed and put it in a community where they have a drought-stricken section and where they have not got seeds, we are going to have a great section of this country that will wake up to the fact that they may not have the seed with which to plant the soil. This is one large item in this bill. If the gentleman from Kansas had his way, he would blot that item out of this bill, even in war times. He would not hand this emergency fund to this department, when every dollar of it expended finally reaches its way back to the Treasury of the country. So that cuts down the bill to something like $11,000,000. That simply is an extension of the work of the different departments down there in the Department of Agriculture in their work they have carried on from year to year, simply doubles up their force down there and prepares that force to take care of agriculture as a war emergency, and you tell me that it is not an essential and important item; that we do everything at this critical time so that they can go out to the farmers of the country and let them know the country is short on wheat, let them know the country is short on grains of different kinds, let them know that we are short on meat, and let them know as a part of this great war program that we want them to come to the rescue not only of our own Nation but of the nations we are allied with in fighting this great war. This bill carries an additional sum not in the regular appropriation bill dealing with diseases of stock, cattle, hogs, sheep, and horses, and in it is an item that deals with live stock that are being shipped to the foreign countries, the horse and mule supply of the country, to keep diseases out of that great bunch of horses and mules that are being shipped away, and yet the gentleman from Kansas would not give that fund for that department of this Government that we may control those diseases.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. I will.

Mr. TOWNER. I was wondering why the Committee on Agriculture, when they reported the general Agricultural appropriation bill, did not include these items and avoid the duplication in the appropriation?

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. The regular Agricultural appropriation bill has carried in normal times the organization they had in normal times. The bill passed last year, the emergency bill, put in an emergency force, which is no part of the permanent force of the Government. It is not intended as a permanent bill or as a permanent force. They have those men, and they go off the pay roll the 1st of July, at the end of this fiscal year, unless this bill is passed and we give this fund to keep on this emergency force; and while it is an extension, in a way, of the yearly appropriation bill, yet it is to add impetus to agriculture generally.

That is all I have to say, Mr. Speaker, because I think in the discussion of the items of this bill the gentlemen of the House will see, while we may not agree that the amount is correct, that the purpose of the bill is good and will meet a war necessity.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman yields four minutes.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, the statement which is made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. YOUNG], of course, is probably an explanation, but it does not answer the objection that I made to those provisions of the bill that are carried in duplication of the provisions in the regular Agricultural appropriation bill for the very same purposes. It is not an answer, I submit, for the gentleman from Texas to say that the men employed under the provisions of this bill may go off the rolls on the 1st of July of this year. That has nothing to do with the proposition. They may be permanent or they may be temporary. In either event they cover the same items that are covered in the regular appropriation bill and ought to have been included in that bill. It is not only bad legislation but it is vicious legislation to cover in successive bills the same items. Gentlemen of the House have not opportunity to consider what the amount of appropriation is for a specific purpose.

The first provision in this bill is "For the prevention, control, and eradication of diseases and pests of live stock," and the appropriation is over $1,000,000. That is in addition to the appropriations that are specifically made in the regular Agricultural appropriation bill for exactly the same purposes. Then there is a provision "For the prevention, control, and eradication of insects and plant diseases." From time immemorial, in the regular Agricultural appropriation bills, these items have been covered. It is not proper, gentlemen; it is not the way in which these matters ought to be presented to Congress, that they should be presented in successive bills of this kind.

This comes very much in the nature of an urgent deficiency bill, and we are to consider questions now which can not be considered properly unless taken in connection with the very same provisions we had under consideration when we had the agricultural appropriation bill under consideration by the House. This House ought to have an opportunity to consider whether it is necessary that the total amount for these specific purposes is or is not sufficient. I am certainly as much in favor of liberal appropriations for the stimulation of food production as any man can be, but I can conceive of no reason, unless it is for the purpose of securing unjustifiable appropriations, why they should be included in successive bills, carrying the same items.

I trust, gentlemen, that if this is to be carried out now it certainly will not be continued in the future. It ought not to be presented to the House in this form. It is not good legislation. It is not the proper form in which to present it for consideration.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER].

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, the speech of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] demonstrated one thing conclusively, and that is that he is not familiar with the provisions of this bill. He would have you to believe that all this money is to be expended for the purpose of providing offices for employees in the Agricultural Department; that all of it is to be expended to bring them to Washington and put them in beautiful houses, furnish them with mahogany furniture, and permit them to walk upon carpets, and things of that character, and that it is all for the purpose of making a survey of the agricultural products throughout the United States.

The survey of agricultural products was provided for in a former bill, which was the food-survey bill. Some provisions in that bill were for food production, making it a combination bill, the food-survey matter being one part of the bill and the food-production proposition being another part of the bill. And he would impress you that the food survey is all that is to be done under this bill—just another proposition to make another survey of the food throughout this country—and that you ought to be able, by the provisions of the bill and the letter of the law, to produce wheat, and to produce corn, and to produce potatoes, and things of that kind.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I decline to yield to the gentleman, because he declined to yield to me.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I ask the gentleman to quote me correctly. I said, on the contrary, that the food survey had been abandoned.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. It has not been abandoned, but the work is being carried on now by the Agricultural Department, and reports are being sent out, and the gentleman is receiving reports in the mail every day, as he will find out if he will read his mail. He will get some to-day, to-morrow, and the day after to-morrow, and every day.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. May I ask if Mr. Hoover did not state to his committee that the food survey was absolutely valueless?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I am not responsible for what he says, and this bill makes no appropriation for his department or anything that Mr. Hoover is doing. I have not talked with him about it, and therefore I do not know what he says about it or what he thinks about it. But I do know what this bill proposes to do and what it will do if it is passed and put into operation and goes upon the statute books.

Now, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER], my distinguished friend, says that it is simply a duplication of the identical items that are carried in the appropriation bill. He is badly mistaken about that. There is an item here for live-stock production in the Great Plains region.

Mr. TOWNER. I want to correct the statement. I said some of the items of this bill are duplications, but not all of them.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I am glad to have the gentleman correct that. Some of the items are extensions of items in the annual appropriation bill, while some are not.

The following are some of the other items that are not included in the regular Agricultural appropriation bill: Utilization of creamery by-products, purchase and sale of seed, peanut conservation and utilization, location of Irish-potato seed stocks, castor-bean production and utilization, field supervision of war-garden work, and 8 or 10 other items, none of which is included in the regular Agricultural appropriation bill, as I have said. It is an extension of some of the work that is included in that bill, but it is an enlargement of the work, in order to stimulate food production in this country. [Applause.]

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. WALSH. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 37, noes 11.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is none. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. Those in favor of agreeing to this resolution will, when their names are called, answer "yea"; those opposed will answer "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 246, nays 17, answered "present" 3, not voting 164, as follows:

FOOD PRODUCTION.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will open the doors. The House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] in the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 11945, with Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 11945, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11945) to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, the purposes of the act entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense by stimulating agriculture and facilitating the distribution of agricultural products."

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I think the bill is of sufficient importance that the membership should hear it read.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, the purposes of the act entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense by stimulating agriculture and facilitating the distribution of agricultural products," approved August 10, 1917 (40 Stats., p. 273), there is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the following sums for the purposes indicated:

1. For the prevention, control, and eradication of the diseases and pests of live stock; the enlargement of live-stock production, and the conservation and utilization of meat, poultry, dairy, and other animal products, $1,058,975.

2. For procuring, storing, and furnishing seeds, as authorized by section 3 of the act, the appropriations for said purposes of $2,500,000 in section 8 of the act and $4,000,000 under the heading "Department of Agriculture" in the act approved March 28, 1918, entitled "An act making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and prior fiscal years, on account of war expenses, and for other purposes," shall be available until the date when said act of August 10, 1917, shall cease to be in effect, and any moneys heretofore or hereafter received by the United States for furnishing such seeds may be used as a revolving fund until said date.

3. For the prevention, control, and eradication of insects and plant diseases injurious to agriculture, and the conservation and utilization of plant products, $811,300.

4. For increasing food production and eliminating waste and promoting conservation of food by educational and demonstrational methods, through county, district, and urban agents and others, $6,100,000.

5. For gathering authoritative information in connection with the demand for, and the production, supply, distribution, and utilization of food, and otherwise carrying out the purposes of section 2 of the act; extending and enlarging the market news service; and preventing waste of food in storage, in transit, or held for sale; advise concerning the market movement or distribution of perishable products; for enabling the Secretary of Agriculture to inspect and certify perishable agricultural products, as provided in the agricultural appropriation act for the fiscal year 1919, $2,136,028.

6. For miscellaneous items, including the salaries of assistant secretaries appointed under the act approved August 10, 1917; special work in crop estimating; aiding agencies in the various States in supplying farm labor; enlarging the informational work of the Department of Agriculture; and printing and distributing emergency leaflets, posters, and other publications requiring quick issue or large editions, $1,105,980, of which sum not exceeding $25,000 shall be available for rent in the District of Columbia: Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized, for the official purposes of the Department of Agriculture, and within the limits of the appropriations for rent made by this or any other act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture, to requisition the use of, and take possession of, any building or any space in any building, and the appurtenances thereof, in the District of Columbia, other than a dwelling house occupied as such or a building occupied by any other branch of the United States Government; and he shall ascertain and pay just compensation for such use. If the amount of compensation so ascertained be not satisfactory to the person entitled to receive the same, such person shall be paid 75 per cent of such amount, and shall be entitled to sue the United States to recover such further sum as, added to said 75 per cent, will make up such amount as will be just compensation for such use in the manner provided by section 24, paragraph 20, and section 145 of the Judicial Code.

7. For enabling the Secretary of Agriculture to provide for and secure the voluntary mobilization and distribution of farm labor for the production and harvesting of agricultural crops, and to advance railroad fares and other actual traveling expenses for the transportation of such labor, upon such terms and conditions and subject to such regulations as the Secretary of Agriculture shall prescribe, $500,000, available immediately, of which not exceeding $50,000 may be expended for the payment of such administrative expenses, including such rent, the expenses of such printing and publications, the purchase of such supplies and equipment, and the employment of such persons and means, in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, as the Secretary of Agriculture may deem necessary for the purposes of this item. Any money received by the United States in repayment of advances made under this item may, in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, be used as a revolving fund for further carrying out the purposes of this item; any balance of such moneys not used as part of such revolving fund shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts. In carrying out the purposes of this item the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to cooperate with the Secretary of Labor or any other Federal, State, county or municipal department, agency, or officer, or with any association of farmers, board of trade, chamber of commerce, or similar organization, or with any person. Agricultural labor actually employed in agriculture and needed for cultivating and harvesting crops where engaged shall not be mobilized nor transported under the provisions of this item, and the Secretary of Agriculture shall, as soon as practicable after the close of the calendar year 1918, cause to be made to the Congress a detailed statement showing as far as possible the number of persons transported and employed and a detailed statement of all disbursements under this item.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, the bill under consideration, H. R. 11945, is for the purpose of extending the work which was begun under the food-production act passed August 10, 1917. That act carried an appropriation of $11,346,400. It became a law on the 10th day of August, 1917, and the appropriations provided by it expire on June 30, 1918, and necessarily were for only a part of a year. This bill under consideration carries the sum of $11,712,283 for the fiscal year 1919, and hence carries appropriations for a whole year. In addition to that there is a provision in this bill that the amount appropriated in the act of August 10, 1917, of $2,500,000 to provide a fund to be used by the Secretary of Agriculture in the purchase of seeds to be resold to the people at cost, and the appropriation of $4,000,000 appropriated in the deficiency act of March 28, 1918, for the same purpose, reported from the Appropriations Committee, are continued and made a revolving fund, under the provisions of this bill, during the continuance of the war. Therefore, while the total amounts combined aggregate $18,212,283, the sum of $6,500,000 is an insurance fund placed in the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture, with authority to purchase seed for the purpose of reselling to the people at cost, and is made a revolving fund whereby the money going out of the Treasury when the seed is sold goes back into the Treasury, and hence it is not really an appropriation which exhausts the Treasury to any extent.

Mr. QUIN. Will my colleague yield right there?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. With pleasure.

Mr. QUIN. These seeds are sold to farmers at actual cost?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. At actual cost.

Mr. QUIN. There is no profit to the Government?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. No profit at all.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Is the sale of these seeds confined to any section?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. It is not. The fund could be used in any section or in any part of the United States where the necessity demands.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Is it not a fact that the fund has heretofore been used in the purchase of seeds that are largely adapted to the arid regions of the West?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Some of the fund has been used for that purpose, but not entirely.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. The reason I make the inquiry is that I was informed by a representative of the department some time since that no seed purchased under the provisions of the act could be resold in the South.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I do not see why he made that statement. I do not so understand. Certainly there is no limitation of that kind in this bill.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. That statement of the representative of the department is absolutely untrue. Quite a large part of this fund was used in my State.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I will say to the gentleman from Alabama that further along in my remarks I have a full statement in reference to the manner in which this fund has been utilized.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Upon what terms are these seeds sold? Are they sold on credit, on security, or for cash?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. They are sold for cash. Now, in view of the fact that these appropriations were made in the act of August 10, 1917, and under the provisions of that act this work was begun, and in view of the fact that this bill proposes to make appropriations to continue this work, it is natural that gentlemen would like to know what has been done under the other appropriations which will justify appropriations to continue the work. The act of August 10, 1917, provides that it shall continue during the war and a certain number of months thereafter. Upon the arrival of that time, then the law goes out of existence by limitation. So long as the law is in existence, of course it requires the appropriation of money in order to carry on the work provided under the law.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. What is meant by the statement that the act will continue during the war? Does it mean that each year this amount for the same purpose will be expended?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I do not know that the same amount will be expended. There will be appropriations every year following this year, so long as that act remains in effect and is upon the statute book.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. For the same purposes?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. For practically the same purposes, to carry on the work and to keep it moving continuously. These appropriations in this bill are for the fiscal year 1919.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Then also we provide that appropriations for these same purposes shall be made for the following years during the continuation of the war.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. And any other activities which may arise as the result of experience. Of course, it may be necessary to provide funds for additional work. I do not take it that it will be confined absolutely to the identical same work all the time, but to such work as is being done under the present law and as will be done under these appropriations, and as will be done under appropriations made in the future, as experience is acquired in carrying on these activities.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Can the gentleman tell us how much the Government expended for seed during this past year?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I have not the figures before me——

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The gentleman stated something about seeds being furnished to the arid regions.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I have the facts with reference to that.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Does the gentleman expect to show what each State received?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I expect to show the kinds of seed and the exact locations where the seeds were used.

Now, I hope I may be permitted to proceed. The difference between this bill and the regular annual appropriation is that under the regular annual appropriation bill money is appropriated only for the normal activities of the Department of Agriculture.

When we reported from the Agricultural Committee the annual appropriation bill it was distinctly stated, not only in the report but stated in speeches made on the floor of the House—I stated in a speech that I made on the floor of the House that those appropriations were confined to the normal activities of the department, and that subsequently we would bring in an additional appropriation bill to provide for the other activities of the department.

Another reason why that was done was because the appropriations made under this bill are for the development of agriculture and the stimulation of production for the purpose of the war. When the war is over this bill will cease and the appropriations themselves will cease, and we will revert to the one annual appropriation bill, which will cover the appropriations for the activities of the department.

Another reason was that it was not known at the time the regular annual appropriation bill was introduced and passed just what would be necessary in order to carry on the work, because the work was to some extent in the course of development, and had only gone on a few months before, and the Secretary of Agriculture believed that it was best to wait until by experience and further investigation it might be determined and known what was necessary in order to carry on the work.

Now, gentlemen, I want to call attention to the further fact that there has never been a bill presented in this House that had more thorough consideration than this bill received at the hands of the Agricultural Committee. We had hearings which lasted a week, having before us the officers of the Department of Agriculture, and then after the hearings were concluded it was considered, not by a subcommittee but considered by the full committee day after day for nearly a week more and reported by the committee to this House. Therefore it is not a bill which has not received due consideration, but one in which every phase and every line and every word in it has been thoroughly and fully and completely considered by the members of the Agricultural Committee. I will state, too, that it was as a rule considered during the full attendance of the Agricultural Committee; and I am happy to say that we have one of the greatest chairmen—Mr. LEVER, of South Carolina—and one of the best committees in this House, and the members as a rule attend and take part in the discussion and consideration of the bills which have been before that body. [Applause.]

Now, permit me to present the work done by the Agricultural Department to justify the appropriations now proposed.

No department of the Government responded more quickly or more efficiently for war needs in 1917 than the Department of Agriculture. Its work is not done in a spectacular way, and therefore it escapes the observation of many people; but a brief review of the outstanding features of its accomplishment will show that the President was warranted in saying not long ago that the Federal Department of Agriculture is the best organization of its kind in the world.

The existence of a state of war between the United States and Germany was declared on April 6. Three days later the Secretary of Agriculture met in conference at St. Louis with agricultural leaders from New England to the Rocky Mountain States. The Nation was represented by the Secretary of Agriculture and specialists of his staff and the States by their commissioners of agriculture, officers of their agricultural colleges, and men in charge of the cooperative agricultural extension work. The editors of 75 farm journals also were present. On April 13 the Western States, in a similar conference at Berkeley, Cal., called at the request of the Secretary of Agriculture, indorsed the conclusions reached at St. Louis, where a program was adopted the substantial part of which has been enacted into law or put into practice without material change. Under the leadership of the department and its associated agencies the farmers of the Nation, in spite of difficulties, greatly increased their activities, with the result that they planted 246,275,000 acres of the leading food crops, compared with 223,337,000 in 1916 and 213,936,000, the average for the five years 1910–1914. The yield of the leading cereals was a full billion bushels, including wheat, corn, barley, rye, oats, and all other cereals, in excess of the production of the preceding year, notwithstanding the fact that the winter-wheat yield for the year was short, because of the very heavy loss from winter killing.

Mr. LONDON. Does that represent more acreage or increased production?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Both. At the same time live stock of all kinds was increased, including horses to the extent of 1.7 per cent, or 353,000, and mules to the extent of 2.1 per cent, or 101,000, in spite of the great numbers of animals that have been sent to Europe for war purposes. Milch cows increased 1.7 per cent, or 390,000, and other cattle 4.5 per cent, or 1,857,000; sheep, for the first time in several years, increased by 2.7 per cent, or 1,284,000, and swine 5.7 per cent, or 3,871,000. While, of course, these results must be ascribed mainly to our loyal and patriotic farmers, who do the work, still, undoubtedly, no small measure must be ascribed to the work of the Department of Agriculture, especially through the cooperative agricultural extension machinery of State agencies, including the agricultural colleges, and of farmers' organizations.

There was a shortage of wheat in 1917 due to unfavorable weather, but in all other respects food supplies were more abundant. Last fall, when there was still no little apprehension, due to the short wheat yield and the need for increased production, the department called further conferences and projected a campaign for increased wheat and rye acreages. Again this winter, with a view of securing larger production, a new program was planned for the spring and summer operations; and the farmers, who are always patriotic and willing and anxious to help the country, are making every effort to increase the acreage and as a natural consequence increase products necessary for our prosperity. [Applause.]

The gratifying increases of 1917 promise not only to be maintained but further increased in 1918 in spite of the difficulties which the farmers encounter in respect to labor and many supplies. The winter wheat acreage is the largest on record and would have been still larger but for the dry weather which prevailed at planting time in a considerable part of the grain belt. The indications are that there will be a considerable increase in the spring wheat acreage, and the weather and soil conditions of all wheat apparently are very favorable. The crop programs for 1917 and 1918 and the activities of the Department of Agriculture and its associates, the land-grant colleges, could not have been adequately planned and carried on but for the funds provided in the food-production act for the fiscal year 1918. The bill which we are now discussing makes provision for the continuation of these activities during the fiscal year 1919 and are absolutely necessary to continue this splendid work for increased production to furnish food to supply our Army and Navy and our allies.

As the result of the St. Louis and Berkeley conferences the most peaceful industry of a peaceful country had shouldered its war task one week after war was declared, and its agricultural leaders in two days had drawn up a program of production, conservation, distribution, investigation, and legislation, the wisdom of which has not been successfully questioned. That effective and organized agricultural agencies were available to take up the burdens which the war inevitably thrust upon them is due to the foresight of the American people in liberally supporting agricultural development. The results which these agencies were able to report to the country in a relatively short space of time, and which they will continue to accomplish with increased efficiency as the war continues, should be regarded by Americans not as real expenditures but as investments in a better and more progressive farming industry which will bring dividends in the future. [Applause.] Anyone who has followed the rapid course of progress in the industry of the farm does not need to be reminded that much of our hope for success in this war is grounded in a sturdy agriculture which has been greatly strengthened by the Federal and State Governments in such movements for national betterment as were provided for in the cooperative agricultural-extension act, the farm-loan act, the Federal reserve act, the grain-standards act, the warehouse act, the Federal-aid road act, and other progressive measures.

This Nation—

Said the Secretary of Agriculture some time ago—

is exceptionally fortunate in having laid generations ago foundations for scientific and practical agriculture, not only for the whole Nation in the Federal Department of Agriculture but also for each State in the land-grant college, in the State department of agriculture, and in the great farmers' organizations. Representatives of these agencies in two days at St. Louis not only evolved a program involving legislation but a program involving also organization and coordination of agencies for more effective assistance in this crisis. Such organization was quickly developed and I imagine that in this direction, as in others, the Nation has given demonstrations of efficiency that no other nation has equaled.

In this connection another statement made by the Secretary a few months before war was declared is of interest:

We hear much about the efficiency of foreign governments and of the farmers of other nations. There is no other Government in the world which has agricultural establishments at all comparable with those now provided by the people of the United States through their Federal and State Governments. More helpful and constructive agencies are now in operation for the betterment of rural life than ever before in the history of the Nation. Even now no farmer in the world can compare with the American farmer in agricultural efficiency. His adaptability to new and changing conditions, to the use of improved machinery and processes, coupled with the great natural resources with which the Nation is endowed, make him far superior to any of his competitors.

It is true that he does not produce more per acre than the farmers of some of the other nations. Production per acre, however, is not the American standard. The standard is the amount of production for each person engaged in agriculture, and by this test the American farmer appears to be from two to six times as efficient as most of his competitors. With the provisions heretofore and recently made to assist him both in the field of production and distribution, he need not fear the competition of the world. He will inevitably control the home market, except for things which can not be produced here, and will be called upon increasingly to supply the needs of the world.

Therefore, you see the American farmer is the best farmer on earth. For this reason I have always been his friend, before I came to Congress and every minute since I have been a Member of the House, and I propose to stand by him as long as I live in public or private life. [Applause.]

In addition to the agencies already in existence when the United States entered the war, the St. Louis conference suggested the creation in each State, either separately, or preferably in connection with the State council of safety, of a small central division on food production and conservation, composed of representatives of the State boards of agriculture and the land-grant colleges, of such farmers' organizations as the Grange, the Farmers' Union, the American Society of Equity, the Gleaners, the Farmers' National Congress, and others as may exist in a particular State, and of bankers' and business agencies. This suggestion was communicated to the governors of the several States by the Secretary of Agriculture and such an organization promptly was created in nearly every State in the Union. They have rendered very effective service in connection with the organization of agriculture and in the coordination of agricultural activities in the various States. The conference also suggested the creation of county, township, or urban bodies of similar constitution, working in close cooperation with the State central agencies, to study and deal with problems of food production and conservation.

The Secretary of Agriculture, shortly after the St. Louis conference, called to his assistance at Washington men of special training and broad experience to assist him in further projecting the activities of the department, in keeping in touch with the problems and machinery over the Nation, and in promoting large national activities. He also thought it of special importance that he secure the views of the executive heads of the great national farmers' organizations, and therefore invited them to come to Washington on April 23 to advise and confer with him. They responded promptly and, in general, they indorsed the suggestions made in the Secretary's letter to the Senate on April 18, in which he discussed the recommendations of the St. Louis conference and made specific suggestions for legislative action.

Conferences immediately were held with members of the Agricultural Committees of the House and Senate and, at their suggestion, the Secretary undertook the preparation of tentative measures embodying the necessary legislation as outlined in his letter to the Senate. There were two leading thoughts in mind. One thought was to speed up the activities of existing agencies along normal lines and to have them attack aggressively certain larger problems of production, home economics, and farm marketing. The other was to vest powers in the President, to be exercised through an emergency agency rather than through an existing department, to deal with certain special and urgent problems growing out of the war and having both a national and an international aspect. Hearings were held by the Senate and House committees and changes made from time to time in the tentative drafts and bills perfected and reported to Congress. All the suggestions found final expression in the enactment and approval by the President on August 10, 1917, of two measures:

First. The food-control act, the provisions of which, so far as they relate to foods and feeds, are administered by the Food Administrator; and Second. The food-production act, which is administered by the Department of Agriculture and carries an appropriation of $11,346,400.

At first glance it might appear that these two measures, the food-control act and the food-production act, overlap unnecessarily and that needless duplication of effort between the Food Administration and the Department of Agriculture would result. This impression, however, is corrected by a proper understanding of the functions of the two agencies which was clearly explained in the Secretary's annual report for 1917:

> In a broad way the Food Administration has as its prime functions the control and regulation of the commercial distribution of foods and feedstuffs; that is, of products which have reached the markets and are in the channels of distribution or in the hands of consumers, their conservation by consumers, and the elimination of waste, through the employment of regular official as well as volunteer agencies.
> The Department of Agriculture continues to administer the laws placed under its jurisdiction and to direct its activities in reference to production. It also continues to make the investigations authorized by Congress and to furnish assistance to farmers and live-stock men in the marketing of their products; to stimulate organization among producers for the distribution of their products to the markets; and to promote the conservation of farm and animal products, especially of perishables, through canning, drying, preserving, pickling, and the like. It retains its work in home economics as provided by law, and cooperates in this field as heretofore with the agricultural colleges through the extension service. It directs all these undertakings in greatly expanded form under the authority and with the funds provided by the food-production act. In their promotion it utilizes its own official machinery and enlists the aid of volunteers.
> In the main, the Department of Agriculture deals with all the processes of farming and follows the products through the markets to the point where they are available, and are in requisite form, for actual consumption. It aids in these processes through investigation, advice, and demonstration; only in the case of certain products and processes has it regulatory authority. The Food Administration, however, has wide powers of regulation and direction of food materials and food products. Where the Food Administration through its powers can be of assistance to the Department of Agriculture in its field, it is at liberty freely to make suggestions, and, when necessary, to cooperate in execution; and the same relation obtains as to the department's participation in Food Administration matters in which it has a vital interest, and toward the promotion of which it can be of assistance.

Prompt action was necessary to carry out the recommendations included in the St. Louis program. Farmers already were in the field or had made their plans for the season. Pending legislation by Congress, therefore, the department and the States speeded up their work along the most promising lines with the forces and funds at their command. Projects not having an important bearing on the emergency were set aside in order that the energy of the workers might be concentrated on the main problem. The value of the county agent system in the emergency was appreciated from the first. One of the major projects under the food-production act, therefore, was to enlarge this arm of the agricultural service as rapidly as possible. The plan to place at least one agent—and possibly two, a man and a woman—in every agricultural county has been developed since the passage of the food-production act as rapidly as men and women with the requisite qualifications could be found. These agents carry to the farmer's door the latest information regarding production, conservation, and marketing, with special regard to its local application. The number of women county agents is being greatly increased, and other women agents are being assigned to projects in gardening, poultry raising, and food economy in a number of the larger cities and towns. Altogether there are now employed approximately 5,400 men and women in this great educational system. From actual observation I know they are performing effective work and securing splendid results. [Applause.]

The work of controlling plant and animal diseases and insect pests has been greatly intensified, and especially efficient have been the efforts to reduce the losses from cereal smuts and rusts and the diseases of both white and sweet potatoes. Hog cholera losses as a result of the field work of 160 trained veterinarians working in 33 States in cooperation with the agricultural colleges, the State regulatory authorities, and local veterinarians, have been reduced in the last 12 months fully 20 per cent, following a reduction of 50 per cent during the preceding four years. Gratifying progress has been made in control of the cattle tick through the operation of 286 bureau inspectors, 284 State inspectors, and 1,202 county inspectors during the later months of 1917, at which time 21,247 dipping vats were in operation. Fifty-two per cent of the original 328,565 square miles of territory had been released from quarantine in December, 1917. Such progress has been made in the eradication of sheep and cattle scabies that it is believed that by 1920 there will be no territory under quarantine for these diseases. Similar progress has been made in the control of diseases of horses, and an active campaign to control tuberculosis is now under way in 28 States.

Never before have the producers on the one hand and the consumers on the other hand been so well served with comprehensive, prompt, and accurate information as is now being furnished by the Bureau of Markets of the Department of Agriculture. Through its market news service it keeps before the producer, the distributer, and the consumer a perpetual picture of the movement of both staple and perishable products, the supplies arriving in all of the more important cities, and the wholesale prices prevailing in each. Thus, the grower knows daily the shipments of the preceding 24 hours from his own and from each competing district, the destinations of the cars as shown by original billing, and the actual arrivals upon all the principal markets within his reach. In like manner the producer of staple products of the farm and the ranch knows the movement of products in which he is interested, the volume, the demand, and the value in so far as these elements are ascertainable by far-reaching and painstaking processes of survey and report. For instance, 625 wholesale packing establishments and public cold storages are reporting the stocks of frozen and cured meats and lard on the first of each month; 300 storages report the stocks of 5 classes of frozen poultry, and 450 storages report the stocks of case eggs and frozen eggs; 30,000 grain and hay producers, dealers, feed manufacturers, and buyers of feedstuffs, grain, and hay have been furnished information relative to sources of supply, conditions in the different markets, the stocks in dealers' hands, the receipts and shipments and prevailing market prices, and this information is made to serve both producer and consumer in a way to promote the maximum of intelligent and fair dealing and a minimum of sharp practice. Particularly helpful was the work of the bureau inaugurated last summer, and still maintained, in the drought regions of the Southwest and the Northwest. Through offices conveniently located to serve as clearing houses for information for farmers who have feed for sale and farmers who desire to purchase feed, buyers and sellers have been brought together, and thousands of cattle and other live stock have been saved from starvation.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I will.

Mr. DENISON. I would like, if the gentleman can, to have him give the name of the State which has produced the largest amount of agricultural products during the last year.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I do not remember at this moment.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman permit me to give it?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. Illinois produced more than any State in the Union, Texas came second, and Iowa third.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I am glad to have that information, and I congratulate the gentleman and his great State.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I will.

Mr. WALSH. I am very much impressed by the gentleman's statement in arguing the merits of this proposition and, of course, I appreciate, as most of us do, that he is one of the most earnest champions of the farmer in this body. [Applause.] I would like to ask him if he considers this measure as a pressing public emergency?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I certainly do.

Mr. WALSH. If that be the case, why does not the President turn over the amount called for in this measure to the Secretary of Agriculture, to be by him used under the authority already conferred on the Department of Agriculture, instead of asking for an additional appropriation, Congress having provided the President with an emergency fund?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I do not think the gentleman would insist that the $100,000,000 fund—and I presume that that is what he refers to—placed in the hands of the President for emergency war purposes was intended to be used by him for any purpose of this character. And as evidence of the fact that the President would not so consider it, or consider that he had the authority, is the fact that Congress in 1917, as I have already called attention to, passed a bill providing for this special work and made specific appropriation for carrying out the work. The appropriations in that bill, the act of August, 1917, will expire at the end of this fiscal year. Hence the necessity for the appropriations proposed in this bill to continue the work.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman would not question that this was as much of an emergency as the establishment and maintenance of the Bureau of Public Information, for which a portion of that fund has been used?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I do not want to discuss the Bureau of Public Information. There is no politics in the pending bill.

Mr. WALSH. I am not seeking to involve the gentleman in a controversy or in a political discussion, but I do want to point out that instead of having to wait for this legislation to pass through both branches of Congress this emergency might be met in this way.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. There are funds on hand under the bill of August, 1917, to carry on this work up to June 30, 1918, and this is the appropriation bill to continue that work during the fiscal year 1919.

I take special pride, together with other members of the Committee on Agriculture in the House of Representatives, in the fact that our chairman [Mr. LEVER] wrote the law in one of our appropriation bills, with the full approval of every member of our committee, establishing the Bureau of Markets, and we made the first appropriation to start the bureau on its useful and splendid career. I know how this splendid service began because I helped to start it, and am proud of its achievements. Another service of special value was the purchase and sale of seeds authorized in the food-production act for the fiscal year 1918, whereby the department has been enabled to buy and sell seeds at cost for cash to farmers in regions where supplies could not otherwise have been obtained in sufficient volume or of satisfactory quality at fair prices. This service has been confined principally to the drought regions of the Southwest and the Northwest and to the corn belt, where the supply of good seed corn was insufficient. This work has been done with the least possible interference with regular commerce and has insured generous planting in several regions where plantings would have been less but for this service. The amounts of seed purchased and, in the greater part, already sold by the department in the various sections up to April 5 were as follows: Southwest (Texas): Cotton, 169,212 bushels; cane, 2,200,442 pounds; kafir, 369,398 pounds; milo, 1,859,645 pounds; feterita, 297,350 pounds; peanuts, 18,319 bushels; ear corn, 17,907 bushels; shelled corn, 5,656 bushels; Sudan grass, 56,500 pounds. Northwest (North Dakota and Montana): Oats, 750,000 bushels; barley, 100,000 bushels; flax, 3,500 bushels. South Plains (Kansas, Oklahoma, Colorado, New Mexico): Sorghum (all kinds), 72,542 bushels. Indiana: Seed corn, 1,500 bushels. Ohio: Seed corn, 35,000 bushels. Seed corn purchased in New York and New England for Wisconsin and North Dakota, 3,500 bushels. The Department of Agriculture, through its farm-help specialists in every State, in cooperation with the agricultural colleges, the county agents, the Council of Defense, and the Federal and State departments of labor, managed last year, and undoubtedly will manage this year, to overcome the farm-labor difficulties, if the towns and cities will recognize and discharge their responsibility to spare some part of their man power to aid the farmers at the seasons of strain in cultivation and harvest. The department's farm-labor program divides the country into four farm-labor divisions, to wit: First, New England and Northeastern States; second, Southern States; third, North Central States; fourth, Western States. Each of these divisions is in charge of a representative who correlates the activities of the region and is enabled, through the various agencies, not only to supply a large number of men for continuous farm labor, but to mobilize and shift labor from section to section as the need develops. During the last year 15,000 men with previous farm experience were secured from cities and placed on farms in New York. In Ohio 900 experienced men were placed in regular farm work during March. Similar results are reported from other States. The department's farm-help specialists in Kansas have secured pledges from 50,000 city residents in that State to devote from 2 to 15 days of their time to harvest work this summer. Similar results have been obtained in North Dakota, South Dakota, Pennsylvania, Georgia, and Kentucky, and the campaign is in active progress in every State. But, as has been well said, the department can not create labor nor compel men to work in any particular vocation. Hence it becomes increasingly necessary for men of farm experience in the towns and cities to do some farm work, and for public opinion and, if need be, local law to compel the idle and the careless to wake up to a full realization of the necessities of the situation and go to work to help the country. There is no room in this country now for slackers anywhere. The battle cry must be heard and heeded by every loyal citizen and food must be produced and our brave boys at the front taken care of and abundantly supplied with food. He who fails to do his full duty in this hour of our greatest peril and danger ought to and will receive the fiery condemnation of all liberty-loving people. [Applause.]

The production of an adequate supply of vegetables for the individual or family growing them for use fresh during the summer and for canning, drying, and storing was urged last year and is being urged now. Special emphasis is placed on the desirability of each community producing its own food of this kind to the fullest possible extent in order to obviate the necessity of transporting large tonnages of perishable products. At the same time the department is emphasizing the necessity of utilizing the seed supply in the most careful manner, in order that there may be enough for all who desire to maintain a garden.

Many forces and different organizations are helping the garden campaign, but the Department of Agriculture and the agricultural colleges are carrying the larger end of the work of organization and instruction. Through the States Relations Service and the Bureau of Plant Industry cooperative arrangements have been effected for organizing all the interested activities in a general garden campaign. The aim has been to enlist chambers of commerce and commercial clubs in an effort to finance local garden activities, to enlist local committees of national defense in securing volunteers who can assist in the direction of the actual work of making and maintaining gardens, and to assist local organizations, whether citizens' associations, local garden clubs, boys' and girls' clubs, Boy Scout clubs, Camp Fire Girls, or schools in cooperation with the Bureau of Education, in maintaining gardens for food production.

Not only were home-gardening activities very greatly increased last year, but upon the Department of Agriculture and its cooperative forces fell the task of conserving the production, which in many regions was a surplus beyond local or general need. The department's far-reaching campaign for canning and drying vegetables resulted in a larger volume of home-grown canned and dried products in the pantries of the Nation than was ever known before and released a corresponding volume of commercial products for export to Europe. A conservative estimate places the value of the home canned and dried products in the South alone last year at fully $10,000,000. While many individuals and groups of individuals have labored zealously to promote gardening activities, those best informed know that the substantial results accomplished are due to the basic knowledge, the thoroughgoing methods, and the quiet, persistent, organized effort of the Department of Agriculture and the land-grant colleges cooperating, through their extension forces, the county agents, and local agencies, and thereby reaching nearly every agricultural community of the United States.

Under the authority of the food-control act the Department of Agriculture arranged with the War Industries Board to purchase and import 120,000 tons of nitrate of soda to assist farmers in meeting a fertilizer shortage. The contracts with the nitrate companies called for delivery at the wharves in Chile of 24,000 tons each month from January to May, inclusive. At the time the contracts were made it appeared that deliveries could be made in such a way that all applicants would receive, when needed, practically the full amount of their orders. Applications were received from over 75,000 farmers for a total of about 130,000 tons. The applications were received and the distribution effected through county agents and local committees. On account of the difficulty in obtaining the necessary shipping without interference with vital war operations, deliveries have not come up to expectations, and there will be some delay, but advices from the Shipping Board indicate that the department will be able substantially to meet the orders received from farmers up to February 4, which was the date for closing the receipt of applications.

The informational activities of the department under the food-production act have been increased and made more efficient. A total of more than 3,000,000 pieces of literature pertaining to emergency agricultural and conservation activities have been distributed, and the newspapers and agricultural journals have been supplied, day by day and week by week, with timely and pertinent information, which has served not only to stimulate the energies of farmers but to bring to the thoughtful people of the towns and cities the vital problems of agriculture which they have heretofore ignored as a matter of no concern to any except the tillers of the soil.

Feeling the need of consultation from time to time with representative agricultural and live-stock producers of the United States, the Secretary of Agriculture and the Food Administrator early in March selected an advisory committee of 24 representatives of all phases of agriculture and live-stock production and of typical agricultural regions in the United States. The committee assembled in Washington March 28 and continued in session until April 4. From time to time representatives of the Food Administration, the Department of Agriculture, the War Department, and the Department of Labor appeared before the committee or subcommittees and entered fully into the details of all activities relating to agriculture. In addition, the committee, through subcommittees, caused investigation to be made and discussed at length the various problems which have arisen in relation to agriculture under war conditions. At the conclusion of the meeting the committee adopted a report, which has since been printed as a circular. The committee will be reassembled in Washington from time to time for consultation with the two governmental agencies.

Not only in the field of agriculture, but in other directions as well, the Department of Agriculture has rendered assistance. Meat inspectors of the department, for instance, at the request of the War and Navy Departments, have been detailed to the camps, cantonments, forts, and naval stations to see that the troops have good, wholesome food. All meat and meat food products are thus reinspected and the laboratories of the department carefully analyze samples to detect poisons or other extraneous substances. Butter and milk sources also have been investigated by the department's experts.

The Tenth Engineers of 1,200 men and the Twentieth Engineers, consisting of 10 battalions of 750 men each—the forestry regiments—were organized by the Forest Service in cooperation with the War Department for service in France. These troops will supply lumber, construction timber, railroad ties, and fuel for the British and American troops in France. The war work in the field of forest products has assumed large proportions. A great deal of technical information regarding wood properties, strength, seasoning, and new species of wood suitable for rifles, airplanes, vehicles, and ships has been placed at the disposal of the Army, the Navy, the Shipping Board, Council of National Defense, and manufacturers of war orders. The Weather Bureau is furnishing the troops in France with forecasts of weather conditions and with observations of the upper air, particularly for the needs of aviation and the firing of projectiles. Aerological stations have been established in the United States to aid in the collection of information of value to aeronautics and to supplement the work of the 200 regular field stations of the Weather Bureau. The Weather Service also has been extended to cantonments and encampments in cooperation with the War Department.

Noteworthy progress has been made in the development of certain processes useful in the manufacture of American dyes and substances from which they are produced, and the Bureau of Chemistry in numerous directions has rendered valuable service to the war-making branches of the Government. The Office of Public Roads and Rural Engineering, with its force of experts, has assisted the War Department in building roads at the 16 cantonments and has placed at the disposal of the military authorities much valuable map data. Irrigation and drainage engineers have given expert advice in development and erection of drainage projects involving thousands of food-producing acres.

It is impossible within brief limits to detail all that has been done by the Department of Agriculture and its allies—the land grant colleges and the commissioners of agriculture—as well as by the farmers of the Nation, since the entrance of the United States in the war. I have merely attempted to give some indication of the achievements of the department's force of 20,000 trained workers in its bureaus of Plant Industry, Animal Industry, Entomology, Soils, Chemistry, Markets, Biology, Weather, Forest Service, Public Roads, and States Relations Service, in cooperation with the large forces of the State agricultural colleges and the State departments of agriculture. The farmers of the Nation, following the suggestions of the organized agricultural agencies of the Nation, and inspired by patriotic motives—for, God bless them, they have always been patriotic—last year succeeded in greatly increasing their operations. They planted the largest acreages in the history of the country, produced record crops of most products, and increased the number of all kinds of live stock. With effective organization and application and with such assistance as the department and the State agricultural agencies can render, I am convinced that they will again put forth their best efforts and produce a large supply of foods, feedstuffs, and live stock, not only for this country but for the nations with which we are associated in this war. [Applause.]

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I notice from the list of States where the resale of seeds was made they are largely confined to the West and Southwest, bearing out largely the information furnished me by the department that they had perhaps construed the law as authorizing the purchase of seeds for resale in those sections. I assume there is nothing in this bill that would justify the department in construing it as authorizing the purchase of seeds only for those sections.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. There was nothing in the former bill that would justify such a construction, nor is there in this bill. This bill is unlimited and is intended to relieve the necessity which arises anywhere—North, South, East, or West. The Secretary would have authority to use this fund in order to purchase seed and resell it to the farmers at cost in any and every section and part of the United States.

Mr. Chairman, I have already occupied more time than I expected to. I simply want to call attention in conclusion to the fact that this is strictly a war emergency measure. The appropriations for the regular and normal activities of the Department of Agriculture are made in the annual Agricultural appropriation bill, which has been passed and which is now in conference, and these appropriations are merely for the purpose of expanding and enlarging the work throughout every agricultural county in the United States of America, and bringing forth other means of securing, by encouraging agriculture, every particle of food that our soil will produce and which our people can raise. It is necessary because we hear so often that food must be produced in order that we may feed our people, in order that we may have ample supply for our boys in the Army and Navy, and in order that we may supply and feed our allies across the sea on the other side. Therefore I appeal to every Member on the floor of this House to recognize the necessity for this appropriation, and not stand in the way of doing those things which are absolutely required by reason of the fact that the country is at war and the demands are greater upon the United States of America than ever before in all the history of this Republic, and a man who will stand in the way of and obstruct the enactment of a law that is to bring about these results, it seems to me, would be standing in the way of those things which are absolutely necessary to be done for our preservation and the taking care of our boys as well as our people. I hope there is not a man on the floor of this House who will seriously antagonize this bill when he realizes exactly what its provisions and purposes are and the result that it will bring about. [Applause.]

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. ROBBINS. I have been very much interested in the gentleman's statement. I did not notice that Pennsylvania had received any seed under this prior bill. Does this bill propose to extend it so that Pennsylvania can come in if she desires?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Every State in the Union is included. There are 48 States in the Union, and every one of them can participate in this seed proposition if the conditions exist in the State to justify it. Where there is a necessity for it in any locality, where the people can not secure seed, where production would be hampered by reason of the scarcity of seed, then under these conditions the department would locate and purchase the seed, transfer them to that locality, store them, and sell them to the farmers at actual cost.

Mr. ROBBINS. Are there any new offices created under this bill, and is any part of this appropriation to go for the payment of salaries?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. There is no "office" created under this bill. There will be employed some additional employees to continue this activity, and of course money will be used to pay necessary salaries. Some of the counties, for instance, of the 2,850 agricultural counties in the United States have not yet been supplied with the men and women agents, and it is the purpose and intention of the department to put county agents in every agricultural county in the United States. It may be necessary to enlarge the force to some extent, but there are no "offices" of any kind created in this bill. The persons engaged are simply employees of the Department of Agriculture, and when this bill expires by limitation, then the appropriations will cease and the employees which have been employed and have been made necessary by the activities under the bill will go out of the service of the Government, and we will return to the normal conditions and to the ordinary appropriation.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I will.

Mr. MADDEN. I understand under this bill it is possible and altogether likely there will be about 11,000 additional employees put on the Government pay roll outside of the civil service?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Well, the understanding of the gentleman is incorrect. No such increase or manner of selection is contemplated by the department.

Mr. MADDEN. The bill itself originally, as it was contemplated while it was under consideration by the committee, provided for about 11,900, but a reduction being made in the appropriation the number was reduced to about 11,000.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Oh, the gentleman is mistaken. There will be, of course, employees made necessary in accordance with the development of the work, but there will not be any unnecessary employees.

Mr. SINNOTT. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. My time has about expired, and I have taken more time than I intended. If I had more time, I would gladly yield to the gentleman. Let me say in final conclusion that this is a war measure made necessary by war conditions. We must supply our noble and brave boys who are fighting for our country, and to do so and supply our people and our allies everything must be done to increase production. I appeal to you, my fellow Members, to aid in the passage of this meritorious and necessary legislation and thereby have a part in all the good work to be accomplished by it. I thank you for your interest, patience, and attention. [Loud applause.]

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, the proposed bill carries an appropriation of $18,212,283. According to the estimates submitted to the committee, and as stated by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], it will give employment to about 11,000 people, practically all outside of the classified service, as stated by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER]. Much of the work suggested is, of course, of much importance, but considering present conditions the enormous expenditures made in connection with its importance and the results obtained in the past, I can not but doubt the advisability of at least a part of many of the appropriations proposed in the bill. The annual appropriation bill now in conference carried when it left the House $26,943,773. The Senate raised it to $28,248,933. In view of the liberal appropriations made for the Department of Agriculture; the stupendous appropriations made by Congress for the current year, aggregating in the billions, which has necessitated the sale of liberty bonds, war-savings and thrift stamps; Treasury certificates mounting up in the billions; the inflation of the currency; the issuing of reserve bank notes; besides we are at war, men are needed in the trenches, on the farms, in the factories, in the mines; in fact, in every line of activity—considering conditions in general, it would seem wise to pause or, as has been suggested, to slow down, to "stop, look, and listen"; to carefully scrutinize all appropriations, at least those of the least importance; and to give due and careful consideration to the mobilization and assignment of our man power.

If so, it may be found that rather than to employ an army of 11,000 people to travel over the country telling farmers how to farm, it might be better to put them back of the plow, as that money might better be appropriated for the furnishing of tractors and sulky plows for the 11,000 people to ride upon instead of in automobiles. If increased production is to be taken into consideration, undoubtedly 11,000 men back of the plow would bring better results than 11,000 talking and riding in Ford cars. Already we have 5,400 people in the field under the supervision of the States Relations Service engaged in demonstration and extension work, an average of two to the counties, besides a large number of people employed by the various bureaus and divisions of the department, traveling in the same direction, riding on the same train, living in the same hotel, and in many instances pursuing the same lines of activity and duplicating their work. Though there appears to be much duplication of work, there is, of course, much to be commended. Nevertheless, the question to be determined is, "Are 11,000 more needed; are their services needed more for this line of activity than in the trenches, on the farms, in the factories, and in the mines?" Already 2,000 employees in the Department of Agriculture have been certified by the Secretary of Agriculture for deferred classification for military service. With that large number already certified, are we doing justice to those required to take their places? Is it fair to provide for a soft berth in the public crib at a salary of from one to three hundred dollars a month for one and to draft another at $30 a month to do the fighting for him? Judging from press reports the people in the country do not seem to take kindly to the proposition to furnish their sons to do the fighting for those exempted from military duties unless for legitimate and proper reasons. Just last week the farmers of North Dakota took a day off, went to town with brush in hand to spread yellow paint over their banker's bank as evidence of their disapproval of their banker's son having been placed in the deferred classification. The same performance took place in Iowa recently because a banker's son-in-law, who had been in the first classification, was transferred to the second. Only a few days ago the House by a large majority rejected a conference report which had for its purpose the exempting of theological and medical students from military service.

With that sentiment, under existing conditions, with 2,000 employees in the department already certified by the Secretary of Agriculture to the military authorities for deferred classification, are we justified in adding 11,000 more employees to the department and to make it possible to excuse them temporarily from military duty? Many of you have, as I have, cheerfully given our sons to the service. Are we doing justice to our own or the sons of others, or those who may be called into the service to take the place of those excused from military service made possible by this bill? In my opinion it is well worth considering. But we are at war, which is held out as a justification for the appropriation; another is that this is no time to question or to dispute the action or estimates of any department of our Government; all agree that the question of how to win the war should be made the paramount issue. In that connection the food supply is, of course, one of the most important problems. It is unnecessary to say that we or our Army can not exist without food. When we take into consideration our allies' limited production of foodstuffs and the proximity of our source of supply to the field of action, it is obvious that it is not sufficient for us to simply supply our own soldiers and people with food, but we must, in a large degree, supply our allies. When we consider that we are confronted with a shortage of foodstuffs not only in our allies' countries, but in our own country as well; that, together with the world's limited shipping facilities and the fact that it requires about three times the time for a ship to make a journey to Australia and return to France and about twice the time to Argentina as to the United States, it is clear to all that we have a tremendous task before us.

Much attention has been directed to the question of building ships, which, of course, we need. Every encouragement should be given to shipbuilding, but ships are of little value if we have not the cargo with which to load them. Hence we must have food, ships, munitions, arms, clothing, and equipment, which are all essential to the winning of the war.

Unfortunately, farmers in general are now facing a serious condition as to farm labor on account of the many farm hands joining the Army; also due to the fierce competition with industrial centers, especially with the munitions manufacturer. In many sections of the country the farmer is short not only on labor but on feed, agricultural supplies, and on credit. Besides, as I have stated, recent legislation and price fixing has, according to the testimony before the House and Senate committees and the press reports, discouraged the farmer and has resulted in a decrease instead of an increase in production.

As all know, feeders of hogs and cattle are losing money; that is, if the price of corn is taken into consideration. I sold feeders in Chicago last fall as high as $11.40 per hundred. The feeder who bought them from the scalper and paid freight to his feed yard paid at least $12 per hundred. If feeding corn, he will, when his steer is finished, have fed 80 bushels to each steer; if he is a successful feeder he may produce—I will be liberal and say 500 pounds of beef and 300 pounds of pork; if he topped the market, he would get in Chicago, according to quotations, from $13 to $14 per hundred. Grant that he got $13.75 and that he started out with 1,100-pound steer at $12 per hundred, or $132 for the steer, and has paid $2 a bushel for 80 bushels of corn, $160; total, $292. If the steer has gained 500 pounds and sells at $13.75, or $13 net, he receives $208.30 for the steer and $46.50 for a 300-pound hog, at $15.50, or a total of $254.80; deduct $254.80 from $292, he has a loss of $37.20 on each steer; to that should be added the risk, his labor, hay, and straw applied to the steer, and interest on his investment.

I recommend careful reading of recent hearings before the Senate and House committees and of farm journals. The Wallace Farmer prints an article in its edition of February 22, 1918, headed "Playing square with the farmer." It also quotes from statements made to the Senate committee, as follows:

THE TROUBLES OF THE STOCK FEEDER.

Patriotism alone keeps the live-stock producers of the country in the business to-day, and they can not exist much longer on patriotism while operating their business at a loss.

The live-stock situation was never so serious as it is to-day. To-day there is only an average amount of live stock in the country, in the face of abnormal consumption, serious transportation conditions, increased raw-material cost, and insufficient live-stock prices.

Seventy-five per cent of the live stock in the corn belt to-day is unmarketable because of lack of transportation, and this results in a waste of 50 per cent in foodstuffs and a loss to the producers of $2 per hundredweight on their product.

The live-stock producers face further sacrifices when transportation opens, for the packers will then lower the price because of increasing live-stock receipts. Retail prices will not be lowered, and the breeder will have to stand the loss. For beef cattle to-day the average price at Chicago is $12 per hundredweight, and the producer should get at least $2 more to get any encouragement to continue production.

On hogs, although the Government has sought to regulate the price, the producers are not making any money. The minimum price fixed by the Food Administration of $15.50 per hundredweight for packers' droves is inadequate with corn at $1.50 a bushel. Corn should be not more than $1 a bushel for the producer to make any money at the $15.50 figure.

The breeding situation this spring is threatening to be short in the face of a constantly increasing demand.

I am sorry to say it, but the Government is losing the confidence of the farmers. The farmers feel that they ought to have some voice, at least, in arranging their own business and the fixing of all the big problems that enter into their own business.

There is a growing feeling of discontent, lack of confidence, and apprehension for the future among live-stock producers of the country. It threatens greatly decreased production, which would be a national disaster. Labor is protected by the Government; the packer is protected; steel producers, sugar, copper, flour, and other producers are protected in liberal profits, and it is essential that something be done in this crisis for the live-stock producers of the country. We do not ask for war profits, but we must get some profits. The live-stock producers can exist no longer on patriotism.

Another unfortunate feature about the food situation is the apparent discrimination against the farmer in fixing and depressing of prices on the products which the farmer has to sell and a failure to do so on the articles which he must buy. That the power lodged in the Food Administration and in the Department of Agriculture to buy and to fix prices has been taken advantage of to lower prices on cattle, hogs, and wheat to the farmer, while no action has been taken to regulate or reduce the price on tools, utensils, implements, machinery, and equipment required for the actual production of foods and feed, notwithstanding authority was granted the same to one as to the other. As a result, the farmer is compelled to sell his hogs, cattle, and wheat at a much lower price than if unhampered by the pooling and buying and price fixing. Not only that, but the farmer and consumer as well are in many instances paying more than 100 per cent increase over prewar prices. The farmer and the consumer pay the price fixed by the trust maker and the price boomer.

The only explanation that can be given is that the Food Administrator has exercised his power, while the Department of Agriculture, to whom was delegated the power to execute the law as to farm implements, fuel, including fuel oil and natural gas, has questioned the power and has remained inactive in the matter.

I hold in my hand a letter written by Ed. Hockaday, of Kingfisher, Okla., stating that the letter sent to me was sent to each Congressman of the 12 principal wheat-growing States. He states that he is one of the largest dealers of the West in the implement line; that he has 12 stores, and alleges that an average advance in grain-raising machinery and other farm implements of more than 100 per cent has occurred, without justification of more than one-third of that advance; that all big concerns manufacturing implements are on the same basis and have made the same price; that in 1916 they started by putting on a small advance of 10 or 15 per cent; that in 1917 they made several advances, later they put on 25 or 30 per cent, making a total advance of from 80 to 125 per cent; that the prices of gang plows have increased from $53 in 1916 to $105 now; that the Harvester Trust advanced prices on 7-foot wheat binders from $120 in 1916 to $203 this year, and on the 12-foot wheat harvesters from $210 in 1915 to $395 in 1918.

I understand that material advances have been made since the writing of the letter; that the retail price on wheat harvesters has been advanced to $250 and on other farm machinery accordingly; that binding twine is to be sold at from 26 to 27 cents per pound instead of 10 cents, as a few years ago.

According to the correspondence, Mr. Hockaday, in his effort to secure relief, first appealed to the Federal Trade Commission. The commission replied, stating that the matter had been referred to Mr. Hoover, who, in turn, informed the commission that the Department of Agriculture was actively handling the question of farm implements, and, to avoid duplication of effort, Mr. Hockaday's letter had been sent to the Department of Agriculture. The department, through Arnold P. Yerkes, assistant agriculturist, courteously acknowledged receipt, stating that Mr. Hockaday's letter had been referred to it for reply, and that the question of prices for farm machinery is one over which the department has no jurisdiction whatever.

In view of the fact that under the license provision of the food-control act power was given to fix prices on farm machinery, same as was given to fix prices on farm products, and the further fact that the power has been exercised by one branch of the Government as to farm products, I am at a loss to know why it was not exercised by another branch of our Government as to the trust-made article.

In addition to the burdens placed upon the farmer by the Implement Trust, owing to the high compensation guaranteed railroad companies, evidently an increase of transportation rates will have to be added. Of all the legislation ever enacted it seems to me to be one of the most unreasonable and unjustifiable.

I quote from an article by Clifford Thorne, formerly chairman of the State Railway Commission of Iowa. In the Annals of the American Academy Mr. Thorne states:

Summarizing the situation, it may be stated that the railroad bill now pending before Congress proposes the following guaranties made on behalf of the Government of the United States: (1) To return the properties at the end of the period of Government control in as good condition as that at the time they were taken over; (2) to loan the railroads all the money necessary for betterments and improvements, probably at the rate on Government bonds; (3) to shield the large prosperous railroad systems from all future increases in the cost of labor and supplies while the war lasts; (4) to protect these larger railroads from all financial hazards of the war which will threaten the very life of many industries and possibly wreck many railroads that will not be granted a Government guaranty; (5) and to guarantee the larger railroads, annually sums that will be sufficient to pay all their operating expenses, taxes, interest, dividends, and surplus equal to that which they have earned during the years 1915, to 1917, inclusive, the most prosperous three-year period in their entire history.

It is also proposed, as stated by the author of the major portion of the bill, that the shippers, who will have their own burdens to carry during this perilous time, will be expected to make up any deficit of the Government in the guaranty made to the railroads.

We can snuff out the life of our boys in the trenches. We can wreck many industries. We can blast the business of the short line, the poor road. But when it comes to these rich, powerful corporations, the big companies, the great railroads, we herolcally announce that we are going to protect them from the effects of the war. And we do all this in the name of patriotism.

To the Burlington Railroad we say: "You now have a stock paying a regular dividend of 8 per cent. While the war lasts please accept this 22 per cent Government bond in lieu of that railroad stock. We not only guarantee you this 22 per cent annually on your stock, but we guarantee to return the principal in full in this manner: After the war is over we solemnly guarantee to give back your property in just as good a condition as we take it. This has all the essential elements of a 22 per cent Government bond. While the war lasts the Government guarantees the annual payment on the stock, and at the end of the war the Government guarantees to return the property in full. Here you have the payment of the principal and the interest. Not only do we guarantee to the Burlington annually that 22 per cent on its capital stock, but we also guarantee, with all the wealth and resources of the United States Government back of the pledge, that we shall pay all interest charges on all its funded and unfunded debt, maintain its properties, adequately and efficiently, and present to the Burlington Railroad an absolute Government credit, enabling the company to borrow all the money it may need. We tell the Burlington Railroad to go ahead, rehabilitate and improve its property out of the Public Treasury, while many other industries are being prostrated—and then, don't forget to take that little check annually for 22 per cent. We do all this in the name of patriotism.

It has been suggested that the payment of these large earnings to the railroads is necessary to facilitate the sale of Government bonds. How will it help the sale of 4 and 4½ per cent Government bonds to give a Government guaranty to railroad stocks amounting to 10 per cent annually? It is axiomatic that the higher you make the prevailing rate on other securities, the more difficult will it be to sell Government bonds at a lower rate. Where is there any reason for thinking a guaranty of 10 per cent instead of 6 or 7 per cent on railroad stocks will facilitate the sale of Government bonds? Why should the stockholder part with the 10 per cent security in order to purchase a 4½ per cent Government bond? The higher you make the earnings on railroad securities the more difficult will it be to persuade the railroad stockholder to part with his security. The logic involved in advocating a 10 per cent or 20 per cent return on railroad stock in order to help the sale of 4 or 5 per cent Government bonds is a charming exhibition of the usual statesmanlike stupidity which governs our public activities.

Our first task is to win the great war, but that can not be used to throw dust in our eyes on matters of justice as between the citizens of this country. There are some offenses that can not be committed with impunity, even though they be done in the name of patriotism. We are patriots first, last, and all the time; but we are not fools. There is such a thing as camouflage in the demagogic penegyrics of the politician who does everything, big and little, right or wrong, in the name of patriotism.

Mr. Thorne is president of the National Association of Railway Commissioners and considered one of our best-informed men upon the subject of transportation rates. His statement is worthy of consideration and credit.

Gasoline used in farm tractors sells for nearly three times the price it did a few years ago. With the Standard Oil attorneys pleading with tears in their eyes against price-fixing legislation and regulations, so that that charitable institution may fix its own prices, the prospects are that gasoline will go still higher. With results attained, with the unjustifiable mix-up, and as an honest and uniform enforcement of laws are always essential in bringing about results desired, especially so in time of war, it seems necessary to now suggest coordination and cooperation in our various departments in order to secure an adequate supply of food to maintain the confidence of the people and in order to more successfully prosecute the war.

What is the food situation?

According to the Statistical Abstract the average yield of the principal crops for the years 1911–1916 was as follows: Winter wheat, 542,000,000 bushels; spring wheat, 264,000,000 bushels; in all, 806,000,000 bushels; corn, 2,754,000,000 bushels; oats, 1,230,000,000 bushels; barley, 197,000,000 bushels; a total of 5,987,000,000 bushels. White potatoes, 363,000,000 bushels; sweet potatoes, 60,000,000 bushels; a total of 423,000,000 bushels. According to the Department of Agriculture's estimates the 1917 crop was, winter wheat, 417,000,000; spring wheat, 250,000,000; total, 668,000,000 bushels; corn, 3,248,000,000; oats, 1,533,000,000; barley, 204,000,000; total for the four principal cereals. 5,653,000,000. White potatoes, 462,000.000; sweet potatoes, 88.000,000; total, 550,000,000 bushels. According to these estimates we are long on potatoes 127,000,000 bushels and short 334,000,000 bushels on the cereals. In addition to that shortage consideration must be given to the inferiority of our 1917 corn crop. As everybody knows, very little of our 1917 corn was marketable; that frost-bitten, immature corn, containing 25 per cent of moisture, is of little value as compared with sound, dry, and matured corn. Grain men and others who have knowledge of the real condition estimate of the corn yield in point of food and feed value to be less than 2,000,000.000 bushels. If so, our 1917 corn crop was only about two-thirds of the average crop of 1911–1916. If so, we are short more than a billion bushels on corn and wheat. Inasmuch as our supply is practically the only available supply, evidently we shall need every bushel of grain, every pound of beef and fat that can be produced. Hence, in order to be on the safe side, we should not only encourage and stimulate production, but should conserve and guard against waste. If one would read Mr. Hoover's testimony before the Committee on Agriculture February 11 1918, he would find cause for the elimination of waste, for conservation, and increased production. On page 3 of the hearings attention is called to the food situation. Mr. Hoover states that—

In Austria at the present moment there are about 225,000,000 bushels of wheat—

But that a gradual shrinkage of shipping has today practically isolated the eastern source; that—to make the foodstuff accessible means a journey of 120 days to turn a cargo steamer around, as against a journey of 65 or 70 days to the Argentine or alternately 42 days to North America. The consequence is that the given ship has about one-third the carrying efficiency in going into the East as it has coming to the United States; and shipping, as you know, has reached such a degree of restriction that it is hopeless to carry the American Army, if we are going to devote such an amount of tonnage to the East as would be implied by bringing even part of the allied deficiencies from that side. The result is to throw a very much larger load on North America.

On page 5 Mr. Hoover calls attention to the slowing down of transportation in our own country. He states that he collected data from a large number of flour dealers, with the following results from 2,385 cars in transit: Under 15 days, 397; under 30 days, 261; under 45 days, 480; under 60 days, 448; under 75 days, 500; under 90 days, 220; over 90 days, 70 cars. The figures of the last column being between the days mentioned seriatim.

On page 6 Mr. Hoover states that the net result of the calculation is that our available supply of breadstuffs, considering our mill capacity, amounts on January 1 to about 470,000,000 bushels. If we allow all of the export demands, we shall part with about 160,000,000 bushels, or a balance of about 300,000,000 to 330,000,000 bushels, whereas our normal requirements for breadstuffs are 420,000,000 bushels of all kinds of grain; so that we have a deficiency of about 25 per cent in our breadstuffs.

The other essential foods are, first, beef. The allied position is one of extreme difficulty, because they have been largely securing Argentine beef · but with a gradual loss of refrigerating steamers they are forced, for that particular reason and others, onto our markets, and in order to maintain the supplies which they demand we will have to ship in beef products from the United States about 450,000,000 pounds of beef in the six months from January 1 to July 1.

He states:

As you are perhaps aware, in prewar conditions our six-monthly shipments were somewhere about 35,000,000 pounds. This is, therefore, an enormous increase. If we take the cattle in the country and make computations on the average percentage of slaughter and arrive at the problem as best we can as to our available supplies, we have practically but little beef surplus. Theoretically, on that calculation, we can show that there is in the six months 100,000,000 pounds of exportable beef, as against the demand for 450,000,000 pounds. That is the best position that we can arrive at. So that if we are to ship this quantity of beef to the allies we have to save from our consumption at least 350,000,000 pounds. That means that we must save of beef approximately 10 per cent of our consumption.

In pork products—we have to consider pork products and the vegetable oils as one item, because they have become now absolutely interchangeable through the use of lard substitutes. Our supplies of these commodities can therefore be blocked together, because if we run short on pork products we can substitute exports of vegetable-oil compounds, or if the pork products increase we can diminish vegetable-oil exports. Of these two items, the allies and the necessary neutral demands amount to 1,800,000,000 pounds for the period from January 1 to July 1, and we are deficient in our calculations of our minimum supplies of somewhere from 800,000,000 to 1,000,000,000 pounds of being able to ship those quantities without reduction in our consumption, or the need of reducing our consumption 12 to 15 per cent. On the dairy products I have not gone into it, because in this desperate situation of world food dairy products, again, can be substituted with the animal and vegetable fats, the pork, and vegetable oils. They are asking from us from 30,000,000 to 40,000,000 pounds of butter and cheese for the six months, January 1 to July 1, and we are shipping those to the extent that our stock in the country shows that we can do so.

On page 4 Mr. Hoover compares our average consumption with the English rations, which are practically the same as the French:

In butter, margarin, and table fats, generally, the English ration is 4 ounces weekly per capita. Our average normal consumption in the United States is 9 ounces. In meats the English ration is now 1 pound per week per capita, and it is limited to half that amount for children under 10 years, which, reduced to a population basis, means 0.9 pound per capita. That embraces beef, pork, mutton, and poultry. Our normal consumption in the United States is 3.1 pounds per week. In other words, this is a reduction to considerably less than one-third of our normal consumption. In breadstuffs, and that is all the cereals used for human consumption, the present ration is 4 pounds a week in England, and our normal consumption is 6 pounds a week.

* * * * * * *

On sugar the English and French rations are now both on the basis of 36 pounds per annum, which is 3 pounds per month, and our consumption, as you know, is about 84 pounds per annum, or about 7 pounds per month.

The English consumption in normal times is higher than ours. Those figures will indicate to you that they are in a very difficult situation, and one that I think requires all the strength that we can put into it lest the reduction in rations to the civil population should undermine the morale of the people.

As to the problem of conservation, Mr. Hoover states, on page 8:

From the national point of view the first point of conservation is an embargo on exports to all except essential points. We have had that in operation since the Food Administration was created. It has been the most rigid and drastic embargo on foodstuffs, except to the allies, and even certain commodities we have from time to time embargoed the allies. There are neutral countries, however, to which we must relax the embargo. * * * On the other hand, we have taken the attitude, as we are reducing our consumption of foodstuffs among our own people and among the allies, that none of the countries to whom we supply food may expect any larger ratios of consumption than we are endeavoring to impose upon our own people. * * * The second great point of conservation lies in the elimination of waste, and in this first point of the fact is the waste by manufacturing trades. * * *

Mr. Hoover states:

For instance, if the beef fats were trimmed at the packing houses, these fats would be available in large proportion for edible and industrial uses and would be practically a national saving.

Further on Mr. Hoover calls attention to the waste in the handling of potatoes; in the return of stale bread; to the consumption and waste in the household and public eating houses; the dumping of stale bread in the garbage barrel; that the essential step we need to take is the compulsory handling of the public places; that he is not in favor of any direct compulsion on the household, and believes that we can get much better results on the voluntary basis than with a background law. On page 10 Mr. Hoover calls attention to the shortage of shipments to the allies during December, January, and February from various quarters; that we must increase our flour shipments in March and April beyond our normal; that we can only meet that demand by reducing the amount of domestic milling, and for that reason he has voluntarily arranged with millers to mill 70 per cent only of their usual domestic supply and to increase by 30 per cent of the supply to the allies; and followed that with a rule to the wholesalers that they are not to buy more than 70 per cent of what they bought in the same period last year and to sell to the retailers not more than 70 per cent. Concluding with the statement that "with the prospect and hope we have of next year's crop we may be able to take off all repression on breadstuffs of all kinds. Therefore there is not occasion for our laying a foundation of bureaucracy here intended to carry out a rationing system or anything of the kind." Mr. Hoover in his testimony stated that the object of the proposed legislation for the control of distribution in some form and the control of public eating places, then considered one of importance, was that in the distribution he did not believe it necessary to carry it to the consumer himself by rationing, but to carry it through a control of the trades. According to Mr.

Hoover's statement there can be no question as to the urgent need of increased production of food and as to our duty in the matter. Evidently we can not expedite the triumphant termination of this war by permitting profiteering indulged in by many, by providing for unnecessary berths in the public crib at the expense of others, by playing politics, or by calling each other by pet names, nor by denominating a certain class as disloyal. No; if we are to aid in the successful prosecution of this war, it will be well to scrutinize every item of appropriation, to guard the Public Treasury and the best interests of all, so as to encourage and maintain the full confidence of all of our people, to heed Billy Sunday's admonition, "It is up to us to do something besides sit in the grandstand and yell." And also to follow the suggestion of our distinguished ex-President, Col. Roosevelt, "We must shun equally the mere selfish egotist and the mere well-meaning fool." And if you will pardon me from diverting from my line of discussion, I desire to add: Rather than to brand certain ones or certain classes and creeds as disloyal, every individual should be given his just dues, as suggested by our President. I read from the Washington Times of April 29, 1918:

PRESIDENT REASSURES GERMANS IN AMERICA.

UNION HILL, N. J., April 29.

At a meeting of Hudson County Germans held here last night a letter from President Wilson was read in which he expressed regret that "suspicion should be attached to those who do not deserve it."

The letter was read in connection with a liberty-loan meeting.

"You may be sure," the letter said, "that I sympathize with you and shall cooperate in every effort to see to it that the loyal residents of the United States of German birth or descent are given genuine proof of the sincerity of our institutions."

We have in this country, as in every other country, disloyal and unworthy people, but that does not imply that because a few of a certain class or creed are disloyal and unworthy that all as a class are. For instance, a few days ago a young man of German descent from my district, wearing the Y. M. C. A. uniform, walked into my office—a young man of excellent bearing and unusual intelligence. He had come to Washington to be inducted into the Army, so that he could get into active service. When asked about his brothers and if any of them were in the service, the answer was that four of his brothers were in the Army, his sister a Red Cross nurse, and he would make the sixth one. Can it be possible that the father, mother, or five sons and the daughter now in active service in defense of our country are disloyal, and that they can be justly denominated as such because they belong to a class often questioned as such? True, a number of sons given to the service, or the number of dollars subscribed for liberty-loan bonds or in support of the Y. M. C. A. or the Red Cross, is not an absolute measure of patriotism; it is not the amount, it is the spirit and ability to give—no; the mite given by the poor widow expresses as much patriotism as a thousand given by the rich. It is not everyone who has five sons and a daughter to give; I have only one. He is in; he got in early, volunteering as a private. He is, I am sure, doing as every American father and mother would want their boy to do—throwing his mind, strength, heart, and soul into his action for the cause. Others have no sons or money to give, but they have sympathetic hearts and prayers to offer. All come in under the same spirit and are entitled to full membership. On the other hand, there are those who have money and sons who give neither money, blood, nor sympathy, and those who content themselves by boasting of their patriotism and in arrogating to themselves a corner on loyalty. It is unnecessary to say that they are not entitled to the same consideration as those who make sacrifices. In saying that, or anything that I may say, it is, of course, understood that no reflection is upon any Member of this or any other body. The true patriot, instead of boasting and criticizing, will give credit to every worthy and deserving patriotic citizen who has been contributing his share to the glory and grandeur of our country, who will gladly do his best, no matter in what position he is placed, and that it is he who will win the war.

I believe that every true patriotic citizen who truly has the best interests of our country at heart realizes that those characterized by Col. Roosevelt as selfish egotists and well-meaning fools are, instead of aiding the cause, doing it harm. No; rather than to advertise to the world and the enemy the questioning of the loyalty of a large portion of our population and thus dividing our people it would be better for those to exhibit fortitude, born of greater courage and more lofty ideals, to cooperate, put forth their best efforts, unite, urge, and inspire patriotic acts, and to aid in every honorable way in the winning of the war. It is difficult to conceive that any American citizen, native or foreign born, with his accumulation, home, family, his country's safety and welfare at stake, can consistently, conscientiously, or prudently do otherwise. In conclusion I repeat, though this Nation, as every other nation, has unpatriotic, unworthy, and undeserving people, I can not but believe that our people, generally speaking, are patriotic, naturally so. In our Nation's progress in civilization, colonization, and Christianization, Uncle Sam has held out his hands and has received with open arms the cream of the world, which has been assimilated, crystallized, and amalgamated into a Nation of more than a hundred million of the most industrious, prosperous, intelligent, law-abiding, and I believe the most patriotic, people on earth. They have never failed to answer their country's call; to the contrary, they have always been found gallantly marching on to victory in times of peace and in times of war. Here they are in this land of equal opportunity; they are here because of their love for liberty and personal independence; here they have established their homes and reared their families; and here in America, with its grand and glorious government and its splendid and magnificent institutions, where we are not required to follow in the beaten paths of former ages, but where each and all are allowed to map out and achieve their own future destiny, where every walk of life is open to all from the humblest to the most exalted, where all our schools, from the most remote school district to the highest classrooms of our universities, are open to every resident child, naturally here lie all their hopes and future aspirations. Have they ever deserted their country's call? No; to their credit and well-deserved praise on many a blood-stained battle field have they proven their loyalty to the Stars and Stripes with their precious blood.

With the loyalty and achievements of the American people in the past, with their generous support of the Red Cross, the Y. M. C. A., and liberal subscriptions to liberty bonds, their ready and generous response to every call; yes, with the generous response of our young men, with the records of the past, it would seem that there need be no fear for the loyalty of our people or as to the conduct of our boys who have gone or may go to the firing line, who have willingly taken their lives in their hands, willing to lay them upon their country's altar as a sacrifice defending it. No; rest assured, wherever our boys may go, whomsoever they may encounter, they will acquit themselves like men, as their fathers and grandfathers did some 50 years ago, who now part with their sons and grandsons, for whom they did such valiant service. So, rather than to boast or criticize, it would be better for everyone to put his shoulder to the wheel and demonstrate to the world that we are a united and loyal people, that all take a just and pardonable pride in our country's growth and greatness, in the fact that we are living in this age of marvelous expansion, and that we have been moving forward at such a mighty pace that all feel, no matter what their political affiliation, creed, occupation, or prejudice may be, to strive to benefit and uphold our Government, to protect the weak, to relieve the distressed, to uplift humanity, to promote and perpetuate true greatness, to give honest and thoughtful consideration in securing the full benefit of our national resources for the development of mechanical appliances, the skill and genius of American labor, to see to it that nobody is imposed upon—that each and all are given adequate protection against imposition or invasion on the part of unscrupulous and dishonest interests in order that this conflict which we are engaged in may be brought to a speedy and triumphant conclusion—that we may have the fullest development of every worthy and legitimate enterprise.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time. [Applause.]

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BAER. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Dakota asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEE of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I am proud of having the privilege of supporting this splendid measure which my distinguished colleague [Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi] is the author of. This is the Candler bill. I wish the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] would lend me his ear. When he wants to criticize a bill he should not jump on a measure that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER] brings out here. Mr. CANDLER has ripe experience in legislation, his heart beats for the farmers at all times. When he produced from his brain this great bill he brought forth a measure that every man who is a friend of the farmers of this country should support in peace times and still more in war times.

The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] saw fit to stamp on this measure, and I was surprised to hear the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] cuss it out and talk about the great number of people who would have jobs under it. In other words, he just smeared all over this measure, and then contented himself with saying, "It has some good features in it."

I wish gentlemen could rise above this little petty idea about somebody getting a job. The gentleman from Mississippi who brought in this bill knew that there would have to be men and women employed to carry on this great work. Busy hands are needed just as they are needed when a farmer goes out and clears up land and puts several hundred acres under cultivation. He must have the proper number of hands to cultivate that land and make the necessary products in order to get a profit on his investment. The gentlemen who talk about too many employees being engaged in this work do not tell how many employees this bill carries. Any man who wants to be fair about it can take the bill itself and analyze it, and see the different sections of it, every one setting out in concise language what it is for and the exact amount of money that is to go with each provision. The statements made by the gentleman from Kansas and the gentleman from Iowa will not hold water when applied to this bill and to the report which the committee made, although one of those gentlemen is, I think, a member of the committee which made the report.

This measure, my friends, has one feature in it that I am vitally interested in, and that is section 5. My district has thousands of the best men and finest farmers in the world producing vegetables for northern and eastern markets. My work and aid in establishing on a practicable basis and extending the Bureau of Markets has been of great help to those farmers. I am strong for this fifth section of the bill. It carries $2,136,028 to further aid the Marketing Bureau. It has in it a provision to gather the necessary information for produce distribution. It has in it a provision for an enlarged service of news in that regard. It has a provision in it to prevent waste of food in storage and transit, or while being held for sale, and further to give advices concerning market needs, prices, and movements and the distribution of perishable products.

All of this is work that the Secretary of Agriculture has already been engaged in. This one feature of the bill ought to cause every man on this floor to support it. All of this truck that is produced in this country, vegetables of every kind, potatoes and fruits that are perishable, must be considered commercially as different from the staple food products, such as wheat and corn, because this produce, unless it is carried to the proper market in the proper way, will be a total loss, or at least a partial loss, and the public will be deprived of that necessary amount of food.

The truck farmers are entitled to this legislation and they are going to get it even if you gentlemen are endeavoring to kill this bill.

I am a friend to the farmers, and, like my colleague [Mr. CANDLER], I am going to fight for their rights on this floor and everywhere else.

There are many other provisions in this bill that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] could well have looked into. If he is a friend of the farmers of this country, why should he object to this $6,000,000 that is put aside as a revolving fund to buy seed for those destitute portions of the different States of this Union that have been stricken by drought or where there have been crop failures from any other cause? The seed is to be paid for in cash at actual cost to the Government. Yet the gentleman from Kansas objects to this bill, which carries this just and wise help to the farmers.

There is another feature in this measure that the gentleman from Kansas might do well to scrutinize. That is the provision to look after the insect pests and other things that do damage to farm products in this country.

There is another provision here carrying an appropriation in addition to the extension work of the live-stock business. While this war is on we can not be too careful to safeguard the growing of hogs, cattle, sheep, and goats. We can not be too careful either of the growing of horses and mules, because they are needed on every farm in this Republic, and there are many of them needed across the water to haul our cannon and for our Cavalry to ride, in order that this war may be carried on in the proper manner. Yet the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] said it was for nothing but for folks to sit around at quartered-oak desks and rock on carpets and for somebody to get a job. And my good old friend from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] made the complaint here that this bill carries a great deal of cost with it when we are engaged in a great war, and that we need every dollar for the war. I just want him to stop and consider for one minute. What is this little sum of $11,000,000 to hand out to the greatest class of producers in the world—the farmers of America—to carry on their farming operations properly to produce bread and meat for the soldiers to carry in their stomachs, in order to fight for our liberties, to fight your battles and my battles and the Nation's battles while we stay here at home? Yet he complains of the great cost when the committee that I am a member of has a bill before it carrying $12,000,000,000 for the Army. Yes; $11,000,000 is a small sum to devote to this great purpose of agriculture in assisting to carry on and win this war.

Mr. LAZARO. The gentleman has said that the soldiers need to have something in their stomachs.

Mr. QUIN. You can not win a battle on an empty stomach. Whenever an army marches, it marches on its stomach, and I want to tell you that is the way most of us walk. If we get hungry, there is going to be trouble. Every sensible man realizes that the American people are up against the task of feeding our 104,000,000 people at home, and these millions of soldiers that we are sending across the ocean fighting on the battle lines, and the sailors on our battleships, and the populations of France, Italy, Great Britain, and of some neutral countries across the sea. Yet the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] find fault that these few millions of dollars are to be handed out for the purpose of further carrying on the farming operations in this Republic, all the way from Maine down to the Rio Grande, from the Atlantic Ocean clear across to the Pacific waters. No particular section is favored. Every precinct of every county in the United States comes under the broad and wise provisions of this splendid measure. Yet these gentlemen would want the public to think that it is a great crime of thievery and of robbery to put upon the American people. In truth and in fact it is the most potential measure for the money involved that has been considered on the floor of this House during this entire session.

Who is there that believes the regular appropriation that the Agricultural Committee brought out here three months ago carried a dollar too much money in it? Then when the Secretary of Agriculture and the President of the United States call upon this Congress and say they want additional sums for specific work in farming operations, ought we to refuse them? No; we ought to grant them what they ask. [Applause.]

Mr. HAUGEN. I yield to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG].

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, the report of the advisory committee of the agricultural and live-stock producers, appointed by the Secretary of Agriculture and the Food Administrator, on page 28, contains a statement of the committee that the patriotic farmers of the United States have no desire for more than the cost of production and a fair profit; and approval is also given by the committee to the Executive order of the President, which reads as follows:

EXECUTIVE ORDER.

I hereby authorize and direct the United States Food Administrator in prescribing regulations for licensees under section 5 of the act of Congress approved August 10, 1917, entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense by encouraging the production, conserving the supply, and controlling the distribution of food products and fuel" and in enforcing and carrying into effect, so far as it relates to foods, feeds, and their derivative products, that part of section 5 which reads as follows:

"Whenever the President shall find that any storage charge, commission, profit, or practice of any licensee is unjust, or unreasonable, or discriminatory and unfair, or wasteful, and shall order such licensee within a reasonable time fixed in the order, to discontinue the same, unless such order, which shall recite the facts found, is revoked or suspended, such licensee shall, within the time prescribed in the order, discontinue such unjust, unreasonable, discriminatory, and unfair storage charge, commission, profit, or practice. The President may, in lieu of any such unjust, unreasonable, discriminatory, and unfair storage charge, commission, profit, or practice find what is a just, reasonable, nondiscriminatory, and fair storage charge, commission, profit, or practice, and in any proceeding brought in any court such order of the President shall be prima facie evidence;"

to find that a just, reasonable, and fair profit is the normal average profit which persons engaged in the same business and place obtained prior to July 1, 1914, under free competitive conditions; to indicate, if he shall see fit to do so, what margin over cost will return such a just, reasonable, and fair profit; and to take such legal steps as are authorized by said act to prohibit the taking of any greater profit.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
November 27, 1917.

The committee, according to the report, does insist that regulations of this type should be extended to all other trade industries of the country.

Mr. Chairman, an important statement was made to this House on April 18 by the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture [Mr. LEVER] upon this subject. We were discussing a fixed price for wheat when the following debate took place:

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, when the price of wheat was fixed at $2.20 for the year 1918, I think it was understood that there was to be further price fixing of the things that the farmers buy. I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture what progress has been made in respect to the fixing of the prices of farm machinery and other things that the farmers buy?

Mr. LEVER. I would prefer not to answer that question, because I can not give the gentleman those facts. I stated to the committee some time ago that the matter was under consideration, but the bill has not been prepared as yet.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. It has been considered by the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. LEVER. That is true.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. And probably by the administration?

Mr. LEVER. Yes. I can say this to the gentleman: Whatever position may be taken by the administration on the proposition of freezing out the profiteering on farm machinery and the like will make no difference to me, as far as I am concerned. I propose to see to it that a bill of that character is introduced and passed, if I can secure its passage. [Applause.]

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. I commend the gentleman. As I understand it, our Committee on Agriculture, as far as the chairman of that committee is concerned, will go ahead with legislation of this kind, whether we get a recommendation from the administration or not?

Mr. LEVER. That is true. I can make that assurance to the gentleman.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Chairman, I do not see on the floor just now the gentleman who made this very important pledge [Mr. LEVER]. I have great faith in him and was going to ask him what progress had been made with his bill. The people of the entire country are waiting anxiously for Congress to act in this direction. It vitally affects every man, woman, and child in the country, whether upon the farms or in the cities.

There is an item of the bill to which I wish to call attention for "market news service on live stock and meats." Under the regular appropriation service was given at Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, Kansas City, Mo., and Omaha, and under the emergency funds a market news service was given Fort Worth, Portland, Oreg., Lansaster, Pa., and St. Paul.

Now, when this matter was up before the committee after Mr. Brand, the director, had gone, I asked for some information, but no one seemed to have any accurate information as to what was done at the different places where this service was established. I was anxious to know what had been accomplished at St. Paul.

A few days afterwards Gen. A. P. Peake, of North Dakota, called at my office, and in conversation we got into this question of price fixing, and from that into profiteering, and he happened to mention that St. Paul was the cheapest market in the United States, in his judgment. Then I happened to remember that in the bill which we passed over a year ago provision was made for this market news service in St. Paul.

Whether it is on account of that particular service or for some other reason I do not know, but it is undoubtedly true that the market for meat in St. Paul is very much lower than it is here in Washington, so much lower that it can not be accounted for upon the ground of freight rates or any one of the usual excuses given for profiteering.

I sent for a copy of the St. Paul Dispatch when I expected this bill to come up early this month. At that time the current issue of the market edition was of May 3. Here in an advertisement of Schoch's I find these prices. They will be startling to the men in Washington who buy meat. Boiling beef, 17 cents a pound; rib roast, 22 cents a pound; pork butts, 25 cents a pound; pork steak, 27 cents a pound; picnic ham, 23 cents a pound; corned beef, 18 cents a pound; and other quotations for various meats running from 18 cents a pound up.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Are those retail or wholesale prices?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Retail prices of May 3, printed in the St. Paul Dispatch. I think the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] said in reference to the profiteering at the Capital, that if any Member of Congress got away from Washington with anything more than a sullied reputation the tradesmen at Washington felt that they had not done their full duty. [Laughter.]

Here is another advertisement. At the Broadway Meat Market they are advertising veal stew at 12 cents a pound. You can not get a soup bone here with all the meat scraped off for that. Veal shoulder, 15 cents a pound; leg veal, 17 cents a pound; pork liver, 7 cents a pound. Of course, somebody may say the extra cost is by reason of freight. These articles can be expressed from St. Paul to Washington and a great saving made.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Are prices paid to the farmers for these products given in the paper?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Not in this paper.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. How do they compare with the retail prices?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. I am not able to give the gentleman that information.

What I am trying to get at in this discussion is to see whether there is not some way to prevent profiteering after the products leave the farm. Here in the city of Washington the prices for meat are scandalous. There is not one here listening to the prices that I am quoting but what will admit that in Washington on some of the articles they are more than twice as much. We have paid as high as 65 cents per pound for bacon.

Here is another advertisement of the St. Paul Provision Co. They quote pork loin roast, 22 cents a pound; choice rib roasts, 17 cents a pound; beef pot roast, 15 cents a pound; fresh pork sparerib, 16 cents a pound. You all know what you are paying in Washington for meat. There is absolutely no reason on earth why there should be such a great difference between the meat market at St. Paul and Washington, D. C.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Can not the gentleman give the corresponding prices here?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. I can not give advertised prices of the same date here, because the evening newspapers did not carry any such advertisements upon that date. May 3. The meat-market people do little advertising here, evidently because they are ashamed of their prices. I have looked through several copies of the Times, Star, and Post without finding any. But the gentleman lives here, and he knows what we must pay for meats: Ham, 40 to 60 cents per pound; boiling beef, 35 to 40 cents per pound; corned beef, 35 cents per pound; sausage, 35 cents per pound; dried beef, 50 cents per pound; pot roast, 40 to 45 cents per pound; porterhouse steak, 50 to 55 cents; sirloin steak, 45 to 50 cents per pound; mutton, 40 to 45 cents per pound; Premium bacon, 65 cents per pound.

If anyone questions the accuracy of these prices, it is all the more reason why we should have a market news service in Washington.

While there were no meat advertisements in the Washington papers of May 3, I found the following in one of the city papers:

MARKET ADVENT OF HEN CAUSES NO CUT IN PRICE.

While the supply of poultry on the wholesale market this morning looked large, and though supplies of spring vegetables coming from the southern gardens are increasing, prices to-day show but few changes from those of early in the week.

In the poultry market, in spite of the raising a week ahead of time of the embargo on the sale of hens, the coming of the hen on the market has caused but little lowering in prices on anything but roosters, and they are selling high. This morning winter chickens advanced 3 cents on the less desirable grades and 2 cents on choice, and are selling to-day at 68 to 70 cents.

But let us look again at the St. Paul prices. The St. Paul Provision Co. quotes bacon at 28 cents a pound, pork shoulder roast at 19 cents a pound, choice veal roast at 16 cents a pound. If any of you gentlemen can buy anywhere in Washington any of these articles for twice the money that I have mentioned, I would like to have you stand up. Here is another advertisement of the People's Market. They quote sugar-cured picnic ham at 21 cents a pound, Cormell's midget bacon at 27 cents a pound, fresh pig liver at 5 cents a pound. When Mrs. Young was in the market yesterday she noticed that the butcher was taking off every ounce of meat from what they used to call the soup bone, scraped it bare; and not only that, but took the marrow out of the inside of it, and then sold it as a soup bone, and as near as I can recollect, at about the price at which they are selling these cheaper real meats up in St. Paul. These things are mighty important to both farmers and consumers. The exorbitant prices charged impoverish the consumers and, unfortunately, make them believe that the farmers are robbing them. A very little investigation will show that this is not true. The middlemen are the offenders, and if we could pass a law to put them behind the bars, perhaps we could put a stop to profiteering. Here is another advertisement: McQuaid, of St. Paul, offers a choice pot roast at 15 cents a pound; lean boiling beef at 15 cents a pound; prime rib roast, 18 cents a pound; sirloin steak at 18 cents a pound; and tenderloin shoulder steak at 18 cents a pound; sugar-cured hams at 29 cents a pound.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. I shall be glad to yield to the gentleman, Farmer MADDEN, who owns the finest grain and stock farm in Illinois.

Mr. MADDEN. Why do we not have introduced this much-boasted marketing facility which, it is said, the astute Secretary of Agriculture has been inaugurating in the country in order to accommodate the people in other sections of the country with the low prices the gentleman is quoting from St. Paul? If I understand the situation, the claim for the enactment of a law such as is now pending is that it affords the Secretary of Agriculture the opportunity to put his scientific knowledge of marketing into effect, so that you and I and others all over the United States who are being overcharged may be benefited by lower prices of commodities.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. My belief is that we ought to go after the profiteers by general legislation, such as is proposed by Mr. LEVER; but in this bill before us now I think there is some chance of helping the poor people of Washington and at the same time affording an opportunity to study the marketing problem at close range. When we reach the item for market-news service, I hope there will not be serious objection to including an increase sufficient to take care of Washington.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Dakota has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as this bill is so important, carrying about $18,000,000, increasing the number of employees of the Government about 11,000, who will have nothing much to do except to run campaigns between now and the end of the next election period, I think that we ought to have a larger attendance to listen to the statements that are being made with respect to the value of the measure. There are only about 12 Members present out of the 435, and with this vast expenditure of money we should have a quorum. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will not insist upon it, but I want to say that there are many more Members present than the gentleman counted a moment ago. I see a larger number than that; but in view of the fact that this is an important bill and it is necessary to have a larger attendance, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia, the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 11945 and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. JOHNSON of Washington, for one week.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the distinguished gentleman having in charge the measure which has been under consideration in Committee of the Whole, if the time remaining for general debate under the provisions of the rule adopted is, in his judgment, sufficient to take care of the demands of gentlemen who desire to be heard in general debate on this measure on his side, and, if he has any information, on the minority side?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, my information is that it will be sufficient to accommodate gentlemen who desire to speak.

Mr. WALSH. So that to-morrow we will get to a consideration of the bill under the five-minute rule?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. My intention is to consider the bill under the five-minute rule immediately upon the expiration of the general debate provided in the rule.

Mr. WALSH. I think it will be a great relief to Members to get that information.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Speaker does the gentleman expect to pass this measure to-morrow?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I hope to be able to do so, and I hope I shall have the gentleman's cooperation in that.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman ask that question for the purpose of inviting those who are not present to stay away?

ADJOURNMENT.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 9864) to amend section 111 of the Judicial Code in respect to the western district of Virginia, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. KELLOGG:

A bill (S. 4554) for the sale of isolated tracts of the public domain in Minnesota; and

A bill (S. 4555) to validate certain public-land entries; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. WILLIAMS:

Mr. CUMMINS submitted an amendment providing that the dental officers authorized for service in the Naval Reserve Force and in the Naval Dental Corps shall be entitled to equal grades of rank with the dental officers authorized for service in the respective corresponding branches of the Army, and so forth, intended to be proposed by him to the Naval appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, owing to the sickness of one of my daughters, I feel compelled to ask for an indefinite leave of absence from the Senate, and I ask that my announcement to that effect may stand until further notice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, an indefinite leave of absence is granted to the senior Senator from Mississippi.

PRISON-MADE GOODS.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, a day or two ago the bill (H. R. 8938) to equip the United States Penitentiary, Atlanta, Ga., for the manufacture of supplies for the use of the Government, for the compensation of prisoners for their labor, and for other purposes, was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor. The bill deals so largely with matters pertaining to the Department of Justice that, after looking into it more carefully than the title of the bill would indicate, I am authorized by the Committee on Education and Labor to ask that the committee be discharged and that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia asks that the Committee on Education and Labor be discharged from the consideration of House bill 8938 and that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

STATUE OF FREDERICK THE GREAT.

Mr. GALLINGER. A few days ago I offered a resolution (S. Res. 245), and it was objected to and went over. I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

PURCHASE OF ARLINGTON HOTEL SITE.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I ask permission to insert in the RECORD a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, explaining the purchase of the Arlington Hotel site. The question was raised in the Senate the other day and I sought the information.

The Secretary has shown his usual foresight in providing for the needs of the Government. The real estate value is not excessive, and the buildings he contracts for, within the total cost, could not be duplicated for less to-day. He makes a satisfactory showing and answers the criticisms made on the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. What was the request? Let us have order in the Chamber so that the Senator may be heard.

Mr. PHELAN. The other day the question was raised as to the cost of the Arlington Hotel site. I sought information from the Secretary of the Treasury, and I have from him a letter fully explaining the basis of cost, which I know is of very great interest to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. I will say that this matter has been before the committee, and the property has been purchased already, and no matter what the Senate think or what they do it is a closed chapter. Of course, if the Senator wants to take that space in the RECORD, if he thinks any good can come from the discussion of a closed case, I am not going to object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, permission is granted.

The letter is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, May 13, 1918.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have your letter of the 2d instant regarding the Arlington property and am glad to write you fully on the subject.

The work of the Treasury Department has assumed such proportions that the question of suitable quarters to accommodate the largely increased force required in the transaction of the public business and to care for the valuable records of the department has become a serious problem.

Two bureaus of the department alone—the War-Risk Insurance and Internal Revenue—require 500,000 square feet, and have been forced, owing to lack of suitable buildings, into congested quarters in a large number of rented buildings scattered all over the city, which has greatly interfered with the efficiency of the bureaus. At present the War-Risk Insurance Bureau is being administered in 11 different buildings in Washington, and the Internal Revenue Bureau in 10 different buildings. This is deplorable from the administrative standpoint, but even a more serious feature is the fact that the invaluable and irreplaceable records of these two bureaus are now stored in nonfireproof buildings and might be destroyed, to say nothing of the possibility of loss of human life because of the overcrowded conditions under which the employees are forced to work.

The War-Risk Insurance Bureau is charged with the very important war duty of collecting and recording the data upon which allotments and allowances are paid to the dependents of our soldiers and sailors and of making the necessary awards, and writing and mailing the monthly checks for their payment. It is also charged with the duty of passing upon and paying compensation claims, representing more than 2,000,000 risks, arising from the death or disability of our soldiers and sailors, and of receiving and recording applications for insurance and passing upon and paying claims arising from death or disability of those who have taken out insurance. Up to date more than 1,900,000 of these applicantions have been received, representing more than $16,000,000,000 of insurance, a larger amount than the total insurance in force upon the books of the 20 largest life insurance companies in the world combined.

It is obvious that promptness and accuracy in the performance of all of this work is essentially important, and also that it is of the highest importance that steps be taken that nothing be left undone to preserve these records from every possible hazard of loss.

At present 3,700 regular employees of this bureau are scattered in various parts of the city, none of the buildings being adapted to the important requirements of the work, and most of them are highly combustible.

This separation of the forces of the bureau has constituted the chief obstacle to its efficiency, and has necessarily resulted in delays and inaccuracies, especially in regrettable delays in replying to thousands of letters received daily making inquiries regarding matters pertaining to the work of the bureau. No one department or section of this bureau can stand alone; records and papers have to be moved by truck or messenger from one building to another; hundreds of thousands of records and cards have to be transported almost daily between the accounts section in the Carroll Institute to the disbursing office, Fourteenth and E Streets; thousands of pieces of correspondence have to be transported daily between each and every one of the 11 different buildings in which the bureau is forced to operate for lack of a suitable fireproof building.

Largely similar conditions obtain with respect to the Internal Revenue Bureau, the important work of which is now compelled to be scattered in 10 buildings, in addition to quarters which it occupies in the Treasury Building.

The activities of these two bureaus are equaled in a large measure by other bureaus of the Treasury which administer the liberty-bond issue. It is impossible to describe the difficulties under which the Treasury is now laboring in its effort not only to raise essential money through the sale of liberty bonds, but to find room for the employees to work in order to turn these bonds out promptly and deliver them to purchasers throughout the country. The corridors of the Treasury Building, where light and ventilation are poor, must be used from time to time for this service. It is an injustice to the employees and a reproach to the Government.

The Railroad Administration will require a large amount of space in order to efficiently manage the railroads of the United States now in the possession and control of the Government. The Interstate Commerce Commission has been good enough to give me as much space in their building as could be spared, but it is wholly insufficient. The Railroad Administration is seriously hampered even now for want of space, and that condition will grow more acute each day.

The War Finance Corporation, just being organized, must have adequate space in which to do the important work assigned to it. This work will constantly increase with the progress of the war, and room must be provided for that purpose.

The responsibilities resting upon the Secretary of the Treasury are numerous and important, and it adds enormously to his burdens if the agencies under his control are unnecessarily scattered. Efficiency of administration will be greatly promoted by the consolidation, as far as practicable, of these great and responsible activities.

It will be evident from this that the providing of adequate quarters for all these activities is a war emergency of the most serious character, and it appeared much more economical and much more advantageous to secure the Arlington property and complete the building than to erect temporary combustible structures, which would present a large loss in the end and be wholly unsatisfactory for the purpose in view. The erection of a permanent building on some other site would have involved great delay and the loss of very valuable time through the razing of standing buildings and the beginning of operations. Moreover, the activities of the Treasury Department, even after the restoration of peace, will necessitate the use of the Arlington Building for a long period of time, if not permanently.

I note the question is asked why the Treasury Annex at the corner of Pennsylvania Avenue and Madison Place will not be sufficient. The construction of that building has commenced and the building will be completed in February of next year, but it will contain less than 100,000 square feet of office space, and will, therefore, not accommodate one-half of the Internal-Revenue Bureau, which alone requires 250,000 square feet.

The fact is that without the prospect of having the Arlington Building soon the situation would be exceedingly critical. The price paid for the property is reasonable, and if it were not for the fact that a considerable number of subcontracts have been let for the main building and much material fabricated the cost would be considerably greater—according to an estimate made some time ago approximately $4,306,000, including site.

At the time the Arlington Building (Inc.) made the offer to the Treasury Department the three stories below ground were completed, the steelwork of the superstructure up to the second story, 80 per cent of the rest of the steelwork fabricated, and the cutting of stone for the facing of the building under way. The company at that time submitted its subcontracts, as far as made, for examination to the Office of the Supervising Architect, which regarded them as reasonable.

Based on these data, an estimate was prepared in that office which showed a reasonable price for the complete building to be $3,122,350. This included $811,502 for an addition and $118,751 for changes required by the Treasury Department, viz, improvement in design and strengthening of the floor construction so as to make it suitable for Treasury use, and changes incidental thereto. To this must be added $1,000,000 for the site, making a total of $4,122,350. Tabulated, the figures stand as follows:

Main building	$2,192,097
Changes	118,751
Addition to the building	811,502
Site	1,000,000
Total	4,122,350

This corresponds very closely with the proposal, which is for $4,119,072. This gives a rate per cubic foot of slightly over 40 cents. That this is a reasonable rate is shown by the contract recently let for the Treasury Annex.

The bids for that building in limestone ranged from $1,145,603 to $1,397,565. After making some changes, the contract for the building, exclusive of tunnel, was let for $1,079,952. Certain additional items will bring the cost up to approximately $1,140,000.

Both the Arlington Building and the Treasury Annex are faced with limestone, but the treatment of the latter is more elaborate, representing approximately $140,000 in value. After deducting this, the two buildings form a reasonable basis of comparison. The Treasury Annex contains 2,280,000 cubic feet, and would cost, on the basis just explained, $1,000,000. The Arlington Building contains 7,690,000 cubic feet and cost $3,119,072. The figures for both buildings are exclusive of cost of the site. The Treasury Annex gives a rate per cubic foot of 44⅓ cents and the Arlington Building 40½ cents; or differently expressed, the cost of the Arlington Building, computed at the rate of 44⅓ cents, would be $3,372,800, which is $253,728 more than the contract price. Of course, this figure is merely an approximation, but it shows that if competitive bids for the Arlington Building were taken now the lowest bid would be considerably above the actual contract price. The lower price paid for the Arlington Building is accounted for by the fact that for the portion of the building now completed a lower labor rate was paid than is now obtainable, and the further fact that a considerable amount of material is already fabricated. Since the purchase of the building by the Government the cost of ordinary labor has advanced from 30 to 40 cents an hour, or an increase of 33⅓ per cent.

As already stated, the proposal of the Arlington Building (Inc.) for the main building, addition thereto, and site is $4,119,072, but in order to have a fund for contingencies and miscellaneous expenses, such as the installation of electric connections for addressographs and other electrically operated machines, for shades, awnings, etc., the Treasury Department requested an appropriation of $4,200,000, which leaves a balance to be used by the Treasury Department of $80,928.

There seems to be an impression that the department is acquiring only the building originally contemplated by the Arlington Building (Inc.). As a matter of fact, it is acquiring two buildings, viz, the main building, which is now in course of construction, and an addition thereto on I Street, which has not yet been commenced. The latter contains an area approximately one-third that of the main building, and the two buildings combined cover the whole lot of 1⅓ acres, leaving only such areas not built upon as are necessary for proper light and ventilation.

The site, comprising lots 24 and 25 and containing 1⅓ acres, or 58,080 square feet, with the Arlington Hotel Building thereon, was sold in 1912, as ascertained from the District assessor, for $1,400,000. On January 29, 1914, the site was sold under forced sale for $850,000. This sale, however, was not consummated and at an auction sale a week later, viz, on February 5, 1914, the site was sold to the Arlington Building (Inc.) for $847,000. The expenses connected with the sale brought the price up to $858,000.

When the department was first considering the acquisition of the property in December, 1917, and January, 1918, it obtained three appraisals of the site by real estate experts, one of whom was the District assessor. The three valuations were as follows:

First	$1,257,745
Second, district assessor	1,042,821
Third, $900,000 to $950,000, average	925,000

The average of the three valuations is $1,075,188.

After obtaining these valuations, the department felt justified in allowing $1,000,000 as the value of the site.

The main building covers approximately 1 acre and is, in all, 14 stories in height, 3 of which are below grade. The addition covers the remaining one-third acre of the site and corresponds in the number of stories and construction to the main building. The building has a frontage of 70 feet on H Street, 351 feet on Vermont Avenue, and 315 feet on I Street. The three stories below grade have floors designed for a safe load of 300 pounds per square foot and are peculiarly adapted for storing the files of the War-Risk Insurance and Internal-Revenue Bureaus.

The floors of the 11 stories of the superstructure are designed to carry a live load of 100 pounds per square foot for offices and 120 pounds for corridors. The building has a total floor area of 608,000 square feet, of which 471,000 square feet is available for offices. This is about twice the office space contained in the Treasury Department Building.

The impression that the building as designed was unsafe is erroneous.

At this time it is not possible to rent office space of any considerable areas; but when obtainable in small areas, $1.50 per square foot is not an unusual price. In ordinary times 90 cents per square foot is the usual price for space in a modern office building in a good location, and half that amount for filing space. In the following tabulated comparison these figures have been used, and on this basis show an annual saving of $73,390:

Interest on cost of investment, 4 per cent of $4,200,000	$168,000
Depreciation and repairs, 2½ per cent on $3,200,000	80,000
Operation, 27 cents per square foot gross floor area	164,160
	412,160
Rental charges, including operating expenses, for a building of similar construction and equally well located would not be less than—
471,000 square feet gross area of superstructure, at 90 cents per square foot	423,900
137,000 square feet for files and storage, at 45 cents per square foot	61,650
	485,550
Deduct	412,160
Annual saving	73,390

Applying the rental basis to all the available space in the Arlington Building, the rate is 67½ cents per square foot.

If you desire any additional information, I shall be glad to furnish it.

With best wishes, I am, sincerely, yours,

W. G. MCADOO,
Secretary.

Hon. JAMES D. PHELAN,
United States Senate.

I inclose copy of my letter to the President on the subject of the Arlington Building, dated March 22, 1918.

MARCH 22, 1918.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: You were good enough to approve on February 12 an estimate which was promptly submitted to the Congress for the purchase by the Treasury Department of the Arlington Building, now under construction, involving a cost, including the proposed annex to it and such changes and modifications as will make it suitable for Treasury needs, of $4,200,000. A bill was promptly introduced in the House, was reported favorably by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and is now pending. I am hopeful of early action by the House, but the calendar is somewhat crowded with other important matters, and I do not know when this bill will be reached, and even after it has passed the House it must pass the Senate. How much time this will require I do not know. I am sure that there is every disposition on the part of the House and the Senate to expedite consideration of this matter, but at best it will take considerable time.

The situation in the Treasury Department is so exigent that I am deeply concerned about its ability to perform the vital work now required of it in the public interest unless immediate measures are taken to provide the amount of office space imperatively demanded. It is not only a question of amount of space, but also of the time within which it can be obtained. It is equally important that this space should be as far as practicable under one roof in order that efficiency and speed in the administration of important functions of the department may be secured. Not alone that, but the building should be fireproof, in order that invaluable records, especially those in connection with the administration of the War-Risk Insurance and Internal-Revenue Bureaus, may not be imperiled by fire.

The Arlington Building is partly constructed. It will have sufficient space to fill the imperative needs of the Treasury, and if taken hold of immediately by the Government, can be pushed to prompt completion. If taken hold of now, it can also be constructed with reference to the Treasury's particular requirements, and in addition to that the exterior treatment of the building can be greatly improved without large additional cost, so as to make it far more attractive architecturally than the building as now designed.

As you know, the War-Risk Insurance Bureau is now taking care of the dependent families of our soldiers and sailors who are at the front, is administering over $12,000,000,000 of insurance on the lives of our soldiers and sailors, and is performing the most prodigious task of its kind ever undertaken by any Government. This work is rapidly increasing, and of necessity must continue to increase with the growing list of killed and wounded and with the enlargement of the Army and Navy which must come with the progress of the war. The Internal Revenue Bureau must continue to grow as the war proceeds in order to administer successfully the additional duties which will have to be imposed upon it. These two activities alone require more than 500,000 square feet of space in addition to the 96,000 square feet to be provided by the Treasury Annex soon to be erected on the corner of Pennsylvania Avenue and Madison Place. At present the War-Risk Insurance Bureau is being administered in eight different buildings in Washington, the Internal Revenue in 10 different buildings. The inefficiency, delay, and unnecessary expense resulting from this scattering of the activities of these important bureaus are greater than I can describe. It is extremely hurtful to the public interest. In fact, it works an injustice to the dependents of our soldiers and sailors and to our soldiers and sailors themselves, when the functions of the War-Risk Bureau are made inefficient because of inadequate office space in which to do the necessary work.

Not the least serious feature of this situation is the fact that the invaluable and irreplaceable records of the War-Risk Insurance Bureau and of the Internal Revenue Bureau are now in considerable part stored in nonfireproof buildings and might be destroyed, to say nothing of the possibilities of loss of human life from overcrowding in such buildings and the insanitary conditions under which the employees are now forced to work.

The activities of these two important bureaus are equaled in large measure by other bureaus of the Treasury which administer the liberty-bond issues. It is impossible to describe the difficulties under which the Treasury is now laboring in its effort not only to raise essential money through the sale of liberty bonds, but to find room for the employees to work in order to turn these bonds out promptly and deliver them to purchasers throughout the country. The corridors of the Treasury Building, where light and ventilation are poor, must be used from time to time for this service. It is an injustice to the employees and a reproach to the Government.

The railroad administration will require a large amount of space in order to efficiently manage the railroads of the United States now in the possession and control of the Government. The Interstate Commerce Commission has been good enough to give me as much space in their building as could be spared, but it is wholly insufficient. The railroad administration is seriously hampered even now for want of space, and that condition will grow more acute each day.

The War Finance Corporation, which will spring into existence as soon as the pending law is enacted and receives your approval, must have adequate space in which to do the important work assigned to it. This work will constantly increase with the progress of the war, and room must be provided for that purpose.

The responsibilities resting upon the Secretary of the Treasury are so numerous and important that it adds enormously to his burdens if the agencies under his control are unnecessarily scattered. Efficiency of administration will be greatly promoted by the consolidation, as far as practicable, of these great and responsible activities.

This is a war emergency of the most serious character. I can not overstate it. Every day of delay is aggravating the problem and imperiling the public interest. In these circumstances I am moved to beg you to allot to the Treasury $4,200,000 out of the war emergency fund in your control, with authority to expend so much of it as may be necessary in the purchase of the Arlington property and the completion of the building now under construction and in the erection of the proposed annex thereto. This will enable the Treasury to get back of the contractor and expedite the work greatly. If the Treasury can take possession of this property immediately, it will be possible to complete a large part of the building and have it ready for occupancy in the early fall.

If you will grant this request, the war emergency fund may be reimbursed when the Congress passes the pending bill for the purchase of the Arlington property. I am most reluctant to make this request, but the situation is so exigent that I would be derelict in my duty if I did not do so.

I inclose a list of the 18 different buildings, together with a map, upon which is indicated their location in the city of Washington, from which you can see how widely the business of these two bureaus of the Treasury is now scattered.

It is far more economical and far more advantageous to the Government to buy the Arlington property and complete the building than to erect temporary combustible structures, which would represent a large loss in the end and be wholly unsatisfactory for the purposes in view. Moreover, the activities of the Treasury Department, even after the restoration of peace, will necessitate the use of the Arlington Building for a long period of time, if not permanently.

There is no other opportunity in Washington which will meet the Treasury's imperative need within a reasonable time, or at all, so far as I have been able to discover.

With the earnest hope that this request may receive your prompt and favorable consideration, I am,

Faithfully, yours, W. G. McADOO.

The PRESIDENT,
The White House.

Inclosure.

MAY 14, 1918.

NOTE.—When this letter was written the War-Risk Insurance and the Internal-Revenue Bureaus occupied 18 buildings; they now occupy 21.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 9864. An act to amend section 111 of the Judicial Code in respect to the western district of Virginia was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10069) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending amendment is the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT]. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add a new section at the end of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 10. That no new work of improvement appropriated for in this act, involving an expenditure during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, of more than $100,000, shall be undertaken until the Secretary of the Treasury shall first certify to the Secretary of War that the condition of the Treasury is such that such expenditure can be made without injury to the war needs of the Government: Provided, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to any expenditure heretofore specifically recommended by the Secretary of War as a war emergency.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I desire to say just a word in reply to the remarks made by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] yesterday in opposing this amendment. He began by stating that the amendment would apply to only two new projects—the Crescent City Harbor and Los Angeles. I am sure there is no Senator who is more familiar with the phraseology of river and harbor matters than is the Senator from Louisiana. There is a vast difference between the definition of a new project and new work. It is so recognized in all the reports of the Board of Engineers. A project is a scheme or plan that has been adopted by Congress. New work is an improvement of any particular unit of construction in that project, in continuation of it.

A little later, however, the distinguished Senator from Louisiana, notwithstanding the statement he first made that it would be limited to only two projects, made the statement that it would affect the Ohio River, a $5,000,000 item, and he enumerated several large items that the amendment would affect, utterly inconsistent with the statement first made by him.

The fact is that the amendment I have proposed would not affect in the least degree either of the items first mentioned by the Senator. It would not affect the Crescent City item, because that is an appropriation not out of the Treasury but the expenditure of $200,000 contributed by the locality itself, and it is merely an authorization to expend that money in the improvement of the harbor.

In the case of the Los Angeles project my amendment does not in the least affect it, because there is a proviso to the pending amendment that it shall not apply to any work of construction specifically recommended by the Secretary of War as a war emergency, and the Los Angeles item has been recommended by the Engineer Department and by the Secretary of War as a war emergency.

Now, what does the pending amendment do? Let me restate it. It cuts nothing out of the bill. It simply provides that as to new work not necessary in the prosecution of the war this expenditure shall not be made until the Secretary of the Treasury shall first certify that the condition of the Treasury is such that the expenditure can be made without injury to the war needs of the Government.

I was very much surprised, Mr. President, that this amendment was not accepted in the committee. I am more surprised that there is any opposition to it upon the floor, for it resolves itself merely into this proposition, that if as the months go by the condition of the Treasury is such that we need every dollar that is in it for securing aeroplanes, ordnance, and equipment for our soldiers, the money shall be first used for that purpose. If there is money enough in the Treasury for both purposes, my amendment will not in the least degree retard the carrying on of the work. It simply gives priority to the work necessary to the prosecution of the war, and that is all.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I had intended to offer an amendment somewhat along the line of the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin, an amendment that I have offered to every river and harbor bill as it has been pursuing its devious course in this body, but the amendment has been enthusiastically rejected. I ask to have the Secretary read this amendment, and then I desire to comment just a moment upon the two amendments. I shall probably not offer the amendment, but shall support the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. Add a new section, as follows:

SEC. 10. That no appropriation contained in this bill shall be available if the President of the United States, on or before September 1, 1918, shall file a statement with the Secretary of War that such particular project for which said appropriation is made is not one of public necessity during the period of the war.

Mr. KENYON. I think the amendment would accomplish practically the same result as the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin. Hence I support his amendment.

I thought, Mr. President, when this bill was presented to the Senate that the committee were to be congratulated in these meatless days and wheatless days in having constructed a porkless river and harbor bill. I believe it is the best river and harbor bill that we have had at least since I have been in the Senate. It is pruned down pretty closely but has many objectionable features.

I observed in looking over the bill during the discussion of yesterday that a number of the same old fragrant enterprises are still in the bill.

It does seem to me that in these days, as the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] has said, when we are trying to practice economy we ought to be able to cut out these old projects that serve no useful purpose, but which arouse criticism and antagonism to all waterway improvements. While I have been criticized very severely for trying to impede waterway improvement, that criticism has not been true. These old projects are tied up with good projects, and then we are told that we must not oppose the bill, because if we do we are destroying the great waterways of commerce.

This bill carries appropriations for the maintenance of such great national institutions as Fishing Creek, Contentia, Swift, and Smiths Creeks, the Altamaha, the raging Little Pee Dee, the Great Pee Dee, the Kissimmee, the Caloosahatchee, and the Withlacooche, and all the other little couchee-couchees that are found all through the bill; things that ought to be gotten rid of in these times of serious strain upon our National Treasury. I do not know why we can not get rid of them; I do not know why we have to keep on every year appropriating for these little streams that have not enough water in them to wash a newborn babe.

The project for the navy yard at Charleston Harbor, of course, is a meritorious one, because the navy yard ought to be connected with the sea, and this seems to be a project to connect the Charleston Navy Yard, or the dry dock, when we shall have appropriated for that in another bill, with the sea, maintaining the same old policy of distributing navy yards and Army posts where they will do some particular good along certain lines.

I wondered, when the Senator from Wisconsin was talking yesterday, about when we are out asking the people to buy liberty bonds and war-savings stamps, how much enthusiasm could be aroused by picturing to them that we need some sales of liberty bonds to improve Swifts Creek and Smiths Creek and the Kissimmee, and all of these projects, or how many war-savings stamps could be sold on the theory that they would help to maintain these great channels of commerce.

I am not going to discuss this bill, Mr. President. It is hard to discuss this river and harbor bill and at the same time to maintain any Christian spirit, and there is not much use——

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield?

Mr. KENYON. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator from Iowa made some facetious reference to some streams about which I happen to know:

Kissimmee, Caloosahatchee, Orange, Anclote, Crystal, Withlacoochee, and Suwanee Rivers, Charlotte Harbor, Sarasota Bay, and Clearwater Harbor and Boca Ceiga Bay, Fla.

For the improvement of all of those rivers the enormous sum of $4,000 is proposed to be appropriated.

Mr. KENYON. I know it.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Kissimmee River is 300 miles long and has a tremendous commerce; the Withlacooche has a big commerce, so has the Caloosahatchee, and also the Suwanee River has a big commerce, and the appropriation for all of them, as I have said, is only $4,000, and that is for maintenance, not a dollar is for improvements.

Mr. KENYON. I know the appropriation is trivial, of course, for many of these rivers; and that is what I have been contending. If they are meritorious, give them a substantial appropriation; if they are not, cut the appropriation out; but that does not seem possible, no matter how much this bill is cut.

You may trim the river and harbor bill as you will,
But the aroma of pork seems to hang 'round it still.

Just now, when we are urged by the Bureau of Public Information to practice economy—if it would not be considered "slumming" to refer to the article of the Creel bureau—is not the time for any kind of expenditure that is not absolutely essential to our war purposes. I am going to ask the Secretary to read a plea for economy from the Defense Council. That is all I shall have to say about the river and harbor bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

UNITED EFFORT FOR ECONOMY URGED UPON ALL AMERICANS.

The Council of National Defense authorizes the following statement:

The Council of National Defense and the advisory commission to the council believe that a concerted effort for economy by the people of the Nation will not only go far toward paying America's expenses in the war but will also reduce consumption of raw and manufactured materials essential to the conduct of the war.

The council urges all to refrain from unnecessary expenditure of every kind and to bear constantly in mind that only one thing is now of real importance, and that is the winning of the war.

The Nation's resources in man power, money, transportation, foodstuffs, raw materials, and fuel have already been subjected to heavy strain, and it is the clear duty of every citizen to guard against increasing this strain by a single wasteful act.

It is most creditable for everyone—man and woman, boy and girl—to be economical in dress, food, and manner of living. Every evidence of helpful self-denial on the part of all in a time like this is most commendable.

This war is more than a conflict between armies; it is a contest in which every man, woman, and child can and should render assistance. Thrift and economy is not only a patriotic privilege; it is a duty.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I can not conceive of any reason why the Senate would vote against the pending amendment to the river and harbor bill. The amendment is for the purpose of carrying out the same principle in the expenditure of the Government's funds during this war as Congress has directed as to the issue of securities and expenditure of money where that money is required to be borrowed from any source by corporations and individuals throughout the country. Scarcely a month ago, Mr. President, there was passed through Congress and there was signed by the President what is known as the war-finance act. In that act a War Finance Board is created. There was also created a Capital Issues Committee, and no securities can be issued exceeding $100,000 unless the Capital Issues Committee approves of it.

That was done, Mr. President, in order that securities from one end of this country to the other should not be thrown on the market, perhaps at rates of interest that would draw money from investors, and thereby indirectly interfere with the prosecution of the war by preventing the purchase or limiting the market for the purchase of Government bonds. This amendment simply provides that wherever there is a project on which there is to be expended more than a hundred thousand dollars for new work it shall not be undertaken unless the Secretary of the Treasury shall state that the Treasury of the United States is in a condition to justify the expenditure. It is exactly what he has the power to do—at least together with the other members of the War Finance Corporation created by Congress to regulate the issuance of securities. They can say that no issue of securities shall be made of any kind of obligations of an individual or a corporation unless sanctioned by the Capital Issues Committee or the War Finance Corporation itself.

There was no strong opposition, Mr. President, made manifest in the Senate to the restriction against building roads throughout the United States; and yet if a road is proposed to be built the cost of which exceeds $100,000 it can not be built unless there is sanction for it granted by the Capital Issues Committee or the War Finance Corporation. The law was specifically drafted to prevent throughout the United States the construction of expensive buildings, expensive homes, and improvements of all sorts that would create heavy demands on the capital of the country, and the building of which would be of no advantage whatever in the prosecution of the war. We all agreed to that principle; there was not a voice raised in the House or in the Senate against it, and the amendment that is offered by the Senator from Wisconsin has the same idea in view.

Mr. President, there was adopted yesterday, without a roll call and with very few Senators present, an amendment known as section 8, which reads as follows:

SEC. 8. That if the Secretary of War shall determine that any of the contracts for work of river and harbor improvements entered into but not completed prior to April 6, 1917, the date of the entrance of the United States into the war with Germany, have become inequitable and unjust on account of increased cost of material and labor and other unforeseen conditions arising out of the war, he is hereby authorized, in his discretion and with the consent of the contractors, to modify and readjust the terms of said contracts in such manner as he may deem equitable and just: Provided, That said modifications and readjustments shall apply only to work under said contracts remaining to be done hereafter and shall not include any relief for work performed heretofore under said contracts, and any such sum as may be necessary to provide for the increased cost of the contracts due to said modifications and readjustments, not exceeding the sum of $2,000,000, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided further, That as a condition of any such contract be so modified, the Secretary of War shall have the right at the end of any fiscal year until the contract is completed to make such further modifications as in his judgment shall be advantageous to the United States and just to the contractor.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, before the Senator comments on that amendment, which has been adopted, to the bill—I did not hear all of it read—I should like to ask him, Does that provision apply to all contracts, or is it limited to such contracts as are necessary in the carrying on of the war?

Mr. SMOOT. It is unlimited; it applies to all contracts entered into for work on rivers and harbors anywhere in the United States; it applies, however, only to work that may be hereafter done; and that feature I desire to discuss.

Mr. President, the amount appropriated named in the amendment is $2,000,000. I presume that amount was named because it was thought that it would go through the Senate with little objection, and perhaps be agreed to by the House, and would cover all that would be claimed by the contractors; but I wish to say now to the Senate that if this amendment becomes a law, whenever the $2,000,000 is expended there will be deficiencies asked for of Congress amounting not merely to $2,000,000 but to many times $2,000,000.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. How can the Senator account for the fact that that amendment was introduced largely at the instance of the Senator from Ohio, and that Senator now has an amendment somewhat along the line of the amendment pending, which will neutralize the whole thing?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I can not account for it, nor shall I try.

Mr. NELSON. But how can the Senator reconcile the two amendments, one an economy amendment and the other an amendment to open the door wide to the contractors?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I very much prefer to have the Senator from Ohio explain that himself. I am not the keeper of his conscience.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I have just sent for the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. SMOOT. I am not the keeper of his conscience, nor do I know what he had in view when he offered the amendment suggested by the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. In case the Senator from Ohio should not return before the Senator concludes, I wish to remind the Senator from Minnesota that this proposition was introduced not by the Senator from Ohio but at a special hearing before the committee by the contractors themselves, and they asked for very much more than this amendment provides.

Mr. SMOOT. I want Senators to stop just a moment and think what this amendment does. It is virtually an invitation to all contractors to pile up costs from now on as high as possible; and no matter how high they may be, all the contractors will have to do under this provision is to ask that they be paid whatever extra cost has been incurred because of conditions existing to-day on account of the war. We have condemned the 10 per cent of cost plus proposition; there is not a Senator or Representative who will dare defend it, but this is not only the 10 per cent of cost plus proposition but it is an unlimited percentage proposition.

Mr. KING. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. KING. If we establish this precedent by legalizing the provisions therein referred to and the conditions that will arise, will not we invite every other contractor in every department and activity of the Government, no matter in what department it is, whether connected with the war or the construction of reclamation projects, or what not, to come to the Government and ask for a modification of his contract and for appropriations to cover the alleged increased expenses, and so forth, to which he has been put?

Mr. SMOOT. There is no doubt about it, Mr. President; and not only that, but I do not see how Congress is going to refuse the request. When the Post Office appropriation bill was under consideration, and there was an amendment under consideration providing for just this sort of change as far as envelopes, the Postal Guide, and the blanks and blank books were concerned, I told the Senate then that if that amendment was adopted I saw no reason why every contractor for everything furnished the Government should not have the same privilege. This is the second step. Why, talk about a 10 per cent increase—under this provision a 100 per cent increase can be claimed, and I do not see how we are going to escape the necessity of paying same.

Talk about $2,000,000! Why, Mr. President, taking all the contracts that the Government has—and I think if this provision is adopted it should apply to all contracts, and will apply to all contracts before we are through with it—I doubt very much whether $20,000,000 will cover the claims that will be made. It is a dangerous proposition, it is unfair to the Government, and it never should be adopted.

We can go on and do this sort of thing, but I want to call attention to the fact that after a while the people will have something to say in relation to such appropriations that are being made. We have been told that the appropriations for the next fiscal year will amount to $31,000,000,000. Do the Senators understand that that amount is equal to the profit of all individuals and all corporations in the United States combined?

I know, of course, that whatever appropriations are necessary the American people are going to meet. If it takes not only all their profits but all they have, all necessary requirements of the Government will be met; but I know that those who are responsible for such unheard-of appropriations, unless the expenditures are scrutinized carefully and closely, and unless all the waste is eliminated, will have to answer to the peope sooner or later. The reckoning will not come while the war is on, because nobody wants to say a word or do a thing that will retard the progress of the war; but it will come after the war, when the people will be called upon to pay the debt. No matter how many billions it takes—I was going to say no matter how many lives it takes—the war must go on. But when bills come here, and an amendment like the one just offered, restricting the expenditure of the public moneys where they amount to over $100,000, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, upon projects that will have nothing whatever to do with the carrying on of the war, is defeated, I think the American people will want to know why.

Mr. President, I am in favor of this amendment. It ought to be adopted, and I sincerely hope it will be. Like the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], I have in the past bitterly criticized the river and harbor bills. I am not opposed to the improvement of our rivers where commerce can be increased. Never have I said aught against the appropriation for the improvement of harbors of our country in which our commerce arrives and departs; but I am opposed to all appropriations for little creeks and streams that in past appropriations have been specifically mentioned and provided for, but in this bill are cleverly covered up in a lump-sum appropriation, with authority to spend as much or more than has been spent in the past in the maintenance of them.

Yesterday the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] wanted to know if there was anyone who wanted to deny appropriations to projects that would stimulate production. Why, Mr. President, if the money that will be spent upon some projects under this appropriation were withheld by the Government, the Government could buy every pound of goods that will be carried upon them, pay for the same, give them to the people to whom they would be shipped, and make a saving over and above the cost.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I should like the Senator to explain why that is, and I should like to know also if the Senator disputes the proposition that water transportation is cheaper than rail transportation. Furthermore, I should like to know whether or not the Senator from Utah is in favor of developing the facilities for water transportation in the United States.

Mr. SMOOT. I have just stated that I am in favor of water transportation upon rivers where commerce can be successfully carried. In answer to the first question that the Senator asks me, as to whether water transportation is cheaper than rail transportation, I may cite him to Germany. The conditions of water transportation in Germany for short routes are as perfect as anywhere in the world, and yet Germany is compelled to enforce rail rates upon her railroads that are higher than water rates, in order to maintain her water transportation. She has also gone so far as to classify the articles that shall be carried by rail and those which shall be carried by water. If it were not that way, the railroads of Germany, if they were owned by individuals, would destroy water transportation.

Mr. President, I am quite aware that this bill is going to become a law, and I want to say that it is the best river and harbor bill—if such a term can be used in connection with any river and harbor bill—that we have had for years and years past; and I want to congratulate the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] upon the fact that I believe, at least, that the fight that has been made upon the past river and harbor bills has resulted in an improvement in this one.

Mr POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. POINDEXTER. From what the Senator says as to water transportation in Germany I infer that he contends that rail transportation is cheaper than water transportation.

Mr. SMOOT. I think it is for short distances.

Mr. POINDEXTER. If the Senator entertains that view, I am at a loss to understand why he says he is in favor of water transportation. I should think he would be in favor of the cheaper system.

Mr. SMOOT. It is only for short distances that it is cheaper. Wherever you have a long route, then of course water transportation is cheaper than rail transportation, and all admit it; but I will say to the Senator that it never will be cheaper on little creeks or small streams with no water during certain periods of the year and whose length from source to mouth is not over 25 miles.

Mr. POINDEXTER. You can not have water transportation on a creek that has no water in it.

Mr. SMOOT. We appropriate for the purpose of encouraging the transportation of commerce upon such creeks. I hope the time will come when we will cease to do it; but it has been done in the past, and I am fearful it will be done in the future.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The waterways in Germany to which the Senator refers have water in them.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, certainly.

Mr. POINDEXTER. And they must be capable of floating boats, or else they could not carry the commerce that the Senator says the Government of Germany requires to be carried on them; and it is that sort of commerce that he says is more expensive in itself, fundamentally, than rail transportation. Now, if the Senator is an advocate of economy, I should think he would follow his judgment in that regard and oppose any system of water transportation.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator knows that nearly all the great waterways on which commerce is carried in Europe are but a few miles in length. I say that wherever there is a short haul, rail transportation can be carried on cheaper than water transportation. Wherever there is a long haul, as, for instance, on the Mississippi River, we will say from Illinois to the mouth, particularly if the cargo is going to Europe, thus obviating the necessity of unloading and reloading, then no doubt it would be cheaper by water.

I believe, Mr. President, we ought to agree upon a project and finish it. If it is not a worthy one, we ought never to begin it; and yet the policy of the United States Government of late has been to spend just enough upon our rivers for maintenance to keep them clear of sandbars, and never with a view of finishing the project.

I believe, Mr. President, that if we undertake a project it ought to be completed just as quickly as possible. It would be cheaper for the Government of the United States to do that than to make these piecemeal appropriations, at least three-fourths of all of which are wasted before the final completion of the project. That has been my position in the past, and I see no reason for changing it.

I simply mention these things with the hope that section 8, which was adopted in the Committee of the Whole, will be disagreed to when the bill reaches the Senate, and also that the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], and now pending, will be adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT].

Mr. LENROOT., On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SHAFROTH (when Mr. THOMAS's name was called). I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. THOMAS] on account of illness.

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. THOMPSON (after having voted in the negative). I am paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN]. I observe that he has not voted. I transfer my pair to the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] and let my vote stand.

Mr. BECKHAM. I wish to state that my colleague [Mr. JAMES] is absent on account of illness. He has a general pair with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS].

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] and vote "nay."

Mr. JONES of Washington. I desire to state that the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] is absent on Red Cross work. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland (after having voted in the negative). When I voted I did not observe that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], with whom I have a general pair, is not present. I therefore transfer my pair to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and let my vote stand.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS];

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS];

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY];

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED];

The Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY];

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN];

The Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON];

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT]; and

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS].

The result was announced—yeas 24, nays 28, as follows:

So Mr. LENROOT's amendment was rejected.

Mr. HARDING obtained the floor.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. HARDING. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to give notice that when the bill reaches the Senate I shall ask for a separate vote upon section 8.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President, I rise to address myself for a moment to the amendment which I suggested in committee and mean to call to the attention of the Senate at this time. Before doing so I want to correct a statement made by the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], inadvertently, no doubt, as to the sponsorship for the amendment to the bill relating to the modification of contracts. I was not present in the Chamber at the time, but I understand the senior Senator from Minnesota gave me the sponsorship for the introduction of the amendment, which is not the fact at all. That statement probably grew out of the fact that the amendment was requested by a number of contractors in dam construction on the Ohio River. I had no more to do with the amendment than any other member of the committee, save that I protested very strongly against any retroactive relief, though I am frank to say that on the recommendation of the Army engineers I think it would be very fair on the part of the Government to extend some needed relief rather than bring about a run of bankruptcy among contractors who have been acting in perfect good faith.

The amendment to which I would call the attention of the Senate is one designed to modify the operation of the bill without striking at any specific improvement. It is not a very agreeable task to be a knocker and it is not my disposition to single out improvements here or there in the country to offer a protest, but I have designed in presenting this amendment to curtail the expenditures under the present bill to actual needs for furthering our efficiency in time of war.

I am very well aware, Mr. President and Senators, that there is not an item in the bill which is not alleged to be a war necessity. I have no quarrel with anyone who is ready to accept that argument, but it is one that can not be maintained. There are improvements in the bill urged as war measures which will be from two to five years in the process of completion. It is possible, as has been suggested by the distinguished Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL], that we may be at war for four or five years to come. If that be true, we will be very much more busily engaged looking after enterprises directly concerned with the war than with promoting river transportation in this country.

Mr. President, the amendment is not designed as a measure of economy. I quite agree with all that the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] has said on the necessity for economy, but I think I am wise enough in this day and generation to know that a man who talks about economy in a $20,000,000 bill is talking to the breezes of Maytime and wastes his breath, though I think it would be an encouraging thing to the country to see an indication in Congress of a desire to minimize expenditures.

The amendment, however, is designed to show some degree of consistency on the part of the Federal Government. It provides, in short, that no specifically new work shall be undertaken except that the engineers of the War Department or the Secretary of War shall directly certify that the enterprise is a war necessity. I am willing to pass that judgment up to the experts who are familiar with the subject. I am perfectly aware that obliging engineers will make a favorable report on any project which is to be presented to the committee; there is always some excuse for having the work looked into and oftimes rather convincing reasons for undertaking it; but when you do ask responsible authorities to pass specifically upon a measure as a war necessity, it is quite another thing.

There is not an item in the bill which can not be proceeded with under this amendment if there is such a certification. Then, apart from that certification, there is a provision in the amendment that any work may go on providing the work in question can be prosecuted at an expense not exceeding 30 per cent additional over the cost in April, 1917.

These figures or percentages were arrived at after a patient hearing on the part of the committee. Those who take the trouble to read the record of the hearings will find that the engineer who sat with the committee testified again and again that work could be continued at a probable increase of cost not exceeding 30 per cent. So I have taken the engineer at his word and provided that any single improvement provided for in this bill can go on without a certification as a war necessity if the work can be done at not exceeding 30 per cent cost over the figures prevailing last year.

Mr. President, there is good reason for these provisions. The Federal Government ought to be consistent. In my own city less than three weeks ago a Government agent put his veto on the resurfacing of the principal street in a municipality of 30,000. The satisfactory use of that principal street is ten times more essential to current commerce than a dozen of the smaller river improvements in this bill; but because $100,000 was involved an agent of the Government said it is not wise to make this public expenditure at this time, though the people were taxing themselves directly for the enterprise. The Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] asks me what agent. I assume he was an agent of the War Finance Corporation or the Capital Issues Committee of the War Finance Corporation. At the same time a new hotel project in the same city was in contemplation, and the financing of the enterprise necessitated a bond issue of $100,000. That bond issue came under the provisions of the War Finance Corporation act, and the same Government agent said, "It will not do to go on with this enterprise involving this issue of bonds," and the hotel project, wholly concerning private enterprise, received the veto of a Government agent. I am inclined to think that the Government agent was wise about it. I think in these times of enormous taxation and need for the financial resources of the country on every hand for war purposes it was a perfectly feasible thing to discourage these expenditures. But it is not consistent, Senators, to discourage these enterprises on the one hand and go on with unlimited, unnecessary Federal expenditures on the other hand.

I challenge my Senator on this floor to answer the argument, because in this amendment there is a provision that any measure which is certified as a war necessity may go on regardless of the increase of cost, and any measure which is not a war necessity can go on without interference if the cost does not exceed 30 per cent over last year. I say to you, Mr. President, there is not a Senator to rise on this floor and dispute the argument. Then, in the name of consistency and ordinary common sense, why not put this balance wheel on these improvements as an indication to the taxpayers of the United States that even in a $20,000,000 appropriation we are content to place these perfectly rational limitations?

Mr. President, I am not disposed to go into an argument as to the necessity of these improvements, but I have taken the position I have because it is a disinterested one. The largest single appropriation in this bill is for the Ohio River. Very naturally one representing the State of Ohio is interested in a water improvement that concerns a water course that borders two or three hundred miles of that State, and I have abundant confidence that some day the Ohio River will be made a great waterway off commerce; but the man who urges the continuation of the construction of the Ohio River dams as a war measure talks without a reckoning of the facts.

If I can say it without having subjected myself to the criticism of opposing an improvement in which I am interested as a citizen of Ohio, I want to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that, notwithstanding the enormous expenditures on the Ohio River under a very comprehensive plan of improvements to establish a 9-foot stage of water, with the construction of some 30 dams already, the traffic on the Ohio River has decreased in 15 years from 12,000,000 tons to 8,000,000 tons. I am very much inclined to believe that the maximum commerce can be restored. It certainly can on that waterway if it can be done on any waterway in the United States.

I only speak of this diminution to show that it is a very difficult thing to make an argument in favor of continuing any sort of river work other than that of maintaining an open channel which naturally exists as a relief in this urgent time of war.

Mr. President, the amendment is so constructed that wherever an improvement is under way and it is necessary to continue that improvement to protect the expenditure already made, it may go on regardless of cost. No one would be foolish enough to offer an amendment proposing to discontinue work on a dam costing a million and a half dollars in process of construction, when the suspension of work would result in the loss of the expenditure already made. Nor would anyone have the ill judgment to propose to stop the opening of a channel that is largely completed and the suspension of which would lead to the filling in of sand bars again. None of that is interfered with. The amendment does not strike out any specific appropriation in the bill.

There has been much discussion relating to this bill, having to do particularly with the Charleston Harbor project.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FALL in the chair). Does the junior Senator from Ohio yield to his colleague?

Mr. HARDING. Certainly.

Mr. POMERENE. If my colleague will permit me, I desire to call his attention to one provision in the amendment which he submits. In the proviso of the amendment is this language:

That this restriction shall not apply to the contracting, undertaking, or prosecution of any river or harbor work herein authorized in case the Chief of Engineers or Secretary of War believes said work to be necessary as a war measure.

As the amendment is drawn it would permit this work to go on if either of these officials should approve it. I think that is a mistake, because it might be possible that the one would approve and the other disapprove. My suggestion is that it would be much better to strike out the provision for approval by the Chief of Engineers, and leave it to the approval of the Secretary of War, or if it is preferred that it should be subject to a decision by the Chief of Engineers, then to so provide. I can, however, see, as the amendment is now phrased, that it might lead to some embarrassment.

Mr. HARDING. Well, Mr. President, I am glad to have the suggestion of my colleague, and I should have no objection to the modification which he proposes, though it is inconceivable to me that there could be any disagreement between the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers, because the Chief of Engineers would be the source of information which the Secretary of War would seek in passing upon any of these questions. I think perhaps it would be a little more consistent to leave the authority solely in the hands of the Secretary of War, and if my colleague desires it I have no objection to modifying the proposed amendment to that effect.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield further to his colleague?

Mr. HARDING. Certainly.

Mr. POMERENE. With all due respect to my colleague, I desire to say that it does seem to me that it would be very much better to leave it to the Secretary of War, for I can understand how certain people who might be interested in one direction might appeal to the one, and others who might be interested in another way might appeal to the other. Of course, I agree with my colleague that the chances are that these two authorities would get together and determine upon something so that there would not be any conflict as between the views of the two.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President, I appreciate the interest and the confirmatory attitude of my colleague, but I think we are both wasting our time in discussing a modification of the amendment, because I can do nothing else than assume that it is to receive the very cordial disapproval of those who favor the enactment of the bill without any limitation. I have, however, presented the amendment in perfect good faith. I argued for its adoption before the committee, and I felt I should be remiss in the performance of my duty if I did not renew the offering of the amendment on the floor of the Senate.

In substance, the amendment does nothing more than say to the people of this country that while Congress favors the improvements proposed in the bill, Congress is willing to limit the continuation of them to those which are certified as war necessities. I should be the last man on the floor of this Senate to oppose the appropriation of five or ten or even fifty million dollars for any project which the War Department is willing to certify as being a necessity for the successful conduct of the war or for the marshaling of our industrial resources to make us more efficient in the war; but it seems to me, Mr. President, the most inconsistent, the most inexcusable, the most unjustifiable attitude the Senate can possibly take to go on expending millions of Federal money at this particular time on improvements which have no more to do with the successful conduct of the war than a combination of the Senate pages would have to do with the conduct of the war. So, Mr. President, I should like to have the Secretary state the amendment to the Senate, and I want the decision of this body as to its adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed by Mr. HARDING to add at the end of the new bill a new section, as follows:

SEC. —. That no part of the funds herein appropriated shall be expended in prosecuting any improvement work not heretofore contracted or in any continuing improvement work other than the completion of such individual docks, dams, or other works where completion is necessary to protect the expenditure already made, whether under private contract or Government operation, unless any such new work in the aggregate cost shall not be more than 30 per cent in excess of the cost of doing similar work prior to April 1, 1917: Provided, however, That this restriction shall not apply to the contracting, undertaking, or prosecution of any river or harbor work herein authorized in case the Chief of Engineers or Secretary of War believes said work to be necessary as a war measure.

Concerning such new work as is contracted or prosecuted as a war necessity, as provided herein, the Chief of Engineers or the Secretary of War shall report to Congress at its next session the war necessity because of which the improvement is made.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President, in compliance with the suggestion of my colleague, I modify the amendment by striking out the words "Chief of Engineers or," in line 13, page 1, and also striking out the words "Chief of Engineers or," in line 5, on page 2, so that the amendment will read:

In case the Secretary of War believes said work to be necessary as a war measure.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I presume there is a misprint of the bill in line 4, page 1, and that the word "docks" in that line should be "locks."

Mr. HARDING. Yes; the word should be "locks."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That modification of the amendment will be made.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, just a word in reference to this amendment. I presume it would be utterly impossible to frame a river and harbor bill which would meet with universal acceptance. We have done everything we could in this bill to have it conform to the views of those who in the past have taken the position that the river and harbor bill was a pork-barrel proposition, a useless extravagance, and that sort of thing. The bill was framed upon a certain policy and principle. As it came from the House every item in it was cut to the bone. There is not an item in the bill that was not certified to by the Secretary of War as being an emergency matter or as coming within the absolute needs of the country as to these improvements.

There are important things in connection with the war besides the furnishing of men, guns, shot, and shell. There are three important features that must be kept in mind: First, men; second, munitions; and third, transportation. There is no use to have men and there is no use to have munitions unless you can also move them. The problem of transportation is one of the most vital and important with which we have to deal. It is particularly acute now because of the congestion on the railroads.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield, although I am going to be very brief.

Mr. HARDING. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee if it is not a fact that the amendment provides that if an improvement is certified as a war necessity it may go on regardless of cost?

Mr. FLETCHER. I appreciate that, and I will get to that in a moment.

Now, referring to the policy back of the bill as it was reported by the Rivers and Harbors Committee to the House, the report shows:

The bill makes appropriations for the maintenance of projects heretofore completed, including the maintenance of projects under improvement. It contains appropriations for the further improvement of projects heretofore adopted.

The projects are certified to by the Chief of Engineers as expenditures required during this fiscal year and as amounts that can be profitably expended. The report continues:

In this connection it may be stated that the estimates have been carefully considered in view of all the existing conditions. Among these conditions are the existence of a state of war, the high cost of all materials, and the scarcity and high cost of labor. All of these are recognized as inducements to economy and not only enter into the estimates of the Chief of Engineers but were carefully weighed by the committee in recommending the appropriations contained in the bill.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. FLETCHER. I do.

Mr. HARDING. I have no desire to have a controversy with the distinguished chairman of the committee, but I wish to ask him to state to the Senate if it is not a fact that the Chief of Engineers, in testifying before the committee, repeatedly said that the suspension of work would only have the effect of delaying the project?

Mr. FLETCHER. Well, to be more nearly correct, I think it should be said that in some instances that would be the case, while in other instances there would be waste and depreciation of the project, work on which had been advanced; there would be a loss incurred by discontinuing the work; and not only would there be delay but there would be depreciation by reason of discontinuing it in some instances. The report further shows:

There are no continuing-contract authorizations in the bill.

There are absolutely none; and, for the life of me, I am unable to see how any man, no matter how much opposed he has been in the past to river and harbor bills and appropriations for the improvement of these highways of commerce, can object to this bill. It is impossible to frame a bill that will meet the objections of gentlemen who find objections to this bill.

There are no continuing-contract authorizations in the bill. There are no new projects in the bill requiring cash appropriations or involving future obligations which are not intimately associated with the prosecution of the war, and constituting war exigencies, and so recommended by the Secretary of War.

Let that be understood by everybody; that is the basis upon which this bill was framed in the other House; it is the basis upon which the House acted and passed the bill; it is the basis on which it came to the Senate; and it is the basis upon which the Commerce Committee reports it to the Senate. We have declined to provide for surveys or to add amendments for the development of projects which have already been approved by the engineers or anything of that sort; we have kept it right down to that policy and that principle upon which the bill was introduced as a war-emergency proposition.

Now, there is no use, it seems to me, to hamper and hobble the engineers in carrying out the work authorized by this bill. Already they have discretion to the extent that they are supposed not to let a contract which does not come within reason, where the prices charged are exorbitant, or where, in all reason, the project can wait.

They already have that discretion, and there is no need to dictate to them and say: "You must find out before you undertake the work authorized by this bill or before you go on with the work authorized by this bill that the aggregate cost will not exceed 30 per cent of what it would cost a year ago." That simply is a restriction, a limitation, and an interference with that sound judgment and discretion which the engineers have exercised in the past and which we authorize them to exercise now in connection with this bill. It simply means delay and interference with the carrying out of these works which are declared by Congress to be essential at this time, all conditions considered. It might be that a project would cost, say, 32 per cent more than it would have cost a year ago; that is all very largely a matter of judgment and calculation; but before the work can go on the engineers must go back and ascertain the cost of material, the prices of labor, and every element entering into the cost of carrying on that work a year ago, and then ascertain the situation to-day. Then, if it will cost more than 30 per cent the engineers must say: "We can not do that work or any part of it." That, it seems to me, is not a restriction or limitation that we ought to impose upon the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War in carrying out the work authorized and provided for in this bill.
